Putta Chelamiah and another—Appellants.

v.

Venkata Kumara Mahipati Suryarao Bahadur Garu and another — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 1255 of 1925, Decided on 29th August 1929, against decree of Sub-Judge, Cocanada, in A. S. No. 182 of 1924.

(a) Registration Act, S. 17 (1) (b)—Relinquishment of ryoti land by tenant to his landlord need not be evidenced by registered deed.

A tenant, holding ryoti land, can relinquish any portion of it in favour of his landlord. Such an arrangement does not require to be evidenced by any writing, much less does it require registration for its validity. [P 2 C 2]

 (b) Transfer of Property Act, S. 118—Exchange—To invoke aid of part performance in exchange, writing is not preliminary condition—Part performance.

Writing is not a necessary preliminary condition before the doctrine of part performance could be invoked. That being so, the absence of any writing in connexion with a ryoti land exchange is not a valid objection. [P 3 C 1]

(c) Madras Estates Land Act, Ss. 164, 173 and 179—Ryot as such mentioned in respect of particular holding in Record-of-Rights need not institute suit under Ss. 173 and 179.

The scheme of Chap. 11 would seem to show that where a ryot is only mentioned as a ryot in respect of a particular holding in the Record-of-Rights, no suit need be instituted under Ss. 173 and 179, on pain of the party being unable to agitate that question further. [P 4 C 1]

(d) Madras Estates Land Act, S. 167 (3)—Entries are not conclusive but shall be evidence and their correctness shall be presumed.

Section 167 (3) does not declare that any entries in the Record-of-Rights mentioned therein shall be conclusive and that the correctness of the same should not be contested unless a suit is filed. It only says that the Record-of-Rights shall be evidence and its correctness shall bs presumed : A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 210 and A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 845, Ref. [P 4 C 1]

Judgment.—In this case the plaintiff is the appellant before me. He instituted the original suit to recover possession of three acres and odd of land alleged to be included in his holding as a ryot under the defendant, the Maharajah of Pithapuram. His case is that the defendant encroached upon the suit three acres and odd, which were in the plaintiff's possession, for the purpose of constructing bungalows for the estate officials. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant promised to give him about 14 acres of another land called Bangaru Doddi but that the defendant did not do so, and consequently the present suit was instituted within 12 years from the date of trespass by the defendant. The plea of the defendant was that the plaintiff relinquished the suit lands in his favour and that in consideration thereof he (the defendant) gave the plaintiff an equal extent out of Bangaru Doddi land to be held as ryoti land and also agreed to give the plaintiff the remaining ten acres of Bangaru Doddi land as ordinary tenant to be in possession for the time being as the Maharajah's tenant, and that really there was an exchange between the plaintiff and the defendant, the plaintiff getting three acres of the Bangaru Doddi land and the defendant getting the three acres in suit out of the ryoti land in the possession of the plaintiff. The defendant also raised the plea that very costly buildings said to be worth about a lakh of rupees have been raised on the property in suit, and it was because the plaintiff was evicted by a decree of Court in connexion with the ten acres of Bangaru Doddi land of which he was given possession as ordinary tenant that the present suit was instituted by him to spite the defendant. The first three issues raised in the suit were as follows :

"1. Whether the plaintiff has relinquished the suit holding as alleged ?

2. Whether the plaintiff is estopped from denying the defendant's title ?

3. Whether the defendant acquired a valid and binding title in the suit land ?"

The District Munsif held that the defendant's case was not proved, but having regard to the fact that the defendant had put up costly buildings on the plaintiff's site and the plaintiff was aware of that and allowed the construction to proceed, the equities of the case could be best worked out by directing the defendant to pay the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 1,590. Accordingly, he gave the plaintiff a decree for that amount, and dismissed his suit for possession of the land. Before I leave the Munsif's judgment, I think it proper to remark that though the above three issues were framed in the case and though a lot of evidence was adduced, the District Munsif disposed of the three issues in a single paragraph—para. 6—without discussing the evidence. After writing a few sentences, the District Munsif ends the paragraph as follows: "I find the first three issues against defendant." The judgment is very unsatisfactory. The District Munsif ought to have discussed the evidence in respect of each issue and recorded his finding thereon.

As could be expected, neither party was satisfied with such a decree. The defendant preferred an appeal against the decree directing him to pay Rs. 1,590 to the plaintiff. The plaintiff was not satisfied with the money ; he wanted his land. So there was an appeal by the defendant and a memorandum of objections filed by the plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge framed the first point for decision before him as follows :

"Whether the exchange relied on by the defendant (appellant) is true, valid and binding in law ?"

He came to the conclusion that there was an exchange of the suit land for the three acres and odd of Bangaru Doddi land. Having found that there was this exchange, he came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had no title to the suit land and reversed the decision of the first Court and dismissed the suit.

In this second appeal preferred by the plaintiff, his learned advocate first complained that the lower appellate Court was not right in discussing this question of exchange. He pointed out that issue 1 raised in the case is whether there was any relinquishment and not whether there was any exchange. With reference to this point, there is the written statement of the defendant printed at p. 1 of the pleadings—para. 4 of which says :

"What is known as Bangaru Doddi is acres 13-76 in extent. As the plaintiff wanted that he should be given another land separately inasmuch as he lost the land taken up for bungalows, the plaintiff was permanently given acres 3-18 of land out of Bangaru Doddi with a cist of Rs. 47 and odd. Pattas and muchilikas were exchanged in the said manner between the plaintiff and the defendants."

The substance of that plea is that the plaintiff gave the Maharajah three and odd acres of the suit ryoti land and the Maharajah gave plaintiff 3 and odd acres of the Bangaru Doddi land. In substance it is exchange. Though the word does not appear in the written statement, I think there can be little doubt that that was what the parties understood. Even in the judgment of the learned District Munsif, in para. 6 I have already adverted to, the first sentence is this :

"The exchange and surrender are not evidenced by any registered document."

Therefore I consider that the plea raised by the learned advocate for the appellant, namely, that no question of exchange was really raised but only a question of relinquishment, is not substantially correct.

Further, even if it is a question of relinquishment it does not really matter. The case of the plaintiff is that the suit land was his ryoti land, and it is therefore open to him to relinquish any portion of the ryoti land in favour of his landholder, the defendant. Such an arrangement does not require to be evidenced by any writing ; much less does it require registration for its validity. That being so, the fact that the word "exchange" was not used in the written statement does not really work to the prejudice of the defendant in this particular case.

On the merits, I think the circumstances mentioned by the lower appellate Court are very strong and I do not see any grounds on which I can interfere. In the first place, it points out that in the old muchilikas executed by the plaintiff the extent of the land held by the plaintiff in the suit locality is mentioned by him as 45 acres and odd. After this exchange or relinquishment of 1909, the subsequent muchilikas executed by the plaintiff mention the extent of his land as 41 acres and odd, the difference being accounted for by three acres and odd having been delivered over to the Maharajah, the Maharajah giving the plaintiff in exchange patta in respect of three acres and odd of the Bangaru Doddi land. The plaintiff executed a mortgage in respect of his other lands situated near the suit land. In that he specifically refers to the remaining land (mentioning the extent in his possession after deducting the three and odd acres taken by the zamindar for the purpose of building bungalows). Finally in his deposition also he admitted that when he was given pattas for the land, ordinary seri pattah was given in respect of the three acres and odd of Bangaru Doddi land and ordinary pattah as given to an ordinary tenant, and not pattah as given to a ryot, was given in respect of the remaining land. It is unnecessary for me to go into the details or into the reasons given by the lower appellate Court for upholding the defendant's contention. There is plenty of evidence on which the Subordinate Judge could have come to the conclusion he has come to and I think that his conclusion on the merits of the case must be accepted by me.

The further point that was raised by the learned advocate for the appellant was that if it is a case of exchange, the theory of the doctrine of part performance could not be invoked in the absence of some writing, though there need not be any writing registered. However, he himself quite properly admitted that according to the decisions of this Court, such writing is not a necessary preliminary condition before the doctrine of part performance could be invoked. That being so, I am bound by those decisions and the absence of any writing in connexion with this exchange is not a valid objection.

The last argument raised by the learned advocate for the appellant was this. There is the provision of the Estates Land Act, Chap. II, under which entries in Record-of-Rights prepared under the Act are conclusive and final unless suits be filed within the time limited by the provisions of the Act. The facts necessary to appreciate this argument are these. The exchange or the relinquishment in question in the present case took place in 1909 or in 1910. It is admitted that there was a Record-of-Rights prepared in connexion with this village of the defendant zamindar, and that the plaintiff is recorded as a ryot in respect of the suit three acres also along with the other 41 acres which he has got in this suit locality. It was therefore argued that the Record-of-Rights is final and the entries therein could not be called in question unless a suit had been filed within the time specified in Ss. 173 and 179 of the Act. I called upon the learned Advocate General to answer the appellant's case only with reference to this argument based upon the Record-of-Rights. To this the learned Advocate General argued that a distinction must be made between the Record-of-Rights contemplated by S. 165 and the settlement of rents.

The Record-of-Rights is a procedure under which the different rights that exist between the landholder and the tenant relating to the holding are recorded and any other rights lawfully incident to the holding are also recorded. All that is done in a summary sort of way and the record so prepared is published. It is after the publication of the Record-of-Rights, that is, the record of existing rights, that any question relating to the settlement of rents arises. With reference to the settlement of rents, enquiries are made and when the particular matters contemplated by S. 165 are setled, the prior Record-of-Rights would be modified by the insertion of the new rights ascertained between the parties relating to the rents. S. 173 only declares that any person aggrieved by an entry in a settlement record prepared under Ss. 168 to 171 and incorporated in a Record-of-Rights finally published under sub-S. (3), S. 170, or by an omission to settle a rent, may institute a suit in the civil Court which would have jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the possession of the land to which the entry relates or in respect of which the omission was made. It should be noted that the reference is to the entries in the settlement record, and not the original Record-of-Rights. No doubt, the settlement record would be incorporated in the original Record-of-Rights, but it is only with reference to the settlement record that this particular contemplated suit is mentioned, with the penalty attached for the non-institution of the suit. As regards the argument based on S. 173, S. 179 says that no suit shall be brought in any civil Court in respect of any order directing the preparation of a Record-of-Rights under this chapter or in respect of the framing, publication, signing or attestation of such a record or any part of it, or, save as provided in S. 173, for the alteration of any entry in such a record of a rent settled under Ss. 168 to 172. Thus, if it is intended to call in question any order directing the preparation of a Record-of-Rights, a suit would have to be instituted. That is all with reference to the Record-of-Rights. The subsequent portion relates only to record of rents settled under the settlement of rents, which should be impugned by proper suit. That being so, the scheme of Chap. 11, Estates Land Act would seem to show that in cases like the present where a ryot is only mentioned as a ryot in respect of a particular holding in the Record-of-Rights, no suit need be instituted under Ss. 173 and 179, on pain of the party being unable to agitate that question further. Finally in S. 167 (3) which is the section that directly relates to the Record-of-Rights, the only provision made is this :

"Every entry in a Record-of-Rights so published shall be evidence of the matter referred to in such entry and shall be presumed to be correct until the contrary is proved."

This does not declare that any entries in the Record-of-Rights mentioned therein shall be conclusive and that the correctness of the same should not be contested unless a suit is filed. It only says that the Record-of-Rights shall be evidence and its correctness shall be presumed. In the particular case before me, the lower appellate Court has considered this to be presumptive evidence, and having regard to the other evidence, thought it proper to attach such importance to it as it thought fit.

The learned Advocate General quoted also one or two decisions under the Bengal Tenancy Act to support his contention. He stated that substantially the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act relating to the provisions under discussion are the same, as the provisions in the Madras Estates Land Act. The first case is that reported in Kiran Chandra v. Srinath Chakravarthy (1). I think that case supports the line of argument adopted by him before me : see also the case in Beecharam v. Purna (2), at p. 468 (of 41 C. L. J.) referred to by him.

I put the question to the learned advocate for the appellant whether he would not have to go to this extent if his contention be correct, namely, if in the present case his client had sold in 1911 by a registered document the particular land in suit to somebody for proper consideration but the vendee did not take proper steps to see that the Record-of-Rights was corrected by having his name inserted instead of the vendor's namely the plaintiff's, and if he files a suit for recovery of possession or the question of ownership arises in some other proceedings, whether according to his contention he would be prepared to say that unless the vendee filed a suit and had the Record-of-Rights rectified, the vendee could not enforce his rights as owner. Obviously, the learned advocate was under difficulty to answer this question. It seems he must go to that extent, and say that the vendee in the case put, would practically be in the same position as the Maharajah in the present case, if his contention is right.

For the reasons given above, I think the lower appellate Court was right in its conclusion and that the suit was properly dismissed. The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 10 of 1926, Decided on 27th August 1929, against decree of Sub-Judge, Tiruvarur, in Appeal Suit No. 1 of 1925.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 64—Judgment-creditor has no charge on mortgage amount by reason of his attachment—More than one creditor attaching same mortgage amount — Court cannot give to one of them charge at expense of other creditors.

A judgment-creditor has no charge on the mortgage amount by reason of his attachment; and a Court cannot properly give him such a charge at the expense of other creditors of the common judgment-debtor, who in execution of their decrees also attached the mortgage amounts, and had the same realized, or who applied for execution for their decrees before the fund in Court was allotted and earmarked to any particular decree-holder : 25 Cal. 179; *A. (b) Civil P. C., O. 40, R. 1—Receiver is not agent of judgment-creditor in execution of whose decree he is appointed—Moneys realized by receiver do not become money belonging to judgment-creditor—Civil P. C., S. 51.

It cannot be said that a receiver is the agent of a judgment-creditor in execution of whose decree he is appointed; nor can it be said that the moneys realized by the receiver become ipso facto moneys belonging to the judgment-creditor, and, as moneys paid to the credit of the judgment-creditor's suit the moment the receiver comes into possession of the same : 17 Mad. 501 and 20 Mad. 224 (F.B.), Rel. on. [P 8 C 2]

(c) Civil P. C., S. 51—Receiver appointed by Court is appointed for all persons interested—Moneys in hands of receiver cannot be spent without orders from Court.

A receiver appointed by the Court is appointed on behalf and for the benefit of all persons interested, as parties to the suit or proceeding. Moneys in the hands of the receiver belong to the Court which appointed him and are in custodia legis, and he cannot spend them except under the orders of the Court : In re, Dickinson Ex parte Charrington & Co., 22 Q. B. D. 187 and In re, Potts Ex parte Taylor, (1893) 1 Q. B. 648 Ref. [P 9 C 1]

(d) Civil P. C., S. 51—Judgment-creditor's position is not improved by appointment of receiver in execution instead of attachment and sale.

A judgment-creditor's position is not in any way improved by the fact that the Court ordered execution of his decrees by appointment of a receiver, and not by attachment and sale of judgment-debtor's property : A. I. R. 1921 Mad. 218 (F. B.) and A. I. R. 1923 Mad. 505 (F. B.), Rel. on. [P 10 C 2]

(e) Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 52—Two or more judgment-creditors can attach same property —Property in custody of Court can be attached—Property in hands of receiver can be attached after getting permission of Court—Civil P. C., O. 40, R. 8.

The circumstance that one decree-holder has attached certain properties of the judgment-debtor is by itself not a ground for preventing another decree-holder of the same judgment-debtor from attaching the same property. Under O. 21, R. 52, property in the custody of any Court could be attached. Similarly property over which a receiver has been appointed could also be attached, assuming that the permission of the Court should be necessary before such attachment, in the same way as permission of the Court is necessary to file a suit against a receiver. [P 11 C 1]

(f) Civil P. C., S. 73—Property once attached need not be attached again—All attaching decree-holders are entitled to rateable distribution.

In a case where out of many decree-holders, each competent to execute his decree by attachment and sale of a particular property, one has attached it, it is not necessary that the other decree-holders should again attach the same property; and in such a case all the decree-holders are entitled to claim rateable distribution : 23 All. 106, Foll. [P 11 C 2]

(g) Civil P. C., S. 51—Receiver appointed in execution proceedings — Other decree-holders need not apply for appointment of receiver of same property.

When once a receiver has been appointed to realize properties in execution proceedings, the other decree-holders need not again apply for the appointment of a receiver over the same properties in execution of their decrees also. [P 11 C 2]

(h) Civil P. C., S. 73—Judgment-creditor applying for execution before Court passed orders under S. 73—He is entitled to rateable distribution with others.

Where it is admitted that the third judgment-creditor applied for execution before any order was passed transferring or appropriating the fund or any portion thereof to the decree obtained by the first judgment-creditor, the third judgment-creditor is entitled to rateable distribution along with the other two. Judgment.—This second appeal raises a question of some importance under S. 73, Civil P. C.

The plaintiff is the appellant in the second appeal. Defendant 2, Govindasami obtained a money decree in O. S. No. 373 of 1914 on the file of the Tiruvarur District Munsif's Court and had the decree transferred to the District Munsif's Court, Tiruthuraipundi for execution by the attachment of a mortgage debt due to the judgment-debtor (Namasivayam Chetty) by Veerappa Thevan on a hypothecation deed. The mortgage-debt was attached, and Govindasami himself (Defendant 2) was appointed receiver to collect the attached debt. The terms of the order of appointment of the receiver are important : see Ex. B dated 29th April 1916 :

" I appoint the petitioner as receiver to collect the debt as prayed for. He should pay the realized debt into Court and take out the realized sum after taking the further orders of the Court."

The receiver filed O. S. No. 259 of 1917 on the file of the Tiruthuraipundi District Munsif's Court to recover the money due on the mortgage bond, got a final decree on 8th August 1921 and took out execution of the decree by E. P. No. 445 of 1921 on 5th November 1921. The execution petition was, however, dismissed on 5th April 1922.

Defendant 1, Thandavaraya got a money decree against Namasivaya Chetty in O. S. No. 372 of 1914 (Tiruvarur District Munsif's Court), on 14th November 1914. He attached on 10th July 1922, the decree in O. S. No. 259 of 1917. After attachment he applied in the District Munsif's Court of Tiruthuraipundi by E. P. No. 301 of 1922 for execution of the decree in O. S. No. 259 of 1917. The full decree amount of O. S. No. 259 of 1917 was paid into the Tiruthuraipundi District Munsif's Court on 6th October 1922.

Natesa Pillai, the appellant in the second appeal, got a money decree against Namasivaya Chetty in O. S. No. 30 of 1916 on the file of the Tiruvarur District Munsif's Court and attached on 9th November 1922 (the amount in Court in O. S. No. 269 of 1917) by a precept from the Tiruvarur Court and got his decree transferred for execution to the Tiruthuraipundi District Munsif's Court on 12th December 1922. Natesa Pillai applied by E. A. No. 813 of 1922 to the District Munsif of Tiruthuraipundi for rateable share in the amount in Court, being the decree amount in suit O. S. No. 259 of 1917.

Accordingly the District Munsif of Tiruthuraipundi had to consider the rights of ;

(a) Govindasami, the decree-holder in O. S. 373 of 1914.

(b) the rights of Thandavaraya, the decree-holder in O. S. No. 372 of 1914, and

(c) the rights of Natesa Pillai, the decree-holder in O. S. No. 30 of 1916.

Govindasami claimed the whole of the amount in Court; whereas Thandavaraya claimed rateable distribution, as also Natesa Pillai. The District Munsif of Tiruthuraipundi passed an order (Ex. F) on 22nd December 1922 to the effect that the amount in Court should be distributed among Govindasami and Thandavaraya rateably, but that Natesa Pillai was not entitled to share in the same. This is what he said :

"The attachment in E. A. No. 813 of 1922 (Natesa Pillai's) has been made after the money was deposited in Court; E. A. No. 813 of 1922 is dismissed. From the amount realized, deduct the costs of the suit (O. S. 259 of 1917): and in the balance allow rateable distribution between Govindasami and Thandavaraya."

Natesa Pillai filed the present suit (O. S. No. 14 of 1923), on the file of the Tiruthuraipundi District Munsif's Court against Thandavaraya (defendant 1) and Govindasami (defendant 2), under S. 73, Civil P. C., to compel the defendants to refund a portion of the assets to the plaintiff, on the ground that all the three persons (plaintiff, defendant 1 and defendant 2) were entitled to rateable share in the amount of the decree in O. S. No. 259 of 1917 in Court, and that defendants 1 and 2 were not entitled to share the same to the exclusion of the plaintiff.

The District Munsif (who was the successor in office of the Munsif who passed orders on 22nd December 1922 Ex. F) held that all the three (plaintiff, defendant 1 and defendant 2) were entitled to share rateably the fund in Court.

Defendant 2 preferred an appeal against the District Munsif's decision and the learned Subordinate Judge of Tiruvarur reversed the District Munsif's decree and dismissed the suit of Natesa Pillai. His reasoning is contained in para. 5 of his judgment. He said :

"When money in the custody of a Court in one suit is attached in execution of a decree in another suit, it does not become assets in the latter suit within the meaning of S. 73, Civil P. C., unless and until it is ordered to be transferred to it from the former. There is no difficulty in applying this rule where the suit in which money is in deposit and the suit in which it is attached are distinct and separate and have no connexion with each other. But this is not such a case. In this case O. S. 259 of 1917, in which the money was in deposit in Court was a suit filed by defendant 2 in his capacity as the receiver appointed for the realization of the mortgage debt attached by him in execution of his own decree. It is contended for defendant 2, that O. S. 259 of 1917, though in form a regular suit, was in substance a continuation of the execution proceeding in his own decree; and no transfer of the amount deposited in that suit was, therefore, necessary to make it available for him towards his decree. The argument is, in other words, that the money paid in O. S. No. 259 of 1917 was not merely a deposit made in that suit, but must also be considered to be a deposit made in execution of defendant 2's own decree in O. S. No. 373 of 1914, on the same date, and the principle of the decisions quoted by the District Munsif is accordingly inapplicable to this case. I am of opinion that this contention is valid and that the assets must be considered to have been received by the Court in O. S. No. 373 of 1914 also on the date on which they were paid and received in O. S. No. 259 of 1917, to the credit of the plaintiff therein, who was no other than the receiver or officer appointed by the Court for the purpose, in the former suit. Suppose in this case the mortgage debt had been paid to the receiver on demand without any suit. Could it then be contended that the date of the realisation of the assets was not the date on which the debt was so paid up to him on behalf of the Court? I think not. If so, I see no reason why the payment of it into Court to his credit in the suit filed by him for its recovery should place him in a worse position . . . . . In the above view the plaintiff was clearly not entitled to claim a rateable distribution as his execution petition and application for rateable distribution were put in long after the date of the deposit on 6th October 1922 of the amount in O. S. No. 259 of 1917."

From the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge dismissing his suit, Natesa Pillai, the plaintiff, has preferred this second appeal. Mr. K. Bhashyam, the learned advocate for the appellant, contended that the learned Subordinate Judge's decision was wrong on three main grounds.

(1) The learned Subordinate Judge has misunderstood the scope and effect of the order (Ex. F) appointing Govindaswami as receiver:

(2) The receiver's application for executing the decree in O. S. No. 259 of 1917, was dismissed on 5th April 1922. It was on the application made by Thandavaraya (defendant 1) in execution of his decree in O. S. No. 373 of 1914 that the decree in O. S. No. 259 of 1917 was attached on 10th July 1922. After attachment Thandavaraya applied for execution of the decree in O. S. No. 259 of 1917 and it was in consequence thereof that the decree amount in O. S. No. 259 of 1917 was paid into Court on 6th October 1922. Therefore the amounts were realized not by the receiver but by Thandavaraya; the effect of this has been ignored by the learned Subordinate Judge.

(3) The position of a receiver appointed by a Court and the effect thereof on the rights of the parties have been misunderstood by the learned Subordinate Judge. The receiver is only an officer of the Court and moneys realized by him are moneys in the hands of the Court and unless specifically allotted or carried over to any specific suit or party, could not be said to be moneys realized and earmarked for the benefit of any particular decree-holder.

I proceed to discuss each of these three points seriatim.

It is only an accident that Govindasami was appointed receiver to file O. S. No. 259 of 1917 and realize the mortgage amount. The terms of the order of appointment of Govindasami as a receiver show that the receiver was bound to hold all moneys realized by him according to the orders of the Court, and that without orders of the Court, he could not in any way deal with the moneys realized in O. S. No. 259 of 1917. The lower appellate Court seems to have attached too much importance to the circumstance that defendant 2 was appointed receiver in O. S. No. 373 of 1914. In one sense no doubt the amount of the mortgage was realized in execution of the decree of Govindasami (O. S. No. 373 of 1914) since it was in execution of that decree that the decree amount was attached and a receiver appointed to realize the mortgage money with a view to discharge the decree in O. S. No. 373 of 1914 but that would not enable Govindasami to claim the whole amount due under the mortgage decree if before the Court passed orders appropriating any portion of the said amount towards the decree in suit O. S. No. 373 of 1914, other decree-holders against the same judgment-debtor applied for execution of their decrees to the same Court. Attachment does not create any lien or charge in favour of the attaching decree-holder: see the remarks of the Privy Council in Motilal v. Kanabuldin (1). "Attachment only prevents alienation. It does not confer title." As remarked by the Privy Council in Raghunatha Das v. Sundar Das (2):

"an attachment prevents and avoids any private alienation, but does not invalidate an alienation by operation of law.

(2) A. I. R. 1914 P. C. 129=42 Cal. 72=41 I. A. 251 (P. C.).

At p. 82 (of 12 Cal.) their Lordships observed :

"The judgment-creditors had no charge on the fund, and the Court could not properly give them such a charge at the expense of the other creditors of the insolvent."

In the case before the Privy Council insolvency intervened and by operation of law the property vested in the Official Assignee. In the case before me, the property was attached and sold by other holders of decrees for money against the same judgment-debtor. If the judgment-creditor, defendant 2, had no charge on the mortgage amount by reason of his attachment, the Court could not properly give him such a charge at the expense of the other creditors of the common judgment-debtor, who in execution of their decrees also attached the mortgage amounts, and had the same realized or who applied for execution for their decrees before the fund in Court was allotted and earmarked to any particular decree-holder. In the words of Wallace, J., at p. 519 of Nachiappa Chetty v. Subbier (3) :

"It is well recognized law that an attachment confers no sort of lien or charge on the attached property and is not effective to create any sort of legal right in the attaching creditor to have the property earmarked for the satisfaction of any decree he has obtained or may obtain."

It is also a distinguishing feature in the present case that the receiver who obtained the decree in O. S. No. 259 of 1917 applied for execution of that decree but his execution application was dismissed on 5th April 1922. It was in fact at the instance of Thandavaraya (defendant 1) and in execution of his decree in O.S. No .373 of 1914 that decree in O. S. No. 259 of 1917 was attached and execution carried out and completed with the result that the amount due in O. S. No. 259 of 1917 was paid into Court on 6th October 1922. The present case is consequently not a case where the mortgage amount was realized solely by the receiver appointed in execution of the decree in O. S. No. 373 of 1914. So far as defendant 1 is concerned, this is a material point of distinction, and so far as the plaintiff is also concerned it has a material bearing on the question whether his application for execution was made before the receipt of such assets by the Court. It must be noted here that defendant 1 does not oppose the plaintiff's right to rateable distribution.

The question elaborately discussed before me turned on the powers of receivers appointed by Court and the effect of such appointment on the rights and liabilities of parties interested in the property. The plaintiff's contention was that the receiver should be taken to be his (plaintiff's) agent and the receiver's suit O. S. No. 259 of 1917 should be taken to be really an execution application in the plaintiff's suit O. S. No. 373 of 1914 and that the moneys realised by the receiver should be taken to be moneys appertaining to the plaintiff's suit. The learned advocate for the plaintiff (respondent) relied on Fink v. Maharaj Bahdoor Singh (4); Indra Chand v. Ghaneshyam Missir (5); Venkatayya Heggade v. Kuppanna (6); Madhar v. Rajani Kanta Roy (7) and Radha Kissore v. Aftab Chandra (8). In a sense it is true that the receiver represents the interests of the decree-holder (defendant 2) in execution of whose decree he was appointed. It is also true that the proceedings in suit O. S. No. 259 of 1917 could be viewed as really execution proceedings taken to realize the decree debt in suit O. S. No. 373 of 1914. But the analogy seems to stop there. It could not be said that the receiver is the agent of defendant 2. Nor could it be said that the moneys realized by the receiver become ipso facto moneys belonging to defendant 2 and as moneys paid to the credit of defendant 2's suit the moment the receiver came into possession of the same. In this connexion the decision of Muthuswamy Iyer reported in Orr v. Muthia Chetti (9) and of the appellate Court from his decision, reported in Muthiah Chetty v. Orr (10), are specially helpful. It was there held that in cases in which a receiver appointed at the instance of the judgment-creditor misappropriates money collected by him the decree is not satisfied pro tanto; but the loss falls on the estate, or its owner, subject to the receiver's liability. At p. 503, Muthuswamy Iyer, J., remarked as follows:

„The appellate Court considers that the receiver in the present case was the judgment-creditor's agent, because it was on his application that the appointment was made. The appointment is the act of the Court and once made in the interests of justice or ex debito justitiae. He is an officer or representative of the Court and subject to its orders. His possession is the possession of the Court by its receiver. The moneys in his hands are in custodia legis for the person who can make a title to them."

It has been held in England in similar cases that a receiver appointed by the Court is appointed on behalf and for the benefit of all persons interested, as parties to the suit or proceeding. Moneys in the hands of the receiver belong to the Court which appointed him and are in custodia legis, and he cannot spend them except under the orders of the Court. A Letters Patent Appeal was preferred against the judgment of Muthuswami Aiyar, J., and was heard by two learned Judges, Shepherd and Davies, JJ. Shepherd, J., agreed with Muthuswami Iyer, J., while Davies, J., was of a different opinion. The appeal was ultimately posted before three learned Judges; the appellant not having prosecuted the appeal further, the same was dismissed and the judgment of Muthuswami Iyer, J., was held to prevail. In the judgment of Shepherd, J., there are some passages which are useful to the present case. At p. 226, it is said that:

"the case is one which cannot be decided upon any theory of agency. A receiver appointed to collect moneys is not an agent of either party. He is an officer of the Court deputed to collect and hold the moneys collected by him in accordance with the orders of the Court. The party at whose instance a receiver is appointed has no greater or less control over his acts than the other parties to the litigation. What then is there in the provisions of the Code to justify us in holding that a judgment-creditor must be deemed to be satisfied by the mere fact of a receiver getting in moneys due to the judgment-debtor. The money which came to the receiver's hands was collected by him from persons who were indebted to the judgment-debtor. There was no payment by the judgment-debtor either out of Court to the judgment-creditor or into Court. The receiver who has collected moneys due to the judgment-debtor does not hold them for the judgment-creditor. He holds them for the Court in order that the Court may decide regarding them."

The decision in In re, Dickinson Ex parte Charrington & Co. (11), relied on by Shepherd, J., contains certain passages regarding the position of a receiver appointed by Court. Though the rights of a decree-holder in England who applied for equitable execution and had a receiver appointed for that purpose, or had writs issued to have judgment-debtor's property seized and sold are not the same in England and in India and though the decree-holder in England seems to possess comparatively higher rights as against other decree-holders of the same judgment-debtor, yet the views of the Court of Appeal as to the effect of the appointment of the receiver in such cases would be helpful here also. Lord Esher (M. R.) observed at p. 190 as follows:

"It is not pretended that the order appointing the receiver gave the appellants any mortgage or charge on the property of the debtor, but it is said that by means of the receiver they held a lien upon the property of the debtor which he received as a security for their debt. How can the possession of a receiver establish a lien in favour of the creditor at whose instance he was appointed? Does the receiver hold the goods so as to give the creditor possession of them? He holds the goods as agent for the Court, not for the creditor. There cannot, therefore, be a possessory lien of the creditor. Is there any other lien? In my opinion the receiver appointed under such an order does not hold the goods for the creditor at all; he holds them for the Court in order that it may decide the right to them."

Fry, L. J., remarked at p. 192:

"How does the order create any "charge" on the property? It only directs the person mentioned in it to receive the specified property without prejudice to certain rights; all further questions being reserved until the further order of the Court. It is equally plain to me that the order creates no lien on the debtor's property in favour of the receiver, and it certainly creates none in favour of the judgment-creditors, who have no possession of the property."

See also In re, Potts Ex parte Taylor (12). In England:

"enforcing judgment by appointment of receivers is not execution in its technical sense, but a substitute for it."

In England:

"equitable execution so called, is not strictly speaking a process of execution. It is rather a mode of relief granted to a judgment-creditor on the ground that either no remedy by execution at law is open to him, or is likely to be effective owing to the peculiar nature of the property of the judgment-debtor which it is sought to make available to answer the judgment. The process is based upon the old practice of the Court of Chancery to assist in enforcing a judgment for the recovery of money of a Court of ordinary jurisdiction by entertaining an application for the appointment of a receiver of such of the interests in property of the judgment-debtor as could not, owing to the nature thereof, be taken under a common law writ of execution": see Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 14, p. 115, S. 208, and p. 4, foot note "F."

But in India it is not so, and the practice is different. Under S. 52, Civil P.C., Court may order execution of decrees in various ways, of which appointment of receiver is one. Again in England, the rule of priority of writs prevails; whereas in India the rule of priority which prevailed under the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 has been subsequently altered by the legislature, and under S. 73 of the present Civil P.C., all decree-holders who have applied for execution of decrees of money against the same judgment-debtor are entitled to share rateably in the assets held by a Court provided applications for execution are made to the Court before the receipt of such assets.

This distinction will have to be kept in view when English cases are referred to on the question of execution.

Under S. 51 of the present Civil P. C. the Court may on the application of the decree-holder order execution of the decree by attachment and sale of any property of the judgment-debtor, or by appointing a receiver, or in such other manner as the nature of the relief granted may require. Does the Court by ordering execution by appointing a receiver confer on the decree-holder higher rights than what he would have if execution was ordered by attachment and sale of the judgment-debtor's property? In the case of execution by attachment and sale of the judgment-debtor's property, it has been held by a Full Bench of five learned Judges of this Court in the case reported in Viswanadham Chetty v. Arunachalam Chetty (13), that where the attaching Court and the custody Court are the same, there is a receipt of assets within the meaning of S. 73, Civil P. C., only when so much of the money standing to the credit of the judgment-debtor as is necessary to satisfy the decree-holder who has applied for execution, is ordered to be transferred to the credit of the first attaching creditor's suit. The judgment of the learned Sir John Wallis, C. J., contains a full discussion of the question. Krishnan, J. at p. 111, stated as follows:

"When the attaching Court and the custody Court are the same, it seems to me that an order should be made by the Court as attaching Court for transferring the money from the suit in which it came into Court to the suit in which the attachment took place. It is only when this is done, the Court as attaching Court can properly be said to have received the assets and to hold the same within the meaning of S. 73; and decree-holders who have attached prior to that are entitled to rateable distribution."

Order 21, R. 52, Civil P. C., would clearly apply when the attaching Court and the custody Court are different. But the Full Bench has held that it applied also when the two Courts are the same The decision of a later Full Bench of three learned Judges reported in Nachiappa Chettyar v. Subbier (3) also adopts the same view: see pp. 513, 517 and 521 (of 46 Mad.) at p. 517, it is observed:

"According to the ruling in the Full Bench case, the money became assets held by the Court and available for payment out in execution only after the District Munsif passed the order for payment. (Per Krishnan, J.)."

Wallace, J., at p. 521 remarked as follows:

"The point of time of the conversion is the point of time at which the Court says: I, as attaching Court, take this property of the judgment-debtor lying in this Court as custody Court and make it property available for distribution in satisfaction of decree against him."

It seems to be clear therefore that if it were a case of attachment and sale, defendant 2 would have no superior or exclusive rights over the fund in question. Having regard to the position of a receiver appointed by the Court, as expounded in the cases quoted by me, it seems to me that defendant 2's position is not in any way improved by the fact that the Court ordered execution of his decrees by appointment of a receiver, and not by attachment and sale, of judgment-debtor's property. The learned advocate for defendant 2 has not satisfied me that by the mere appointment of a receiver in execution of defendant 2's decree, defendant 2 has in law secured a preferential or exclusive right to the moneys that may be realized by the receiver in circumstances like the present. If his contention be right, then other decree-holders could not proceed to attach the same property in execution of other money decrees obtained against the same judgment-debtor, and their remedies would be confined to the surplus, if any, in the receiver's hands. That contention is really inconsistent with the views of Muthusamy Iyer and Shepherd, JJ., in the decision quoted by me. Further, could defendant 2 claim to continue the retention of the receiver in case the judgment-debtor (Namasivaya) became insolvent and the properties of the judgment-debtor vested in the Official Receiver?

The circumstances that the person who was appointed as receiver happened to be Govindasami, defendant 2, himself could not in law make any difference. If a stranger had been appointed as receiver to file O. S. No. 259 of 1917, and if he realized some moneys in execution of the decree in O. S. No. 259 of 1917, could it be said that any moneys paid or realized in O. S. No. 259 of 1917 should be deemed at that moment to have been paid or realized in O. S. No. 373 of 1914?

Under the order appointing Govindasami as receiver:

"he should pay the realized debt into Court and take out the realized sum after taking the further orders of the Court."

This shows clearly that before further orders are passed appropriating any sum towards the decree in O. S. No. 373 of 1914, moneys realized in O. S. No. 259 of 1917 do not ipso facto become moneys realized in O. S. No. 373 of 1914, or otherwise become exclusively moneys of the decree-holder in O. S. No. 373 of 1914.

The contention of defendant 2 that he is solely entitled to the fund in Court is unsustainable for another reason also. The circumstance that one decree-holder has attached certain properties of the judgment-debtor is by itself not a ground for preventing another decree-holder of the same judgment-debtor from attaching the same property. Under O. 21, R. 52, Civil P. C., property in the custody of any Court could be attached. Similarly property over which a receiver has been appointed could also be attached, assuming that the permission of the Court would be necessary before such attachment, in the same way as permission of the Court is necessary to file a suit against a receiver. The Court would not ordinarily refuse such permission, if such permission be necessary. Defendant 1 who attached the property in question after receiver had been appointed has been held to be entitled to rateable distribution. The plaintiff also could have attached the decree in O. S. No. 259 of 1917, in which case he would also have been held entitled to rateable distribution. But is separate attachment by each decree-holder in such circumstances necessary? As remarked by Strachy, C. J., in Bithal Das v. Nand Kishore (14):

"The object of the section is twofold. The first object is to prevent unnecessary multiplicity of execution proceedings, to obviate, in a case where there are many decree-holders each competent to execute his decree by attachment and sale of a particular property, the necessity of each and every one separately attaching and separately selling that property. The other object is to secure an equitable administration of the property by placing all the decree-holders in the position I have described upon the same footing, and making the property rateably divisible among them, instead of allowing one to exclude all the others merely because he happened to be the first who attached and sold the property."

In such cases, it is not necessary that the other decree-holders should again attach the same properties.

For similar reasons, when once a receiver has been appointed to realize properties in execution proceedings, it seems to me that the other decree-holders need not again apply for the appointment of a receiver over the same properties in execution of their decrees also. If their applications for execution be pending in the same Court before the assets are recieved, then I think they are all entitled to rateable distribution.

For these reasons, I think that defendant 2's contention that he is entitled exclusively to the fund in Court is unsustainable. It is admitted that the plaintiff applied for execution before any order was passed transferring or appropriating the fund or any portion thereof to the decree in suit O. S. No. 373 of 1914 obtained by defendant 2. That being so the plaintiff is entitled to rateable distribution along with defendants 1 and 2. The second appeal is accordingly allowed, the decision of the lower appellate Court reversed and that of the 1st Court restored. Defendant 2 (respondent 1) in the second appeal should pay the plaintiff's costs in this and in the lower appellate Court. I pass no orders as to costs of defendant 1 (respondent 2), either here or in the lower appellate Court. The order as to costs of the suit made by the first Court will stand.

Kollapuri Reddi—Plaintiff—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 637 of 1925. Decided on 15th August 1929, against decree of the Sub-Judge, Chittoor, in A. S. No. 9 of 1923.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 47—Questions relating to excess execution should not be raised by fresh suit.

Questions relating to excess execution, if raised by a person who was a party to the suit should not be raised by a fresh suit but should be decided in execution proceedings only: 5 M. H. C. 185 and 6 M. H. C. 293. Rel. on. [P 13 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C., S. 47 (2)—Suit may be treated as proceeding.

The circumstance that a plaint is filed after paying a higher amount of court-fee cannot according to the present Code be a ground for not treating the proceeding as an application under S. 47. [P 13 C 2; P 14 C 1]

(c) Civil P. C., S. 65—Court has no jurisdiction to sell property of person against whom decree is not made—Sale, if takes place, is ultra vires.

Where a person is not one against whom any decree has been passed or order capable of execution has been made, a Court has no jurisdiction to sell his property in execution of the decree. And if a sale takes place, the sale is ultra vires and void being in excess of Court's jurisdiction the jurisdiction of the Court being limited to execute the decree against a person against whom only the decree has been passed. [P 14 C 2]

(d) Civil P. C., S. 47—Persons party to suit, but no decree against them—Their rights infringed in execution proceedings—Even such persons must apply under S. 47.

The words of S. 47 are wider and under that section even persons against whom no decrees have been passed, but who are parties to the suit have to come under S. 47 if any of their rights be infringed in execution proceedings by the decree-holder. [P 14 C 2; P 15 C 1]

(e) Civil P. C., S. 65—Notice required by O. 21, R. 22 not given, sale becomes void—To set aside such sale, proceedings should be taken under S. 47—To set aside void sales in execution, limitation, not under Art. 166, but under Art. 181 applies—Limitation Act, Arts. 166 and 181.

Where notice required by O. 21, R. 22 is not given butthe sale or excess sale takes place such a sale is void.Being void the sale need not be set aside and as such sale need not be set aside the period of limitation (comparatively shorter) prescribed by Art. 166 would not apply, so that in cases where sales are held to be void, appropriate relief could be obtained by parties to the suit by proceedings under S. 47, the period of limitation being not the period prescribed for the setting aside of sales but general period of three years prescribed by Art. 181: A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 431 (F. B.); 7 Foll. A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 859, Expl. and Dist.; A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 397, Expl.; 43 Mad. 313, Ref. [P 16 C 1]

(f) Limitation Act, Art. 181—As soon as right of possession to land is disturbed, right to apply accrues under Art. 181.

The right to apply accrues to a person within meaning of Art. 181 as soon as he is aggrieved by disturbance to his possession of land; and so long as he is in possession it does not matter to him what orders of excess sales or excess deliveries are passed behind his back. [P 15 C 1, 2]

(g) Limitation Act, S. 18—Decree-holder ordered not to proceed against property of party defendant — Decree-holder obtaining permission later to sell the property—Sale taking place without notice—Land sold delivered symbolically—Party defendant coming to know of fraudulent acts when his possession was disturbed—In such cases fraud, though not alleged in plaint, may be inferred.

In spite of an order pased in his first execution application that the decree-holder was not entitled to proceed against the shares of the property allotted to a party defendant, the decree-holder again applied by a fresh execution application some time later for the same relief and for the sale of the whole of the property; and without giving any notice to the party defendant had the whole property sold in 1918, and himself became the purchaser; and again without any notice to him the decree-holder managed to get symbolical delivery behind his back. The party defendant came to know about the fraudulent act of the decree-holder only in 1919, when the decree-holder interfered with his possession.

Held: that in the circumstances though S. 18 has not been specifically referred to in the plaint, the case would really come under S. 18 and the period before 1919 could not be counted; such an inference could legitimately be drawn in the particular circumstances of this case, though originarily facts bringing a case under S. 18 have to be specifically pleaded. [P 16 C 1,2]

S. A. Seshagiri—for Appellants.

T. L. Venkatrama Iyer—for Respondent.

Judgment.—Certain immovable properties belonged to two brothers, Murgapillai and Adiyapada Pillai. On 30th February 1895 Muruga Pillai executed a mortgage hypothecating the properties in favour of the present defendant 1. On the foot of that mortgage the present defendant 1 instituted O. S. No. 755 of 1910 against both Muruga Pillai and Adiyapada Pillai. But the decree passed in that suit exonerated the share of Adiyapada Pillai. Subsequently Adiyapada Pillai filed a suit for partition against his brother Muruga Pillai to which suit

he made the present defendant 1 also as party defendant. That suit was O. S. No. 421 of 1915. The partition suit was compromised and a definite half share in the suit properties was allotted to Adiyapada Pillai, the suit being dismissed against the present defendant. The defendant 1, decree-holder in O. S. No. 755 of 1910, proceeded to execute his decree by bringing to sale the entire lands. Adiyapada Pillai naturally intervened and objected and claimed exoneration of his share, namely, the eastern half of S. No. 272 allotted to him by the final decree in the partition suit. Though the partition decree was passed on a compromise between the brothers only and though as far as the present defendant 1 was concerned the order was that the suit be dismissed as against him, yet the Court ordered that Muruga Pillai's western half alone should be sold, and that defendant 1 was not entitled to sell the share of Adiyapada Pillai in execution of the decree in Suit No. 755 of 1910. When such an order was passed by the Court defendant 1 decree-holder in O. S. No. 755 of 1910 dropped further proceedings in execution, and had his execution application dismissed on 12th April 1917. Subsequently it would seem that defendant 1 again applied by means of a fresh execution petition to have the entire lands sold in execution of his decree in O. S. No. 755 of 1910. The property was sold and he himself became the purchaser under Ex. 4, dated 8th January 1918. In execution of the sale certificate he applied for and obtained delivery of the land including the eastern half of the land : vide delivery receipt Ex. 5, dated 7th September 1918. It is seen with reference to this Ex. 5 that it was only a symbolic delivery and not delivery of actual possession after removing the person in possession.

Adiyapada Pillai sold his rights in the eastern portion of the suit lands to the present plaintiff under Ex. A dated 26th June 1919. The suit which gave rise to this second appeal was instituted by the plaintiff as the vendee from Adiyapda Pillai under Ex. A alleging that the defendant obstructed him in July 1919 when he went to take possession of the properties purchased by him.

The main plea raised by defendant 1 was that a separate suit does not lie and that all questions relating to excess delivery in execution of the decree in O. S. No. 755 of 1910 to which Adiyapada Pillai was a party should have been settled by proceedings taken under S. 47, Civil P. C. The learned District Munsif overruled that contention and went into the merits of the plaint allegations, holding that a separate suit lay in the circumstances of this case. On the merits he passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. Defendant 1 preferred an appeal to the lower appellate Court along with his sons, the other defendants in the case. In the lower appellate Court the question was again raised that the present suit is not maintainable having regard to the provisions of S. 47, Civil P. C. The lower appellate Court upheld that contention of the defendant, and I think it was right on that point. S. 47, Civil P. C., is clear that all questions relating to execution discharge or satisfaction of a decree should be decided by proceedings under S. 47, Civil P. C., and not by a separate suit.

The question of excess delivery relates to execution. That has been held by this High Court even in a very early case reported in Muttuvelu Pillai v. Vythilinga Pillai (1) : see also in Kattamma Nachiar v. Bothgurusami Thevar (2) so that it is clear that questions relating to excess execution, if raised by a person who was a party to the suit, should not be raised by a fresh suit but should be decided in execution proceedings only. The lower appellate Court being clearly right in that view, the question arose before it whether the present suit should be treated under the circumstences as an application filed under S. 47. There were difficulties according to some of the decisions passed prior to the present Code, in so treating the same. To remove such difficulties, specific provision has been made in the present Code by S. 47, Cl. 2, where it is specifically enacted that the Court may subject to any objection as to limitation or jurisdiction, treat a proceeding under this section as a suit or a suit as a proceeding and may, if necessary, order payment of any additional court-fee. The circumstance that a plaint is filed after paying a higher amount of court-fee cannot according to the present Code be a ground for not treating the proceeding as an application under S 47.

(1) 5 M. H. C. 185.
(2) 6 M. H. C. 293.

The only further question would be whether there is any question of limitation bar applicable to the plaintiff's case. The lower appellate Court held that the application was not barred by limitation, observing that Art. 181, Lim. Act, applied to the case and that the starting point of limitation should be taken to be, when the plaintiff was obstructed or disturbed in his possession. It went into the evidence and came to the finding that it was only in 1919 that the plaintiff or Adiyapada Pillai was disturbed in his possession and that the defendant had not been put in physical possession in execution of his sale certificate. The suit having been filed on 23rd November 1921 that is within the period of three years provided by Art. 181, Lim. Act, the lower appellate Court decided the question of limitation against the defendants, and thus in the end confirmed the decree of the first Court.

Against the decision of the lower appellate Court the defendants have preferred this second appeal.

Both the learned advocates who appear in the case are agreed that the question in dispute is one covered by S. 47, Civil P. C. I think that the lower appellate Court was right in having treated the plaint as a proceeding under S. 47 in the circumstances of this case. The only remaining question then is that of limitation. It was strenuously argued by the learned advocate for the appellant that the lower appellate Court was wrong in fixing the starting point of limitation in this case. He contended that the words of Art. 181, viz., "when the right to apply accrues" should be read without introducing into the article any further words or phrases. According to the learned advocate the right to apply accrued the moment the delivery was effected and delivery was effected under Ex. 5 in favour of his client the auction-purchaser, on 7th September 1918. The article does not say that the starting point is only from the date when the applicant had knowledge of his rights or when he was dispossessed. That being so, the learned advocate argued that this application because the plaint filed in this case should be taken to be application for the present purpose was barred by limitation. He drew my attention to the case reported in Bihari Lall Mitter v. Tanuk Lal Mandar, A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 397, and also to the decision of Jackson, J., in Pallayya v. Bhimaraju (3). On behalf of the respondent it was argued by his learned advocate that this question must be decided having regard to the accepted view viz., that excess sale in execution is void. If excess sale is void, he contended that excess delivery also is void as such; and that as it has been held that no suit need be filed to set aside excess sales, it follows that no application need be filed to set aside excess delivery and, it is only when the rights of Adiyapada Pillai or the plaintiff are in any way actually disturbed that their right to take any steps arises and that in this particular case having regard to the concurrent findings of both the lower Courts that the plaintiff's vendor was in possession till 1919 and that the defendant got physical possession only in 1919, the (plaint) application filed in 1921 could not be held to be barred.

It seems to me that in such cases we have to keep in mind what exactly is the nature and effect of such excess sales and such excess deliveries.

In the first place, the definition of the word 'judgment-debtor' according to Civil Procedure Code is :

"any person against whom a decree has been passed or an order capable of execution has been made."

Now in this case the plaintiff's vendor was not a person against whom any decree had been passed or order capable of execution had been made. Therefore the Court had no jurisdiction to sell his property in execution of the decree. The sale was thus ultra vires and void, being in excess of the Court's jurisdiction, the jurisdiction of the Court being limited to execute the decree against Muruga Pillai, against whom only the decree had been passed. It does not follow from what I have said that if in execution proceedings in connexion with a suit to which a person was a party anything happened which affected his rights, that he need not proceed under S. 47. The words of S. 47 are wider and under that section even persons against whom no decrees have been passed but who are parties to the suit, have to come under S. 47, if any of their rights be infringed in execution proceedings by the decree-holder. The procedure ordinarily available by way of suits is substituted by one of applying to the executing Court by means of a petition. This is the only effect of S. 47 of the Code. The legal rights of the parties have to be considered and adjusted upon.

But it does not also follow that such persons are judgment-debtors within the definition of the Civil Procedure Code.

Now Rajagopala Ayyar v. Ramanuja Chariar (4), is a decision of a Full Bench of this Court which held that when notice required by O. 21, R. 22, Civil P. C., was not given, but the sale took place, that such a sale was void. Being void the sale need not be set aside, and as such sale need not be set aside, the period of limitation (comparatively shorter), prescribed by Art. 166 would not apply, so that in cases where sales are held to be void, appropriate relief could be obtained by parties to the suit by proceeding under S. 47, the period of limitation being not the period prescribed for the setting aside of sales but general period of three years prescribed by Art. 181. If excess sale is void and no notice need be taken of the same by any parties to the suit, until their rights are actually infringed, I fail to see how excess execution could have any higher effect. In this particular case it is found that there was no notice to the plaintiff's vendor either in connexion with the second application for execution which resulted in the excess sale, or in connexion with the delivery evidenced by Ex. 5. Exhibit 5, I think evidences only a symbolic delivery, under O. 21, R. 96. The lower appellate Court says with reference to this that "the delivery which defendant 1 obtained under Ex. 5 was a mere formal one evidently."

If I am right in my view about the effect of this excess delivery, the plaintiff's vendor need not have taken any steps simply because there was this excess delivery in execution. He was not bound to apply to have the order relating to excess delivery set aside. If he could ignore that order as he could have ignored the excess sale itself, what then is the real act by which he is aggrieved; in other words, when does the right to apply accrue to him within the meaning of Art. 181, Lim. Act. So long as he was in possession it did not matter to him what orders of excess sales or excess deliveries were passed behind his back. I think the lower appellate Court was right in its finding that Art. 181 applied and that the application was not barred.

I wish to notice the two cases that were cited to me by the learned advocate for the appellants. The first case reported in A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 397 was a case where an application was made professedly to set aside excess sale. The Court, as I understand the judgment, held that as the prayer was to set aside the sale, the application ought to have been made within the period prescribed Art. 168. I do not understand the learned Judges to lay down anything more than that. I do not think that the case affords any guidance to me with reference to the question that I have now to decide. The decision of Jackson, J., reported in Pallayya v. Bhimarazu (3), deals with Art. 181, Lim. Act. His Lordship came to the conclusion in that case that the application was not barred by Art. 181. His Lordship had before him an application for restitution made after the expiration of three years from the date, as I take it, of the sale. It was argued that the applicant was entitled to deduct the time prescribed by S. 18, Lim. Act, if a case of fraud was made out. His Lordship found on the facts that a case of fraud had been made out and that the applicant was entitled to deduct that period. Deducting that period it was found that the application before the Court was within three years, even if the starting point was taken to be the date of sale; and accordingly the application was not barred.

His Lordship had not to decide the exact point that I have to decide in this case viz., what the starting point of limitation in such a case would be. What the starting point in that case was having regard to the circumstances was evidently assumed and not disputed by the parties; and the only question that required the decision of the Court was whether the period covered by S. 18, Lim. Act, could be deducted; and his Lordship held—and if I may say so respectfully—very properly that the petitioner was entitled to such a deduction. I do not see how this decision is against the view that I am now inclined to adopt as regards the starting point of limitation in the present case. Being thus of opinion that the starting point of limitation in the case before me was only when the plaintiff's vendor or the plaintiff was disturbed in his possession, I think the lower appellate Court was right in the view it took on the question of limitation. This view received support from the observations of the Full Bench of this Court in the case reported in Rajagopala Ayyar v. Ramanuja Chariar (4), where the decision in Seshagiri Rao v. Srinivasa Rao (5), by Seshagiri Iyer and Moore, JJ., was followed. The learned advocate for the appellant at one stage of his argument seemed to contend that in this case limitation began even from the date of the Court sale (Ex. 4 dated 8th January 1918) and not merely from the date of the delivery proceedings evidenced by Ex. 5. But as I have held that the sale in question is excess sale not authorized by the decree and is consequently void and that it need not be set aside, time will not begin to run from that event.

For the reasons I have given, if I am right in my view that excess sales are void and need not be set aside by persons who are not judgment-debtors, the circumstance that the sale took place in 1918 would not in any way prejudice the plaintiff-respondent in this particular case. Finally there is also the finding that in spite of the order passed in his first execution application that he was not entitled to proceed against the shares of the property allotted to Adiyapada Pillai, the decree-holder, the present appellant, again applied by a fresh execution application some time later for the same relief and for the sale of the whole of the property and that, without giving any notice to Adiyappa Pillai had the whole property sold and himself became the purchaser; and again without any notice to Adiyapada Pillai he managed to get symbolical delivery behind the back of the latter. Adiyapada Pillai and his vendee the present plaintiff (respondent) came to know about the fraudulent acts of the appellant only in 1919, when the appellant interfered with their possession; till then they were in possession and were paying revenue on the property. In the circumstances though S. 18, Lim. Act, has not been specifically referred to in the plaint, the case would really seem to come under that section and the period before 1919 could not be counted against the respondent. From the facts found in this case, such an inference could legitimately be drawn in the particular circumstances of this case and though ordinarily facts bringing a case under S. 18 have to be specifically pleaded. On all these grounds I dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Malabar District Board — Plaintiff—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 614 of 1928, Decided on 15th August 1929, from decree of Dist. Judge, North Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 88 of 1927.

(a) Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act (1900), S. 3 (1)—"Cultivation" and "cultivate" are limited to "waste lands."

The natural construction of S. 3 (1) is to limit the words "cultivation" and "cultivate" to the case of "waste lands" mentioned in the last portion of the subsection. [P 18 C 1]

(b) Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act (1900), S. 1 — Present Act secures to tenants better compensation for improvements.

The present Act (1 of 1900) has not by any express provision made the point, viz., whether the Act applies to the case of buildings in towns, in any way clearer, but the object of the present Act would seem to be to secure the tenants better (higher rate of) compensation for improvements in respect of which they would be entitled to compensation under the prior Act or by custom: A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 776 and Mad. Second Appeal No. 1445 of 1889, Ref. [P 18 C 2]

(c) Transfer of Property Act, S. 108—Roadside poramboke belonging to District Board—Lease of the land on condition that compensation should not be claimed for improvements—Contract is binding on lessee—Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvement Act is not applicable.

The suit land was a roadside poramboke belonging to the District Board. This land was leased to S by the District Board on condition that S should deliver back possession of the plot without claiming any compensation for improvements of any sort that he might make on the property.

Held : that S could not claim compensation for the building erected on the land as the erection of substantial buildings was inconsistent with the terms of lease. [P 18 C 2]

Held further : that Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act (1900) did not apply to the present case : A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 776, Foll. [P 18 C 2]

(d) Crown Grants Act, S. 3 — Crown Grants Act has no application to lease of roadside poramboke belonging to District Board—(Obiter).

Though it is true that the Government may have some rights in the underground soil of the public roads which vest in the Local Boards for certain purposes, yet the Crown Grants Act does not apply to a lease of road side poramboke belonging to the District Local Board. [P 19 C 1]

M. C. Sridharam—for Appellant.

V. P. Karunakaran Nambiar — for Respondent.

Judgment.—On 12th March 1923, the District Board of Malabar passed proceedings permitting the President of the District Board to lease a particular roadside poramboke vested in the District Board, for occupation by the present defendant. The proceedings made it a condition for allowing such temporary occupation that the appellant should pay a sum of Rs. 6 a year and that he should deliver back possession of the plot without claiming any compensation for improvements of any sort that he might make on the property. On such conditions the President, District Board, Malabar, leased to the defendant the roadside poramboke on 4th April 1923 as per Ex. A. Subsequently as it was resolved to take possession of the property, a notice to quit, Ex. B, was served upon the defendant on 7th May 1925 requiring him to quit the premises and deliver possession to the District Board. The defendant not having done so, the President, District Board, Malabar, has instituted the suit which has given rise to this second appeal to recover possession of the property. The main plea of the defendant was that he was entitled to be paid the value of the improvements effected by him on the property before surrendering possession, and he relied on the provisions of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act. The District Munsif of Badagara who tried the suit was of opinion that the provisions of the Crown Grants Act 15 of 1895, applied to the case and accordingly came to the conclusion that the rights of the parties should be adjudicated according to the tenor of the document. The document being specific on the point that the defendant should not claim the value of any improvements that he might make on the property, the District Munsif came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was not bound to pay anything in respect of the improvements. The defendant preferred an appeal to the lower appellate Court and the learned District Judge of North Malabar differed from the District Munsif as regards the applicability of the Crown Grants Act to the case in question. He, however, was of opinion that Malabar Act 1 of 1900 did not apply to the present case because the present case related to a road margin in the heart of the Badagara Bazaar by the side of the principal public offices and at the junction of three roads, and he was accordingly of opinion that the land in question could not be said to be an agricultural holding, within the meaning of the Malabar Act. The learned District Judge also relied on a decision of this Court reported in Chathukutty v. Kunhappan (1), where the learned Judge Jackson, J., held that Malabar Act 1 of 1900 applies only to improvements effected to agricultural holdings and vacant kudiyiruppu building sites. The learned District Judge was of opinion that the roadside poramboke in question which was leased to the appellant could not be said to be an agricultural holding or a building site (kudiyiruppu) available for purposes of being built upon. It was roadside poramboke proper, and as the same was not required immediately for any purpose by the District Board, it was thought that it may be leased to the defendant temporarily but on the specific terms and conditions mentioned in the lease. The learned District Judge (Mr. A. V. Govinda Menon) observed as follows in para. 2 of his judgment :

"It would be a perversion of common sense to hold that when, as here, in an urban area like Badagara, a tenant agrees to occupy a road margin for a short term and agrees with the District Board (in which the road is vested) to go away whenever called upon, without claiming anything for any fixture, he might erect upon the site, such a contract comes within the mischief attempted to be struck at by the Improvements Act."

The defendant has preferred this second appeal and on his behalf it was argued by his learned advocate that the decision of this Court referred to by me, viz., Chathukuthy v. Kunhappan (1), requires reconsideration. The learned advocate submitted that the policy of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act was to encourage the making of improvements in respect of all kinds of properties in Malabar, and that there was nothing in any of the provisions of the Act which restricted the scope of the Act to agricultural lands or vacant kudiyiruppu building sites, as mentioned in that decision. The learned advocate accordingly submitted that that decision should be reconsidered as the question related to a matter of great importance in Malabar. On the other side, the learned advocate who appeared for the District Board drew my attention to the definition of tenant in S. 3, of the Act where reference is made to "cultivation" and to "cultivate". But I am inclined to think on a reading of sub-Cl. (1) ,S. 3, as a whole, that the natural construction is to limit those words to the case of "waste lands mentioned in the last portion of the sub-section.

Then it was argued that there were decisions under the prior Act of 1887 to the effect that the Act did not apply to the case of buildings in towns. It was pointed out that in the judgment of Muthuswami Iyer and Weir, JJ., in Second Appeal No. 1445 of 1889, a case from Calicut, their Lordships observed:

"The dwelling houses described in S. 3, Cl. 2, of the Act are grouped together with four buildings and the term improvement itself is defined in the Act as a work which adds to the value of a holding. In their ordinary sense the words appear to us to refer to dwelling houses appurtenant to a holding for agricultural purposes, and not to dwelling houses let within the limits of a town for purposes of residence only."

Again they say:

"The dwelling house for which compensation is claimed in this suit forms admittedly no part of of an agricultural holding. The house, it is stated, is situated in a favourite suburb of the town of Calicut. We are therefore of opinion that the Act does not apply, and S. 7 of the Act does not render inoperative the restrictive convenant set out in Ex. A."

Their Lordships accordingly held that Malabar Act 1 of 1887 did not apply to such a case, and they disallowed compensation in respect of the said building. The present Act 1 of 1900 has not by any express provision, made the point in any way clearer, but the object of the present Act would seem to be to secure to the tenants better (higher rate of) compensation for improvements in respect of which they would be entitled to compensation under the prior Act or by custom. At p. 345 of Malabar Law and Aliyasanthana Law of the late Sundara Iyar, J. edited by Mr. Sitarama Rao, the following passage occurs:

"It appears, however, that the customary rule as to payment of compensation applied only to agricultural tenancies: vide Logan's Manual Vol. II, Appendix III (cxc)."

Though the question was discussed before me, no new and further materials have been placed before me to induce me to say that the decision in Chathu Kutty v. Kunhappan (1) requires reconsideration. On the other hand, though is was observed at p. 814 (of 50 Mad.) that "curiously enough," the question appears to be res integra, it now appears that a Bench of this Court in effect decided a similar point in 1890 in Second Appeal No. 1445 of 1889 from South Malabar. It also appears from the .speech of the Hon'ble S. Subramania Iyer in his final observations on this bill that the question was raised when the bill was being considered. He said:

"The Palaghat Sarvajana Sabha entertains a doubt as to whether the definition of the word "tenant" would not include lessees of warehouses and mercantile shops. It may be pointed out that the scope of the Bill does not admit of such an interpretation, and that the Transfer of Property Act provides for leases other than leases for agricultural purposes: Fort St. George Gazette, Supplement dated 2nd November 1886.

I therefore think that absolutely no grounds have been made out why I should not follow the decision of this Court reported in Chathukutty v. Kunhappan (1). As I said, the finding in this case is that the suit land is a roadside poramboke and as it was not thought necessary to keep it as such by the District Board at that time, it was suggested that the same may be handed over to the defendant on the particular terms and conditions mentioned in Ex. A for temporary occupation. Further, the erection of substantial buildings, would, I think, in the present case, be inconsistent with the purpose for which the land was let: see definition of "improvement" in

S. 3 (3) of the Act. Nor could there be any custom applicable to lease of porambokes like the one before me.

In this view it is not necessary for me to express an opinion on the question whether the Crown Grants Act would apply to such a case. Prima facie there are serious obstacles in the way of accepting the contention on this point. Though it is true that the Government may have some rights in the underground soil of public roads which according to the Act vest in the Local Boards for certain purposes, it does not, in my opinion, follow, that the Local Board or the President is thereby an agent of the Government when it or he deals with such properties. On the other hand a reading of Ss. 160 and 199 of the Madras Local Boards Act leads to the conclusion that such roads, as roads and for communication purposes, vest in the Local Boards which are entitled to deal with the same in the way authorized by law under S. 160 (3). The President of the Local Board may, with the permission of the Board, grant leases of roadside poramboke according to the rules framed by the Government under S. 199 (d). Local Boards may acquire property and lease the same subject to rules made by the Government. Though the Local Boards are bound by rules so framed by Government, they are so bound not because the Government happen to be the owner of the sub-soil but because the rules when framed become part and parcel of the Local Boards Act. I therefore think, as at present advised, that this case cannot be brought under the Crown Grants Act. But as I said, having come to the conclusion that the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Imrovements Act does not apply, it does not matter for the purpose of this case whether the Crown Grants Act applies or not.

I think the District Judge was right, and the second appeal is dismissed with costs. I allow the appellant three months' time for removal of the buildings.

Appeal No. 368 of 1928, Decided on 9th August 1929, against order of Dist. Court, East Godavery, D/- 17th July 1928.

(a) Guardians and Wards Act, Ss. 10 and 25—Conditional order of appointment as guardian of property is of no effect.

Where a District Judge appointed the father guardian of the property of a ward and directed the respondent to restore the child to her father, remarking that no order as regards the guardianship of her person was necessary.

Waller, J.—This is an appeal against an order appointing a guardian under the Guardian and Wards Act. A father applied under S. 10 of the Act to be appointed guardian of his minor daughter's person and property and under S. 25 for an order directing the respondent to deliver her into his custody. The District Judge appointed him guardian of the property and directed the respondent to restore the child to her father, remarking that no order as regards the guardianship of her person was necessary.

The conditional order of appointment as guardian of the property is of no effect: In re, Venkatesa Perumal (1), and must be set aside. The District Judge is not correct in saying that no order as regards the guardianship of the person was "necessary." No such order could have been passed. On this point, we agree in the view taken by Ramesam and Jackson, JJ., in Lakshma Reddi v,

Vira Reddi (2) and not in that taken by Venkatasubba Rao, J., in Raghavaiya v. Lakshmiah (3). Mr. Rama Rao contends that no application lies under S. 25 of the Act in a case where the minor has never been in the custody of the guardian. That is, of course, the plain meaning of the section, but we must follow the rulings of this Court which lay down that, in order to make the Act workable, a fiction must be imported into the section, whereby it is deemed that the child has been constructively in the guardian's custody and has left it.

On the merits, we consider that there should be a further enquiry. The allegation is that the father more or less deserted his wife and endeavoured to marry again, while she was still alive. That allegation has not been investigated. If it is true, it will be for the Court below to consider whether it is for the welfare of the child to return to the custody of a father, who had no particular affection for her mother and has now married again. In effect, if she returns to her father, she will have to be looked after by a stepmother, who may have children of her own and neglect her. The order is set aside. The District Judge will re-entertain the application and dispose of it in the light of the above remarks. There will be no order as to costs.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 107 of 1929, Decided on 23rd September 1929, against order of Dist. Court, Chingleput, D/- 27th November 1928.

Court-fees Act, Sch. 2, Art. 11 (a)—Order directing final decree be passed in mortgage suit—Court-fee for appeal over such order need not be ad valorem.

An appeal against an order, directing after contest, that a final decree shall be passed in a mortgage suit, should not be treated as an appeal against the final decree in that suit for the purpose of court-fee, and, therefore, an ad valorem court-fee need not be paid for such appeal : 35 All. 476, Dist ; 42 Mad. 52, Expl. [P 21 C 1]

K. P. Ramakrishna Iyer and N. Ramchandra Iyer—for Petitioners.

T. G. Aravamudhan—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This civil revision petition was presented in the following circumstances. The plaintiff, now respondent, obtained a preliminary mortgage decree against the petitioner, and applied in M. P. No. 279 of 1927 to have a final decree passed. The defendants were given notice and alleged that the decree debt had been adjusted. This issue was tried by the Subordinate Judge of Chingleput and found against, so that he directed that a final decree should be drawn up. The petitioners took this order on appeal to the District Court, stamping it as though for a miscellaneous appeal. The learned District Judge took up the matter of the sufficiency of the court-fee and passed an order in which he says that the appeal was clearly against the final decree in the mortgage suit and accordingly that an ad valorem court-fee should be paid. The petitioners now object to the terms of this order.

The question thus is whether an appeal against an order directing after contest that a final decree shall be passed in a mortgage suit should be treated as an appeal against the final decree in that suit. Not much guidance can be obtained from reported cases. The learned District Judge has referred to Bajrangi Lal v. Mahabir Kunwar (1), but all that that lays down is that an appeal from a final decree in a mortgage suit passed under O. 34, R. 5, Civil P. C., requires an ad valorem court-fee, a proposition which need not be disputed. In Subbalakshmi Ammal v. Ramalinga Chetty (2), Spencer and Krishnan, JJ., had to deal with an order dismissing an application for a final decree in a suit for sale on a mortgage from the point of view of its appealability and there indeed they did hold that the effect of the order was to dismiss the suit thereby being technically a decree and appealable. I do not, however, find that case of much assistance here, because although the effect of the order here no doubt would be that a final decree must be passed, it can hardly be said that this appeal is tantamount to an appeal from that decree. We have only to consider what the permissible grounds in each case would be. In this appeal against the order, the grounds must necessarily be limited to adducing cause why the final decree should not be passed; whereas once the decree is passed and an appeal is preferred against it, grounds such as those would not avail the appellant, but he must attack the merits of the decree. I think it is quite clear, therefore, that the scope of an appeal against the order would be different from that against the decree and further that the judgment-debtor has a right of appeal against both. To charge him ad valorem fees in this appeal would mean, if he appealed against the decree, he would have to pay them twice over, which I do not think can be correct. I must accordingly allow the petition and decide that the appeal preferred to the District Judge was properly stamped and direct him to restore it to file and dispose of it according to law. Petitioners will get their costs in this petition.

Second Appeals Nos. 1671 and 1672 of 1927, Decided on 13th September 1929, against decrees of Dist. Court, West Godaveri, Ellore, in Appeal Suits Nos. 41 and 40 of 1927.

(a) Madras Elementary Education Act (1920), S. 36—Education tax under S. 34 should be treated as addition to land cess—Education tax is not ipso facto land cess for all purposes.

A rule framed under S. 36 ran thus: "Tax levied by a local authority under S. 23 . . . . . shall be treated as an addition to the tax levied . . . . . under the law for the time being in force. . . . . ."

Held: that the education tax under S. 34 should be treated as an addition to the land cess and is recoverable along with the said land cess as an integral part of it. That being so, the rule did not declare that the education tax was ipso facto land cess or should be deemed to be land cess for all purposes. [P 22 C1]

(b) Madras Elementary Education Act (1920), S. 34 — No statutory provision to enable landholder to collect education tax from tenant—Landholder's claim should be based upon the contract.

With respect to education tax leviable under S. 34, there is no statutory provision to enable the landholder to collect any portion of it from the tenant. The landholder's claim therefore, to recover education tax from his tenants, should be based upon a contract. [P 22 C 1]

B. Satyanarayana—for Appellant.

V. Govindarajachari — for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff is the appellant in both these appeals. The two suits filed by him are for the recovery of rent and cess from the ryots (defendants). The only question in dispute in these second appeals is whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover one-half of the education cess which the Government has levied and recovered from him. It would appear from the judgment of the lower appellate Court, it was conceded on behalf of the plaintiff that he is not entitled to recover land cess from the defendants. The defendants have set up a contract or agreement by which the plaintiff's predecessors-in-title agreed not to collect land cess from them. That agreement was no doubt prior to the passing of Act 8 of 1920, which is the Madras Elementary Education Act. Under S. 34 of this Act, the education tax can be levied in the area which is not within a municipality, not exceeding 25 per cent of the taxation leviable in that area, under all or any of the following heads, namely, land cess, tax on companies, professional tax, and house tax. This section does not specify from whom such a tax can be levied. In S. 34, it is stated that the assessment and realization of taxes leviable under S. 36 shall be in accordance with the procedure prescribed. That procedure appears to have been prescribed under a rule which was framed under S. 36. The rule is to this effect, namely,

"Tax levied by a local authority under S. 34 of the Act under any head of taxation specified therein, shall be treated as an addition to the tax levied under the heads by the local authority under the law for the time being in force governing it, and shall be assessed and recovered along with the said tax as an integral part of it."

The question at issue has to be decided upon a proper interpretation of this rule. It must be borne in mind that this rule is one framed under S. 36 which only relates to the procedure prescribed for assessment and realization of the tax. The scope of this rule, therefore, is confined to the procedure to be adopted for the levy and recovery of this tax and cannot be extended further. It says that the education tax can be recovered along with the taxes already in force, for instance, land cess. This education tax should be treated as an addition to the land cess and is recoverable along with the said land cess as an integral part of it. That being so, it seems to me that this rule does not declare that the education tax is ipso facto land cess or shall be deemed to be land cess for all purposes. If an amount is due to the Government under the Land Improvement Loans Act, that amount is recoverable as an arrear of revenue. It is only the procedure prescribed for the recovery of arrears of revenue that should also be adopted for the recovery of those dues.

It has been held that by reason of the identical procedure for their recovery, such dues do not become arrears of revenue for all purposes. Similarly, by reason of the aforesaid rule framed under S. 36 of the Act, it cannot be urged that the education tax has been declared by statute to be land cess itself. In this view, it has to be seen whether the plaintiff has got any right to recover from the tenant a portion of the education tax levied from him, In the case of land cess, there is the express provision in S. 88, Madras Local Boards Act 14 of 1920, in proviso 2 which enables a landholder to recover from his tenant one-half of the land cess payable by him in respect of the land occupied by the tenant. But for this proviso, the landholder will have no right to recover any portion of it from the tenant, unless under a special contract entered into with him.

With respect to land cess, there is a statutory right given to the landholder to recover one-half of it from the tenant but as to educational tax leviable under Act 8 of 1920 there is no statutory provision to enable the landholder to collect any portion of it from the tenant. The plaintiff's claim to recover one-half of the education tax from the defendants should be based either upon a contract or upon a statutory liability. Neither of them exists in this case. It is, therefore, clear, that the plaintiff's claim with respect to education cess is unsustainable.

Even if it should be held that by reason of the rule framed under S. 36 of the Act referred to above, the education tax must be deemed to be land cess itself or a portion of it, the plaintiff would still be prevented from recovering any portion thereof from the defendants by reason of the agreement which disentitles him to recover the land cess from the defendants. The contract seems to be that no land cess should be recovered from the defendants. If it be so, I must hold that there was no reservation to the effect that that contract should be confined only to the amount which was then levied as land cess. Unless such a reservation is satisfactorily established, it must be presumed that whatever amount was levied under the head of land cess was waived under that contract. In the view I have taken above, it is not quite necessary to deal with the contract on the basis that education cess is land cess itself. I have, however, dealt with this aspect, as it was also the subject of arguments before me. In any view, the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover any portion of the education tax from the defendants. In the result, the second appeals are dismissed with costs.

Government Pleader—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The question that has been referred to me is : what is the court-fee payable in respect of the memorandum of objections in second appeals Nos. 141 to 144 of 1928. The original suits were instituted by ryots under S. 95, Madras Estates Land Act. In the plaint there are distinct allegations to the effect that proper notice was not served on the ryots and that the amount of rent due was wrongly stated in the demand. The first Court dismissed the suits filed by the ryots ; but on appeal by the ryots, the lower appellate Court came to the conclusion that the amount of rent due was not Rs. 4,000 and odd but only Rs. 2,000 odd. Accordingly, the lower appellate Court reversed the decrees passed by the first Court dismissing the suits, and in modification of the said decrees declared that the distraint made by the landlord was not wholly void but was valid only to the extent of Rs. 2,000 odd, the amount of rent found by it. The landlord has preferred these Second Appeals Nos. 141 to 144 of 1928. The ryots, who are the respondents, have filed memoranda of objections in each of these second appeals ; and the question that has been referred to me is, as I have already stated, what is the proper amount of court-fee payable in respect of these memoranda of objections.

In order to find out what exactly is the amount of court-fee payable in respect of a document, one has to see, first of all, what the exact nature of the document is. I have read through these memoranda of objections, and I am not able to find any ground which goes to impugne the distraint proceedings in toto; on the other hand what I find is that each one of the grounds taken in the memoranda only attacks the finding of the lower appellate Court as to the exact amount due to the landlord. Thus my decision is confined to a case where it is not the whole of the distraint that is sought to be set aside by virtue of some plea which goes to the root of the whole matter ; in the present cases the objection taken by the ryots to the decree of the lower appellate Court is confined, as I understand the same, to the question of the amount of rent due. Therefore the question that I have got to ask myself is this: is the subject matter of these memoranda of objections capable of being estimated in money value within the meaning of Cl. 17 (b), Sch. 2, Court-fees Act. Before I consider this question, it may perhaps be convenient that I should refer to one or two sections of the Estates Land Act which deal with the question as to how far distraint proceedings could be held to be partly valid and partly invalid. S. 53 (2) enacts that:

"a pattah tendered by a landholder which in the opinion of the Collector is partially but not entirely correct shall nevertheless be enforceable to the extent to which it is found to be correct."

Reference was made by the learned Government Pleader, to S. 104, Estates Land Act in this connexion. The learned advocate who appeared for the ryots argued that Cl. (2), S. 53, would apply only to suits for acceptance of pattahs and muchilikas and the section could not apply to suits such as those I have now to deal with, namely, suits brought under S. 95 to set aside distraint proceedings. I find on a reference to the case of Raghunatha Rao v. Vellamoonji Gounden (1), that this very question came up for consideration before two learned Judges of this Court, Oldfield and Seshagiri Iyer, JJ., and both of them came to the conclusion that the application of the section was not confined to pattah suits, as is now contended for by the learned advocate on behalf of the ryots. I need not go into the details of the reasoning of the learned Judges, for the said decision is binding upon me. It was held in that case that a distraint could be upheld to the extent of the amount legally due to the landlord though the landlord purported to effect the distraint in respect of a larger amount. This is a decision under the present Estates Land Act, and consequently is a direct authority on the construction of the section in question. I may just quote one sentence from the judgment of Seshagiri Ayyar, J., at p. 1143 of the report "it would serve," his Lordship says :

"no purpose therefore to enact in Cl. (2), S. 53, that the landlord can enforce his claim for rent in a revenue Court in so far as the pattah correctly states it. If the decisions prior to the Estates Land Act can furnish any assistance, I feel no doubt that they would support this conclusion of mine. Prior to the passing of the new Act, the predominant view was that a distraint for an excess amount should not be avoided altogether."

Before the Estates Land Act no doubt there was some difference of opinion on this particular point but as remarked by Seshagiri Ayyar, J., the predominant view was that a distraint would be valid to the extent of the rent properly due. In Venkatakrishna Pillai v. Muthualu Reddi (2), Sir Arnold White, C. J. and Krishnan, J., say as follows:

"It is argued that the attachment is bad as it was for a larger amount than what the District Judge held to be due. It has been held by this Court in recent cases that the attachment is good for the amount actually due. A case of sale stands on a different footing from a case of attachment. The case before us is only one of distraint, not of sale."

The learned Judges held that the distraint was valid to the extent of the proper amount of rent due. A similar view was also taken in Bhupatirazu v. Ramasami (3), where the distraint was made in respect of a sum of Rs. 44-6-0, whereas the amount due was only Rs. 22-3-0, just half the amount claimed by the landholder ; and the Court held that the distraint was valid to the extent of Rs. 22-3-0 found by the Court to be properly due.

Having regard to the predominant view that prevailed in Madras prior to the enactment of the Estates Land Act, and having regard to the decision in Raghunatha Rao v. Vellamoonji Goundan (1) on S. 53 of the present Act, there could be no doubt on the question that it is open to Courts to declare a distraint valid in part and invalid in part. The decree of the lower appellate Court, in the cases before me, as I have mentioned already, declared the distraint to be valid to the extent of Rs. 2,000 odd. It is against such a decree these memoranda of objections have been filed, and as the memoranda raise on question that goes to the root of the whole matter and render the whole distraint invalid, and since the grounds raise only question as regards the exact amount of rent due, I think that the present is a case which does not come within Cl. 17 (b), Sch. 2, Court-fees Act. The conclusion I have come to is that it is possible to estimate at a money value the subject matter in dispute in these memoranda of objections. On the side of the Crown my attention was also drawn to Cl. 8, S. 7 of the Act where the legislature deals with suits to set aside attachment of lands as capable of being so valued. The case in Bunwari Lal v. Sheo Sankar Missar (4), was also quoted as throwing light on the question as to what exactly is the meaning to be attached to the words "capable of being estimated in money value," occuring in Cl. 17 (b), Court-fees Act.

For the reasons I have mentioned, I have come to the conclusion that the memoranda of objections in the cases before me are capable of being estimated in money value, and consequently the court-fee payable in respect of the same is not the fixed fee of Rs. 15 but an ad-valorem fee on the value of each of these memoranda. The learned advocate for the ryots will be called upon to specify the value of these memoranda and pay ad valorem fee thereon, within a month.

Trusts Act S. 66—Trustee wrongfully mixing trust property with his own—His estate becoming insolvent and hence unable to pay debts as they fell due—Co-trustees are entitled to preferential charge over his outstanding debts.

If a trustee mixes up trust property with his own without the consent and knowledge of his co-trustees and there are no tangible assets which he can be said to have purchased, the beneficiaries are entitled to a charge over the whole fund. [P 28 C 1]

The trustees managing a school had handed over a part of the trust property to a co-trustee, who wrongfully utilized it for his own business which coming to a standstill, his estate became insolvent, and he could not pay the debts as they fell due though he had large outstanding debts due to him.

Coutts-Trotter, C. J.—I have so little confidence in my own ability to decide correctly a case involving wide principles of equity, that I am relieved to find that the amount here at stake is sufficient to enable an appeal to be taken to a higher tribunal. I approach this case with much more than the diffidence expressed by Lord Sumner in Sinclair v. Brougham (1), and feel myself under the ban expressed by Thesigar, L. J., in Hallett's case Knatchbull v. Hallett (2), as to the unlikelihood of common law Judges even of the eminence of Lord Bramwell being able to understand any but the simplest and most firmly estab lished of equity doctrines.

My duty is simply to set out the facts which are practically undisputed, and to apply to those facts the principles I conceive to be laid down by the decided cases as best as I can.

Mr. Ramanathan Chetty was a Nattukottai Chetty carrying on the usual business of a banker and money lender. He was also a member of a body who conducted the affairs of an endowed School at Devakotta. A large sum of money was in the hands of the trustees on behalf of the School and they entrusted to Ramanatha's custody a part of it amounting to some Rs. 40,000. In respect of that he was clearly in a fiduciary position. He put that sum into his own business without the knowledge or consent of his co-trustees; his business came to a standstill, and he was adjudicated an insolvent on 20th July 1925. The estate was insolvent in the sense that it could not meet its debts as they fell due, but it had very considerable assets outstanding in the form of book debts, and those assets will doubtless in time be realized. The sole question before us is whether the bankrupt's co-trustees are relegated to the position of ordinary creditors in the insolvency, or are entitled to say that they stand on a higher footing and are entitled to a charge on that whole estate in priority to other creditors on the basis of following their moneys which have been misappropriated to the fund in which they must be supposed to have been sunk.

I have most carefully perused the cases that the diligence of counsel has placed before us; and I wish to express my indebtedness for the assistance they have given us. The guiding principles, as I conceive them to be, are laid down in two great judgments, that of Jessel M. R. In re, Hallett (2), and that of Lord Haldane in Sinclair v, Brougham (1). I do not propose to examine the early common law cases, though they have been cited to us, because, as Jessel, M. R. points out, the Judges were then dominated by the idea that money being unidentifiable, it could in no case be followed, a doctrine eliminated by "modern equity," to use his own language. I take these propositions to be indisputable; and in stating them I use throughout for brevity the term 'trustee' to cover all cases of persons who stand in a fiduciary position and 'cesti que trust' to cover the cases of all those towards whom the persons I have called 'trustees' stand in that position.

That if the trustee keeps the sums entrusted to him entirely separate from his own moneys, as by putting them in cash in a bag, to use Sir G. Jessel's instance, or by putting them into a separate account at a Bank, the cesti que trust can follow them.

That if the trustee can be shown to have converted the trust money into a specific thing such as a piece of land, or a definite parcel of goods remaining in his possession, the cesti que trust can take that land or those goods as representing his money or claim a lien on them for the money expended on the purchase. Then comes the more common case where the trustee has mixed up the trust money with his own. I think here it is clearly that.

If the trustee has bought land or goods out of moneys which are partly his own and partly those of the cesti que trust the cesti que trust can claim a charge on the property for the amount of his funds which was expended in the purchase. That is not always easy of ascertainment, and the working rule appears to be that if the trust moneys have disappeared and no residue is left, the cesti que trust will be entitled to a charge on the whole until it is ascertained what portion of the purchase moneys was contributed by the trustee out of his own funds and not out of the trust money, the onus being cast on the trustee to prove what portion came from his own funds. When that is ascertained, the cesti que trust will only have a lien on the property for the amount ascertained to be due to the misuse of the trust moneys.

Then arises the case where the trust moneys have not only been mixed with the trustee's moneys, but where there is no tangible asset which could be alleged to have been acquired with the trust funds wholly or partially. This is the case before us, because here what the trustee did was to put the trust moneys in his hands into his own business, and subject them to all the fluctuations of that business and it is clear that the business was so unsuccessful that the actual funds in the hands of the Official Assignee as at this date realized amount to nothing. It was strenuously argued by Mr. Doraiswami Aiyar that in such circumstances the Court could not give a preferential charge over prospective as distinct from actually tangible assets of the business. That argument ultimately seems to me to imply that a trustee has only to put trust moneys into a business and then and there the cesti que trust is debarred from invoking the equitable doctrine, and sinks to the position of an unsecured and unpreferred creditor of the estate. That view seems to me to have been negatived so long ago as 1853 by the judgment of Turner ,L. J. in Pennell v. Deffell (3). At pp. 388 and 389 the learned Lord, Justice takes the very cause we have to consider as a clear illustration of a case to which the equitable doctrine would apply.

(3) 4 De. G. M. & G. 372.

We were much pressed with the case of In re, Hallett & Co. Ex parte, Blane (4). After a careful consideration of that case, I think it decides no more than this; that a paper adjustment cannot be treated as a passing of moneys of the cesti que trust into the hands of the trustee. On p. 242 the point is first and emphatically taken by Davey, L. J. Mr. Muir Mackenzie in argument had said:

"The £1600 was in fact received by Hallett & Co."

Davey L. J. then said:

"No: all that happened was that they got a credit for that amount."

I read the judgments which follow as proceeding on those lines viz., that while you can follow money, you cannot follow a mere book adjustment.

I think that the learned Judge came to the right conclusion and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs, payable by the Official Assignee out of the Estate. Certificate for two counsels. Official Assignee to take his costs out of the estate.

Anantakrishna Ayyar, J.—M. A. R. N. Ramanathan Chettiar, a Nattukottai Chetty carrying on money lending transaction under the firm name of M. A. R. N. Ramanathan Chettiar, was a member of the committee of the Nagarathar Sri Meenkshi Vidyasala Paripalana Sangam and also the treasurer of the Sangam. The Sangam is compendiously called "Nagarathar School, Devakottai". In his capacity as treasurer, Ramanathan Chettiar collected various sums subscribed for the school which the Sangam was maintaining. He paid these sums into his own business, and in 1925 the firm was adjudicated insolvent. At that time there stood to the credit of of the trust in his firm's books a sum of over Rs. 40,000. The Committee of the Nagarathar School, Devakotta, claimed that the said amount should be paid in full by the Official Assignee in preference to the other debts due to other ordinary creditors of the firm. . The Official Assignee passed an order on 25th May 1927 to the effect that the relationship between the Nagarathar School, Devakotta and the insolvent was that of a debtor and creditor and no more. The Official Assignee went further and held that:

(4) [1894] 2 Q. B. 237=63 L. J. Q. B. 573=42 W. R. 305=1 Manson 25=70 L. T. 361.

"even assaming for the purpose that the insolvent was in a fiduciary relationship and that he acted improperly in investing the moneys of the school in his firm, the same could not be identified or earmarked. When the firm was adjudicated insolvent there was no cash and no part of the assets could be followed by the beneficiary."

The Official Assignee accordingly held that the school authorities were in no better position than the other unsecured creditors of the insolvent and that they could not claim any preferential payment.

The school authorities appealed to the learned Judge sitting in insolvency against the order of the Official Assignee. The learned Judge Waller, J. allowed the appeal and gave the school authorities a first charge for the full amount of their claim, on the realization of the debts due to the firm of the insolvent.

The Official Assignee has preferred this appeal against the order of the learned Judge and contends that the school authorities are not entitled to rank higher than the ordinary unsecured creditors of the insolvent.

Before discussing the question of law raised by Mr. S. Doraiswami Iyer the learned counsel for the appellant, I think it is better just to refer to the finding of fact arrived at by the learned Judge. In the course of the judgment the learned Judge has recorded the following admission made before him by the counsel who appeared for the Official Assignee:

"Mr. S. Doraiswami Iyer for the Official Assignee concedes that he is unable to support the view that the relation between the insolvent and the trust was one of debtor and creditor. He admits that Ramanathan Chetty was a trustee and received the trust funds as a trustee and mixed it with the funds of his own business."

As a trustee of the Nagarathar School, the insolvent was entirely in the wrong in utilising the trust funds in connexion with his own business. As the learned Judge remarks:

"there can be no question as to the wrongful nature of Ramanathan Chetty's action, for the mingling itself was wrongful."

The question then is whether the beneficiary (the school) is entitled to a first charge on the trade assets of Ramanathan Chetty's firm. S. 66, Trusts Act (2 of 1882) enacts as follows:

"Where the trustee wrongfully mingles the trust property with his own, the beneficiary is entitled to a charge on the whole fund for the amount due to him."

The learned counsel for the appellant contends that the beneficiary is entitled to a charge for the trust money only if he can trace it to a specific fund. The trust funds have been admittedly utilized by the insolvent in connexion with his money lending business. It is not now possible to say which particular asset due to the firm represents the trust moneys. In these circumstances it is argued for the Official Assignee that the beneficiary is entitled only to rank as an ordinary creditor along with the other creditors of the insolvent. In support of his contention the learned counsel strongly relied on In re, Hallett & Company, ex parte Blane (4). The following passage on p. 244 in the judgment of Lord Justice Lopes was relied upon:

"If trust money can be traced it is liable to be followed by the trustee and will not pass to the trustee in bankruptcy: but if it has been mixed up with other money so as not to be distinguishable, it cannot be followed."

This case, however, has been understood by text-writers as authority for the proposition that in the case of moneys there must be in fact a payment, since "the doctrine of following" depends upon identification of the subject matter; and where money not actually received was credited to an account, the doctrine was held inapplicable: Godefroi on Trust and Trustees, Edn. 4, pp. 564 and 565. In Lewin on Trusts, Edn. 12, p. 1155 it is stated as follows:

"In order, however, that the rule as to following trust money should apply, there must be something specific which is capable of being identified as that into which the money has been converted, and where a transaction has been carried out by a set off in account so that no cheque, note, coin or credit has ever passed or existed in specicie, the doctrine is inapplicable."

Turning to the judgment delivered In re, Hallett & Co's case (4) we find that Lord Esher (Master of Rolls) says at p. 244.

"Hallet & Company did not in truth receive any money; they entered into a transaction with Hewitt and Company, the result of which was that no money passed . . . . Hallett and Company did not in fact receive any money or tender of money or anything tangible which it would be possible to follow or to lay hands upon—all that can be shown is a settlement of account; and a settlement of account cannot be followed."

Similarly Lopes, L. J. says:

"So far as regards the following of this sum of £ 1,600 the attempt fails at the first stage, for that particular £ 1,600 was never received by Hallett & Company; no money had passed; there had been a mere settlement with Hewitt & Company. Then again this specific sum never passed on to Cocks & Company; and the second stage fails too."

Similarly at p. 245 Davey, L. J. also makes similar remarks:

"This money was not received by them (Hallett & Company) in any sense which is material to the present purpose. Nothing was received by them in specie, notes, cheques or coin; there was no credit existing in specie; nothing which the cesti que trust could follow and say that the property had been converted into."

Therfore, the case In re, Hallett & Co's case (4) could be distinguished on the ground that in that case it was found that the very first step that the beneficiary should prove in such cases, namely, that the trustee received moneys of the beneficiary was not proved. On the other hand authority seems to be fairly clear that where a trustee wrongfully mingles the trust property with his own, the beneficiary is entitled to a charge on the whole fund for the amount due to him: S. 66, Trusts Act, Halsbury s Laws of England, Vol. 28, p. 207, Ss. 415 and 416. It was admitted that where trust money is wrongfully laid out in the purchase of specific real or personal property, the beneficiary can elect to have a charge upon it for the amount of the trust money: see authorities referred to in para. 415 of Halsbury's Laws of England Vol. 28. If therefore the trustee in this case had purchased a going concern of another, with the trust funds, then the beneficiary would have an option either to take the purchased property or elect to have a charge upon it for the amount of the trust money. If instead of purchasing a going concern, the trustee wrongfully utilises the trust money for starting a business, or for carrying on a business of his own, then it would seem that the beneficiary is entitled equally to elect to have a charge upon the assets of the business for the amount of the trust money.

It was, however, contended by the learned counsel for the appellant that the doctrine of following trust property is not applied, and could not in the nature of things apply when the trust funds are wrongfully applied by the trustee in a trade or business. If the doctrine is not confined in its application to cases of mingling of trust moneys with the trustee's own money where there is a mingled fund available if the doctrine also applies to cases where with the money of the beneficiary the trustee wrongfully buys other property, and if the beneficiary could in such cases claim to have a charge on such property to the extent of the trust money utilised wrongfully by the trustee, I am not clear why the doctrine should not apply when the trustee instead of utilising the trust money for the purchase of property utilizes it in a trade or business of his own. Having regard to the findings in the present case and to the admission made on the Official Assignee's behalf, as recorded by the learned Judge, there is no difficulty as regards facts in the present case; for as already mentioned, it was admitted before the learned Judge on behalf of the Official Assignee that

"Ramanathan Chetty was a trustee and received the trust fund as a trustee and mixed it with the funds of his own business."

The learned counsel for the respondent cited to us the case of Pennel v. Defell (3) at p. 558 (of 43 E. R.) Lord Justice Turner. observed as follows:

"It is, I apprehend, an undoubted principle of this Court that between cesti que trust and trustee, & all parties claiming under the trustee otherwise than by purchase for valuable consideration without notice, all property belonging to a trust, however much it may be changed or altered in its nature or character, and all the fruit of such property, whether in its original or in its altered state, continues to be subject to or affected by the trust, and from this principle I do not understand the Master of the Rolls to have in any degree dissented. Several cases illustrating the principle were cited in the argument, but perhaps it cannot be better illustrated than by referring to a case of familiar, almost daily, occurrence, the case of trust moneys employed in trade. An executor of a deceased partner continues his capital in the trade with concurrence of the surviving partners, and carries on the trade withh them. The very capital itself may consist only of the balance which at the death of the partner was due to him on the result of the partnership account. That capital may have no existence but in the stock in trade and debts of the partnership. The stock in trade and debts may undergo a continual course of change and fluctuation, and yet this Court follows the trust capital throughout all its ramifications, and gives to the beneficiaries of the deceased partner's estate the fruits derived from that capital, so continually altered and changed. We have here, I think, the most perfect instance of the extent to which the doctrine of "following trust property" has been carried by the Court, an instance, too, wdich exemplifies the difficulties with which the Court has felt bound to grapple for the purpose of carrying out that doctrine for nothing can be more difficult, nothing more inconvenient, than to follow out such a case to its results."

We were also referred to In re, Hallett's estate (2), to the judgment of Jessel (Master of the Rolls) at p. 707 Et Sequa ; the decision of the House of Lords in Sinclair v Brougham (1) was also referred to and several passages from the speeches of the learned Lords who took part in that case were read to us. For example at p. 438, Lord Dunedin's speech, the following passage occurs.

"Now there are certain situations, of which Hallett's case is an example, where the one sharing party has a right to say to the other, it is not in your mouth to say that the assets are not all mine to the extent of my full claim. I do not think this is one of those positions. Neither party is here in any fiduciary position to the other."

Similarly,, passages at p. 418 in the speech of the Lord Chancellor (Viscount Haldane) were also read to us.

I think that some of the passages occurring in the above case could be construed as laying down the principle contended for by the respondent, though it may be said that the point for decision before the House was quite a different one, and that the learned Lords were not considering the exact point now before the Court.

In Perry on Trusts, Edn. 6, Vol. 2, para. 828, p. 1364, it is said that :

"to entitle the trust creditor to preference, it must at least appear that the funds remaining for distribution contain the proceeds of the trust."

Again in para. 838, it is mentioned that :

"if the executor of a deceased partner is also the surviving partner and he continues the deceased partner's capital without authority in the business, and changes the property many times over, the Court follows the trust fund through all these changes and gives the beneficiaries of the deceased partner's estate the capital and all its proceeds or gains in the business in which it has been employed."

The only Indian case, I am aware of, which is somewhat similar to the present case, is that reported in Mulrazu Lakshmi v. Official Assignee of Madras (5) decided by Sadasiva Iyer and Napier, JJ :

"Where a jeweller who was entrusted by the claimant with sovereigns and gold to be made into a jewel for him converted the same into cash and subsequently became bankrupt, and after the Official Assignee took charge of his estate, the owner of the sovereigns and gold put forward a claim that he was entitled to a preferential treatment and to get out of the estate the full value of the sovereigns and gold entrusted by him to the bankrupt,"

(5) [1915] 28 M. L. J. 403=2 M. L. W. 312 29 I. C. 37=(1915) M. W. N. 262.

the Court held that transaction between the claimant and the jeweller amounted to a bailment and that the jeweller became in consequence a trustee for the claimant in respect of the sovereigns and gold entrusted to him. But as there was no evidence, in that case that the sovereigns and gold formed a portion of the estate taken possession of by the Official Assignee and as there was nothing to identify the same, the Court held that the claimant was not entitled to the benefit of the doctrine of tracing and quasi change, and therefore to any, preferential payment. Sadasiva Iyer, J., at p. 41, says :

"If in this case I could have found my way to decide that the assets taken possession of by the Official Assignee did include, or must have included, the gold or the value of the gold contained in the sovereigns and the bar given by the petitioner to the insolvent, I would be inclined to apply the doctrine of tracing and the doctrine of quasi charge even to the full limits indicated by Lord Dunedin in his judgment in the recent House of Lords case but I do not see my way to differ from the findings of Bakewell, J., that the petitioner has failed to show that the gold or the price of that gold was invested in or formed part of any of the assets taken possession of by the Official Assignee."

Again the learned Judge adds :

"On the finding then that none of the assets found with the insolvent is proved, directly or even by a remote fact from which a reasonable inference could be drawn, to have contained any portion of the petitioner's gold or could have been acquired with the use of the proceeds of that gold, I must and do confirm the order of the learned Judge."

The principle would seem to be that a wrong-doer cannot be permitted to take advantage of his own wrong and that no wrongful act of the trustee could prejudice the right of the beneficiaries, in cases like the present.

I am therefore of opinion that the learned Judge was right in holding that the principle of following trust property applies to the facts and circumstances of the present case. I would therefore dismiss the appeal with costs. Costs to be realized from the estate. Certificate for two counsel. The Official Assignee is entitled to take his costs from out of the estate.

Vaddadi Subbamma and others—Petitioners—Respondents.

Appeal No. 432 of 1927, Decided on 25th August 1929, from order of Sub-Judge, Vizagapatam, D/- 13th October 1927, in E. P. No. 36 of 1927.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 20, R. 12—Order passed by Court in contravention of O. 20, R. 12, is not nullity owing to total want of jurisdiction—It is mere irregular exercise of jurisdiction—Executing Court cannot go behind the decree—Execution—Decree binding.

If the Court fails to conform to the provisions of O. 20, R. 12, it is impossible to hold that the defect is one of inherent incompetency. If it passes an order in contravention of that provision, it is not a nullity owing to total want of jurisdiction. That the Court is competent to award mesne profits cannot be doubted, but in exercising that undoubted jurisdiction, it adopts a wrong procedure. Thus, it is a case of mere irregular exercise of jurisdiction ; and from this it follows that the executing Court cannot go behind the decree to which it is bound to give effect in execution : A. I. R. 1929 Bom. 217, Rel. on. ; 37 I. C. 997, Doubted. [P 31 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 20, R. 12—Application for enquiry into mesne profits made by execution petition—Court can treat it as application in suit—Civil P. C., S. 47 (2).

Where through an error in the decree an application for an enquiry into mesne profits is made by an execution petition, and no further point is involved such as limitation, it is clearly open to the Court to allow a mistake of this kind to be repaired and treat the petition as an application in the suit : A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 473, Ref. [P 31 C 2]

 (c) Civil P. C., O. 20, R. 12—Power to grant future mesne profits vests in Court—Unqualified decree must be construed to have granted past and subsequent profits.

Whether the plaint contains or not a claim to future profits, the power to grant them vests in the Court. Subsequent profits as the very term implies are profits accruing subsequent to the institution of the suit. There is no cause of action as regards such profits at the time of the filing of the plaint. It is by virtue of a special provision that such profits can be claimed or awarded. In short, the decree, when it awards mesne profits without qualifying words, must be construed to have granted past as well as subsequent profits : 8 Cal. 178 (P. C.); 43 Cal. 650 ; 12 W. R. 75 and A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 182 ; Rel. on. : 2 I.A. 219 (P. C.), Expl. [P 32 C 2]

(d) Civil P. C., O. 20, R. 12—Court ordering that mesne profits be determined in execution proceedings — Court should be held to intend to award mesne profits and decree-holder is entitled to claim them.

Where a decree says "it is further ordered that mesne profits be determined by a separate enquiry in execution proceedings", though there are no express words awarding mesne profits to the decree-holder, to make the decree consistent with itself it must be held that the Court intended to award mesne profits and that the decree-holder is entitled to claim them if there are no other objections in his way for doing so. [P 33 C 1]

T. Rangachariar, V. Govindarajachari and B. V. Ramanarasu—for Appellants.

G. Lakshmanna and Y. Suryanarayana—for Respondents.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The point arises in execution : Is the plaintiff entitled to mesne profits under the decree ? The learned Subordinate Judge has upheld the plaintiff's claim and the correctness of his order is called in question in this appeal.

A few facts may be stated. The plaintiff, who was a minor at the date of the suit claimed her deceased husband's properties from the defendants, who were alleged to have been in unlawful possession. Her husband died in 1913 and the suit was filed in 1919. Judgment was delivered for the plaintiff on 10th February 1922, directing delivery of possession of certain immovable properties. The judgment contains a further direction which is now material. It runs thus :

"The mesne profits will be determined by a separate enquiry in execution proceedings".

An appeal A. S. No. 220 of 1922 was taken to the High Court and in 1925 the judgment of the trial Court was confirmed subject to a slight modification, which I need not notice.

The plaintiff applied to the lower Court (on 6th April 1927) by way of execution of the decree, for mesne profits past and future ; in other words, she filed an execution petition claiming those profits. The learned Subordinate Judge, as I have said, has made an order, dated 13th October 1927 in her favour. The appellants attack that order on five distinct grounds, and I shall proceed to deal with each of them.

It is first contended that there is no effective decree in respect of mesne profits capable of execution but the direction to which I have referred awards profits by necessary implication. The order directing enquiry into mesne profits necessarily involves an award of those profits ; for, why should there be an enquiry unless the profits were assumed to have been awarded ? The decree must be construed in a reasonable sense and as Mr. Lakshmanna for respondent 1 points out, should a different view be taken, the direction in the decree would be entirely futile. This is a result that every Court must avoid, if possible.

It is next contended that under the Code of Civil Procedure, it was in excess of the Court's powers to direct an enquiry into profits in execution proceedings. On this point, the present Code, departing from the previous one, clearly lays down that mesne profits should be awarded by the decree itself, implying, that the enquiry should not be postponed to the stage of execution. But unfortunately, Courts in the mofussil frequently frame their decrees, as if the old Procedure Code is still in force in this respect and this repeatedly leads to trouble. While deploring this practice, we must still ask ourselves, is it a question of complete want of competency, or, of erroneous exercise of jurisdiction ? The distinction between absence of jurisdiction and irregular exercise of jurisdiction has been frequently pointed out. If the Court fails to conform to the provisions of O. 20, R. 12, it is impossible to hold that the defect is one of inherent incompetency. I agree with Lakshmibhai v. Rabji Bikhaji (1), and hold that if a Court passes an order in contravention of that provision, it is not a nullity owing to total want of jurisdiction. That the Court is competent to award mesne profits cannot be doubted, but in exercising that undoubted jurisdiction, it adopts a wrong procedure. Thus, it is a case of mere irregular exercise of jurisdiction ; and from this it follows that the executing Court cannot go behind the decree to which it is bound to give effect in execution. If Ganga Prasad Dutt v. Hemangin Debi (2), takes a different view(which I doubt), I respectfully dissent from it.

The third objection of the appellants relates to the form of the proceeding They contend that, notwithstanding the error in the decree, the application for an enquiry into mesne profits should have been made in the suit itself. As the plaintiff filed instead, an execution petition, it is urged that it is incompetent. This contention receives support from Ramchandra Raja v. Bhujanga Row (3). But as on the facts of this case no further point is involved such as limitation, it is clearly open to the Court to allow a mistake of this kind to be repaired and treat the petition as an application in the suit This is the view of the learned Subordinate Judge, and I unhesitatingly accept it. Moreover, as he points out, when the parties came to Court on a previous occasion, the defendants objected that the plaintiff should seek relief by filing an execution petition. Apart from the inconsistency involved in their position, I am satisfied that the present contention must be rejected.

The fourth objection, namely, that the application is barred by res judicata, is equally untenable. The facts that bear on this point may be briefly stated. There was a previous petition filed by the plaintiff for an enquiry into mesne profits and for the passing of a final decree (E. A. 1120 of 1926). This is precisely what is contemplated by O. 20, R. 12 of the present Code. Such a petition presupposes that the request is made in the suit itself and not in execution. But the decree having followed the old Code, the plaintiff's application, though, as I have said, must be deemed to have been made in the suit, was wrongly described as one in execution ; that is, it was called an "E. A." (Execution Application). To this, objection was taken by the judgment-debtors, namely, that the heading should have been not "E. A." but "E. P". R. 3, Civil Rules of Practice says thus :

1. Execution Petition means a petition to the Court for the execution of any decree or order.

2. Execution application means an application to the Court made in a pending execution petition.

The form adopted by the plaintiff is that prescribed by R. 149, which deals with execution applications. The chief feature, on the other hand, of an execution petition, as is well known, is the tabular form referred to in O. 21, R. 11, Civil P. C. The objection that was urged, as I have pointed out, was that the heading should have been " E. P "

(1) A. I. R. 1921 Bom. 217.
(2) [1917] 37 I. C. 997.
(3) A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 473.

and not "E. A." An objection more plausible might have been taken, namely, that the plaintiff's request conformed to the present Code, whereas the decree was framed under the repealed provision But it must be noted that this seemingly valid objection was not the one taken. But the objection raised was upheld by the Court and the following order dated 22nd March 1927 was made :

"As admitted by the decree-holder's vakil an E. P. is necessary and this petition is not maintainable. The petition is rejected."

The above order becomes intelligible when it is remembered that "E. P." is used in it, as distinguished from "E.A.". Every one concerned missed the substance of the thing and it is now said that this order operates as res judicata. The previous order decided nothing, beyond stating what the form of the petition was to be. As I have pointed out in dealing with objection 3, the order itself was misconceived, for what the plaintiff was competent to file, was not an E. P. but a petition in the suit itself. Be that as it may, I fail to see how the previous order can possibly bar the present application. There was no decision in any sense on the merits and in such circumstances, as held in the case already referred to Ramchandra Raju v. Bhujanga Row (3) the rule of res judicata cannot apply.

The fifth objection of the appellants now remains to be dealt with. Mr. Rangachariar on their behalf contends that in any event the plaintiff cannot, under the decree as it stands, obtain mesne profits subsequent to the suit. There is some force in what Mr Lakshmanna suggests that this objection is a clear afterthought ; for, certain previous proceedings show that the defendant equally with the plaintiff, understood the decree as granting both past and future profits. But still the question is, what is the true construction of that decree ? In the plaint, the claim was confined to past mesne profits and the relief was valued with reference to such profits only. The lower Court refers inter alia to the fact, that the plaint contains a prayer in general terms, "that the Court may grant such other reliefs as it deems fit and reasonable." On this circumstance, I do not propose to rely. The decree, however, relates to mesne profits generally. The question is, what is the rule applicable to the construction of such a decree ?

The leading case on the point is the decision of the Privy Council in Fakharuddin Mohamed v. Official Trustee of Bengal (4). In clear and unequivocal terms their Lordships declare:

"that possession with wasilat (mesne profits) means wasilat up to the time of possession being delivered."

The reasoning adopted is this. Whether the plaint contains or not a claim to future profits, the power to grant them vests in the Court. Subsequent profits as the very term implies are profits accruing subsequent to the institution of the suit. There is no cause of action as regards such profits at the time of the filing of the plaint. It is by virtue of a special provision that such profits can be claimed or awarded: see Bhupendra Kumar v. Poorna Chandra (5) at p. 655 This is an exception to the general rule that the relief granted is confined to rights accruing before the date of the suit. The legislature has expressly enabled the Courts to grant such relief with the beneficent object of preventing unnecessary litigation. Therefore, the Court must, while passing the decree (unless a contrary intention is manifest), be deemed to have exercised its powers to the full, for, otherwise its decree fails to give effect to what is plainly the intention of the legislature. Their Lordships observe:

"Wasilat by law is demandable up to the time of possession; and the question is whether the Court intended to give to the plaintiff that amount of wasilat to which he was undoubtedly entitled by law in this action, or whether they intended to cut his claim for wasilat into two, and to give him in this suit so much only as accrued up to the time of the commencement of the suit, and to leave him to bring a separate suit for the rest. According to that interpretation, they could not have intended to give him wasilat up to the time of the decision, which was three or four years after the commencement of the suit. It appears to their Lordships that the more reasonable construction of this document which undoutedly might have been clearer—is that the Court, with a view to carrying out the object of the legislature, namely, the prevention of unnecessary litigation and multiplication of suits, intended in this suit to give, with possession, that wasilat which was by law claimable up to the time of possession."

(5) [1916] 43 Cal. 650=13 C. L. J. 132=8 I.C. 34=15 C. W. N. 506.

Their Lordships next cite two cases and to one of them I shall refer. In Dhurn Narain v. Bundhoo Ram (6) in the plaint, mesne profits were claimed only to the date of the institution of the suit. The decree passed was "one for possession of land with wasilat." The question arose in execution, just as in the present case: is the plaintiff entitled to subsequent mesne profits? Jackson, J., with whom Markby, J. concurred, stated the law thus:

"When the Court in its decree ordered that the plaintiff should receive mesne profits, I think it must be held to have meant that he should receive such mesne profits down to the date of the delivery of possession."

In short, the decree, when it awards mesne profits without qualifying words, must be construed to have granted past as well as subsequent profits. The case relied on by Mr. Rangachariar, Sadasiva Pillai v. Ramalinga Pillai (7) does not militate against this view, for, what it lays down is, that if future profits are not awarded by the decree, the Court cannot grant them in execution. This is not a case bearing on the construction of decrees relating to mesne profits. As a matter of fact, this was one of the cases relied on for the appellant in the course of the argument in the case already cited: Fakharuddin Mohamed v. Official Trustee of Bengal (4). Their Lordships explain that case by observing that there the decree was silent on the subject of wasilat and it could not therefore be added in the course of the execution: see p. 207 (of 8 I. A.). That ruling throws no light on the construction of the decree which says, "possession with wasilat," which, upon a reasonable construction, means "wasilat up to the time of possession being delivered." Mr. Rangachari has been at pains to distinguish this case Fakharuddin Mohamed v. Official Trustee of Bengal (4) on the ground that the decree was construed with reference to the particular plaint before the Court. In that case, as in this, mesne profits were claimed, only up to the date of the suit. Similarly, there, as here, in valuing the relief, only past profits were taken into consideration. But the suit was described as brought to obtain possession of the zamindari "the mesne profits thereof," that is, mesne profits generally. Their Lordships in the earlier part of their judgment observe that the plaint is capable of being construed as containing a comprehensive claim for mesne profits. Their Lordships recognize that this is too slender a ground for resting their judgment on and they therefore begin their discussion on the subject, with the significant words: "But be that as it may:" see p. 206 (of 8 I. A.). The view I am taking receives support from Promodenath Roy v. Secy. of State (8), especially the judgment of Cuming, J., in that case. (For the learned Judges' observations on this point: see A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 182 at pp. 183 and 184. The report in 53 Cal. 992 does not contain the relevant passages.)

Mr. Rangachari next contends that unless there is an express prayer for subsequent profits, they cannot be awarded under O. 20, R. 12, by the decree. He argues that this result follows from the wording of the present section, which, it is said, is different from that of the repealed provisions. I cannot accede to this contention. Such difference as exists in the language is due solely to the fact that the subject matter of two sections in the previous Code (Ss. 211 and 212 of the Code of 1882 and Ss. 196 and 197 of the Code of 1859) was condensed into the limits of one section in the present Code. Moreover, even as a matter of strict construction, a suit for past mesne profits is surely a suit for mesne profits (under O. 20, R. 12); for the words "mesne profits" include past profits. I am, therefore, clearly of the opinion that the lower Court's conclusion is right.

The result is the appeal is dismissed with costs and the memorandum of objections is also dismissed, but I make no order as to costs.

Madhavan Nair, J.— This appeal arises out of execution proceedings. The decree-holder respondent instituted O. S. No. 28 of 1919 in the Sub-Court, Vizagapatam, for possession of properties with mesne profits. In the plaint—see para. 3 (h)—she claimed specifically past profits from 1914 to 1919. The plaint was silent regarding future mesne profits. In the schedule relating to the valuation of the suit for purposes of court-fee and jurisdiction the amount of past profits for the years 1914 to 1918 was included as one of the items. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree in the plaintiff's favour. The relevant portion of the decree is as follows:

"This Court doth order and decree that the plaintiff do recover possession of the suit properties described in Schs. A and B except items 9, 14, 16 and 19 of the plaint A schedule hereto attached. . . . . It is further ordered that the mesne profits be determined by a separate enquiry in execution proceedings."

On appeal (A. S. No. 220 of 1922) this decree was affirmed with a slight modification by the High Court on 31st July 1925. It was found that the plaintiff was entitled to recover a portion of item 16 also. The judgment of the High Court referring to this modification is as follows:

"The decree of the lower Court will therefore be amended by reading for "item 16," "the portion of item 16 covered by Ex. 19." The lower Court directed that mesne profits should be determined separately in execution. As regards this No. 16 it will be for consideration when mesne profits are determined whether the plaintiff should be given mesne profits from this date or from the date of the decree or from any other date, seeing that she neglected to make this application earlier."

The application out of which this appeal arises was made by the decree-holder for the ascertainment of past and future mesne profits. The lower Court passed an order in her favour. In appeal Mr. Rangachariar contends that the respondent is not entitled to claim any amount by way of mesne profits as no decree for profits, either past or future, has been passed in her favour and that if there is such a decree, it gives her only past and not future mesne profits. He also contends that the entire claim is barred by res judicata and that this petition is not maintainable.

Before I deal with these contentions and the respondent's reply to them, I shall dispose of one of the subsidiary contentions of the respondent which is a very simple one and which is based upon the construction of the High Court's decree. This contention is that the High Court's decree, which is the one sought to be executed, makes special provision with regard to future mesne profits. This contention is based on the observations made by the learned Judges regarding mesne profits so far as it relates to item 16 with reference to which the decree was slightly modified. These observations, even if they are made applicable to all the decreed items of property, as has been wrongly done by the amended decree, while as a matter of fact they refer only to item 16, do not in my opinion award any mesne profits to the decree-holder which have not been awarded by the original decree. The learned Judges do not decide this question whether the decree-holder is entitled to get future mesne profits, but they simply state.

"when mesne profits are determined it will be a question for consideration whether the plaintiff would be entitled to future mesne profits."

That leaves the matter exactly where it was according to the terms of the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, and which they confirm by their judgment so far as it relates to the present question. In discussing the point whether the decree-holder is entitled to the past and future mesne profits claimed by her I shall, therefore, confine my attention to the terms of the original decree as it has with regard to mesne profits not been amended by the decree passed by the High Court.

Now coming to the main argument, the appellant's first contention, as I have already observed, is that no decree has been passed by the lower Court for profits, either past or future. His argument is twofold; firstly, that there are no words containing any direction or order in the decree awarding mesne profits, and secondly that even if there be any such direction it is contained in a portion of the decree which the Court had no jurisdiction to pass and, which must, therefore, be treated as of no effect whatever. The decree says :

"It is further ordered that mesne profits be determined by a separate enquiry in execution proceedings."

If it was the intention of the Court to award mesne profits by this direction, I cannot see the necessity for directing any enquiry as regards mesne profits at all. In my opinion it must be presumed from this provision that the Court intended to award mesne profits to the decree-holder. Though there are no express words awarding mesne profits to the decree-holder, to make the decree consistent with itself, we must hold that the Court intended to award mesne profits and that the decree-holder is entitled to claim them if there are no other objections in her way for doing so.

The next argument is that even if we read an implied direction awarding mesne profits in this portion of the decree, it cannot be given any effect as the Subordinate Judge has no jurisdiction to make a decree directing the determination of mesne profits in execution proceedings. This argument has been occasioned by the fact that the Subordinate Judge has in making the provision for mesne profits followed the procedure laid down in the old Code of Civil Procedure. Under the old Code, Ss. 211 and 212, mesne profits were assessed in the execution department; while under the terms of O. 20, R. 12, of the present Code mesne profits are assessed by an enquiry in the suit itself, and when they are determined a final decree will be passed in respect of them. Though the Subordinate Judge's order is not in conformity with the provisions of O. 20, R. 12, of the present Code, it cannot be said that for that reason that portion of the decree directing an enquiry into the mesne profits is absolutely null and void. In support of this part of his argument, Mr. Rangachari relies upon the following observation of Fletcher, J , in Gangā Prasad Dutt v. Ram Hemangin Debi (2) :

"It was in excess of the powers of the Court to suggest that mesne profits would be ascertained in any manner other than that prescribed by the law. The method in which mesne profits are ascertained under the present Civil Procedure Code is not by an enquiry in execution but by an application in the suit itself."

If by this observation it is meant that decretal orders passed by Judges, no doubt erroneously under the present Code, directing an enquiry into mesne profits in the execution department, are to be treated as absolutely null and void, I respectfully differ from the opinion of the learned Judge. The present Code no doubt does not justify the order passed by the lower Court, but it does not follow that the order is, therefore, necessarily void. In my opinion the order of the Subordinate Judge in this respect,though irregular, is not without jurisdiction and, therefore, can be given effect to. This view is supported by the recent decision in Lakshmibhai v. Rabji Bhikaji (1). In that case also the Subordinate Judge instead of passing an order under O. 20, R. 12, ordered the mesne profits to be determined in execution. The learned Judges held that the decree, though irregular was binding between the parties. They observed :

"In the present case we do not think that there was any want of jurisdiction in the Court passing an order in contravention of O. 20, R. 12, but that it was merely an erroneous or irregular exercise of jurisdiction."

In this view, which I am prepared to accept, I must hold that in the present case the Subordinate Judge has passed an executable decree as regards mesne profits in favour of the respondent.

The next question is whether this decree awards to the decree-holder only past mesne profits as contended for by Mr. Rangachariar or future mesne profits as well as contended for by Mr. Lakshmanna. The question is not quite free from difficulty, but after giving my best consideration to it I have come to the conclusion that the respondent's plea should be upheld. It is true that the plaintiff in her plaint did not ask for future mesne profits. In para. 3, as already pointed out, she asked for mesne profits for the year 1914 to 1919 and the valuation in the schedule specified this amount alone as one of the items for computing the court-fee. Our attention has been specially drawn to these aspects of the claim to show that the order of the learned Judge should not be construed as giving a relief to the plaintiff which she did not ask for in her plaint. We are asked to say in view of the pleadings that the mesne profits with respect to which an enquiry has been ordered should be confined to the past mesne profits alone for which the demand was made in the plaint. This contention, however plausible, cannot be accepted in view of the decision of the Privy Council, in Fakharuddin Mohamed Ashan v. Official Trustee Bengal (4), which is the main case relied on by the respondent. In that case: "the plaintiff was declared entitled to possession of the land mentioned in the kabinnama, with wasilat from the commencement of Sarabun 1267; the wasilat to be ascertained by local enquiry."

Though no doubt the plaint was open to the construction that the plaintiff intended to claim future mesne profits as well, their Lordships of the Privy Council make it clear by their observations that they were prepared to uphold the order awarding future mesne profits exclusively on considerations of law which may be applied generally to all cases

Their Lordships after expressing the opinion that the plaint is at all events open to the construction that the plaintiff intended to claim wasilat up to the time of delivery of possession, "although, for the purpose of valuation only, so much was valued as was then due," proceed to state as follows :

"But be that as it may (the italics are mine) they are of opinion, that under S. 196, Act 8 of 1859 it was in the power of the Court, if it thought fit, to make a decree which should give the plaintiff wasilat up to the date of obtaining possession."

Then after quoting S. 196 of the Code of 1859 their Lordships state :

"Wasilat, by law, is demandable up to the time of possession; and the question is whether the Court intended to give to the plaintiff that amount of wasilat to which he was undoubtedly entitled by law in this action, or whether they intended to cut his claim for wasilat into two, and to give him in this suit so much only as accrued up to the time of the commencement of the suit, and to leave him to bring a separate suit for the rest. According to this interpretation, they could not have intended to give him wasilat up to the time of the decision, which was three or four years after the commencement of the suit. It appears to their Lordships that the more reasonable construction of this document which undoubtedly might have been clearer, is that the Court, with a view to carrying out the object of the legislature namely, the prevention of unnecessary litigation and multiplication of suits, intended in this suit to give, with possession, that wasilat which was by law claimable up to the time of possession."

Their Lordships close the discussion by saying that this view was supported by two cases reported in Dhurn Narain Singh v. Bhundhoo Rakh (6) and Bunsee Singh v. Mirza Nazuf Ali Beg (9). If we apply the test laid down in this judgment to the present case, I think it must be held that as the plaintiff is entitled under the present law also to claim mesne profits up to the time of possession, the more reasonable construction of the decree should be that the Court, in awarding her mesne profits, intended to award her such profits as are claimable up to the time of possession. It is contended that their Lordships of the Privy Council awarded future mesne profits because the plaint was open to that construction. But the expression, " be that as it may " occurring in their Lordships' judgment expressed above having regard to the context clearly shows that the judgment is based upon the law that as mesne profits are claimable up to the time of delivery of possession the decree should be construed as giving the plaintiff future mesne profits though he has not asked for it. In this connexion it may be noted that in one of the two cases referred to by their Lordships, namely, Dhurn Narain v. Bundhoo Ram (6), the plaint, as will appear from the judgment, was not open to the construction that future mesne profits were claimed in it. In that case the decree was one for possession of land with wasilat (mesne profits). The decree-holder applied for possession and for wasilat from the period of dispossession down to the time of delivery of possession. The judgment-debtor complained : "that the plaintiff was not entitled under the decree to anything more than wasilat down to the date of the institution of the suit as stated in the plaint, (the italics are mine), see the judgment of Jackson, J."

This complaint was overruled and wasilat having regard to S. 196, Civil P. C., of 1859 was awarded up to the delivery of possession. Jackson, J., stated thus : "when the Court in its decree orders that the plaintiff should receive mesne profits, I think it must be held to have meant that he should receive such mesne profits down to the date of delivery of possession."

In passing, I may note that having regard to the point under discussion the case before us is almost identical with the case in Dhurn Narain v. Bundhoo Ram (6). The decision of the Privy Council, as explained above, was followed in Pramnatharatha Roy v. Secy. of State (8). In that case the terms of the decree were :

"The plaintiffs will be declared entitled to a five annas share of the disputed property and they do get possession of the same, the amount of mesne profits to be ascertained in execution" and though it was urged that the plaintiffs did not claim to recover future mesne profits in their plaint, the learned Judge held that they were entitled to future mesne profits also. It will appear from the judgment of Cuming, J., (more fully reported in 99 I. C. 428, A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 182), with which Page, J., concurred that "future mesne profits," were awarded on a construction of the decree on the principles indicated in Fakharuddin Mahomed v. Official Trustee of Bengal (4), though in the course of the judgment reference is made to the fact that at the commencement of the plaint in the suit it was stated to be a suit for declaration of title and for recovery of possession of immovable property and mesne profits. The contention that the decree-holder should not be given future mesne profits because in the plaint he has asked only for past mesne profits and has not included any claim for future mesne profits should not be allowed to prevail because mesne profits antecedent to the suit and mesne profits pendente lite stand on very different grounds. As observed by Mookerjee, J., in Bhupendra Kumar Chakravarthy v. Purna Chandra Bose (5) at p. 655 :

"As regards the latter, there is no cause of action at the time of the commencement of the suit, and it is only by means of statutory provisions framed with the obvious purpose of shortening litigation, that they can be awarded in the suit even though they accrued subsequent to the institution of the suit. The mesne profits antecedent to the suit have, on the other hand, accrued before the commencement of the suit and although, therefore, the amount may not be stated with absolute certainty, the amount can be mentioned with some approach to approximation."

From this, it will follow that the plaintiff should not be punished for not including in his plaint, a cause of action which had not arisen at the time of the suit and so it is wisely provided by statutory provision 'with the obvious purpose of shortening litigation,' that the future mesne profits may be awarded in the suit though they were not asked for in the plaint. A decree, though framed generally for mesne profits, should therefore be reasonably construed as awarding future mesne profits as well if there is nothing in the decree standing in the way of such a construction. The decree-holder should therefore be given future mesne profits, as mesne profits are demandable up to the time of execution unless, as I have already pointed out, the decree clearly indicates that future mesne profits have not been awarded to the decree-holder. Mr. Rangachariar contends that the use of the definite article 'the' before 'mesne profits' appearing in that part of the decree directing enquiry into mesne profits shows clearly that the enquiry is to be as regards the mesne profits that were asked for, that is, "the past mesne profits," and nothing more.

This argument is objectionable as it lays an unnecessary emphasis on the word "the" and runs counter to the principle of construction, that I have said, should be adopted. It is further contended that the Privy Council decision should not be applied to this case because under O. 20, R. 12, present Code, future mesne profits are not claimable in law in a suit for "past mesne profits." It is conceded that in a suit for "past mesne profits," under Ss. 211 and 212 of the old Code, future mesne profits may be awarded. The provisions in the old Code relating to mesne profits have been recast and they are now contained in O. 20, R. 12, and S. 2, Cl. 12. The words "mesne profits" in O. 20, R. 12, will include past profits. The language used in the rule does not endorse the view suggested by the appellant and no authority has been cited by the learned advocate in support of his proposition. I must, therefore, hold on the authority of the Privy Council decision in Fakharuddin Mahomed v. Official Trustee of Bengal (4) that the lower Court was right in allowing execution of the decree for future mesne profits as well. This conclusion is not opposed to the decision in Sadasiva Pillai v. Ramalinga Pillai (7), for the decree in that case (see page 226 para. 1) was :

"silent as to the mesne profits which has accrued since the institution of the suit," whereas in the present case the decree refers to mesne profits generally.

The next argument advanced for the appellant is that the present application is barred by res judicata on account of the order passed in E. A. No. 1120 of 1926. That was an application filed by the decree-holder for the determination of mesne and subsequent profits in respect of the suit properties from the defendants and to pass a decree accordingly. The application was dismissed by the following order :

"As admitted by the decree-holder's vakil, an E. P. is necessary and the petition is not maintainable. The petition is rejected with costs."

It is argued that the present application asking for the same relief is, therefore, barred by this order. There was a good deal of discussion at the Bar as regards the distinction between an E. P. (execution petition) and an E. A. (execution application): see Rr. 3 and 149, Civil Rules of Practice for the distinction and what was really meant by the admission of the decree-holder's vakil in the prior petition was that :

"an E. P. is necessary and the petition is not maintainable."

In the view that I take of the appellant's argument it is not necessary to discuss this question as I think the plea of res judicata should not be allowed to prevail inasmuch as the prior application was not disposed of by the Court on the merits : see Ramachandra Raju v. Bhujanga Row (3). as is obvious from the order itself.

One more argument advanced on behalf of the appellants remains to be noticed and that is, that the present application headed "in Execution Petition," that is, an E. P. should not have been accepted by the Court, as Courts have no jurisdiction to entertain what are termed "execution applications" for ascertainment of mesne profits under O. 20, R. 12 : see Ramachandra Raju v. Bhujanga Row (3) at p. 48 of 46 M. L. J. I must say that the argument comes with very bad grace from the appellant, for it was on the objection raised by him that the decree-holder consented to file the "execution petition" (see the order in E. A. 1120 of 1926 quoted above). However that may be, the present petition though headed "Execution Petition" is obviously, having regard to its contents, an application in the suit itself for the determination of past and future profits as required under O. 20, R. 12, Civil P. C. As regards the form of the application, therefore, there can be no objection. No other bar to the entertainment of the application has been pleaded in connexion with this argument. I think the lower Court was right in treating the application as an application in the suit for the ascertainment of mesne profits.

Mr. Lakshmanna on behalf of the decree-holder relied on the conduct of the parties as shown by certain proceedings in Court and also on the order passed by the High Court for stay of the execution of the lower Court's decree pending the appeal and the papers connected therewith to show in what manner the decree, so far, as the question of mesne profits was concerned, was interpreted by the parties. I do not think that these considerations are already relevant for the disposal of this appeal. In the result, I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs. The memorandum of objections is also dismissed, but without costs.

Odgers, J.—This is an appeal against the order of the Second Additional Subordinate Judge of Madura holding that a certain award is invalid. Defendant 1 had five sons, one by his first wife and four by his second. The father had begun life in a small way with family property apparently worth only Rs. 300 or 400 but he made a considerable fortune in Sunnadi dye. He had originally two sons by his first wife but his eldest son, Ramasami, died at the age of 18 and according to the plaintiff from about 1913 his family had been in comfortable circumstances and in 1922 there was an attempt at partition in the family. This partition did not get further than a partition of moveables. Consequently, on 16th September 1923 the family made a reference to five arbitrators to divide the family property, Ex. V. Three of the arbitrators were relations and two of them P. W. 1 and D. W. 2 were intimate friends of the family with a knowledge of all its circumstances. The reference is very short and runs as follows :

"As we have named you as arbitrators to effect a partition amongst us and executed this muchilika to you, we execute this muchilika agreeing to be bound by whatever award you may pass in respect of our partition after seeing our properties and hearing what we have to state (vakumulam)."

The reference though dated 6th June 1923, was not signed till the 16th September 1923. It is signed by the father, defendant 1, for himself and on behalf of the two minor sons by the second wife, by the plaintiff who was then the only surviving son by the first wife and by the two major sons of the second wife. It may be noted that the last signatory, Ramayyan, had been given away in adoption to another family but was by agreement to obtain a share in his natural family. In September 1924 the award, Ex. G, was given and in December 1924 there was a petition by the plaintiff to pass a decree in terms of the award. The vakumulam took the form of written statements put in by the parties and Ex. 1 dated 25th September 1923 is the statement put in by the father signed by himself alone. In this document after agreeing to abide by any award the arbitrators may pass in accordance with the muchilika the father asks shortly : (1) that he and his wife should be allowed to live in the ancestral house for their lives and that it may be taken in shares by the sons after their deaths; (2) Rs. 7,000 for pilgrimage expenses; (3) Rs. 10,000 for charities and he adds: "I pray for orders to reserve the total sum of Rs. 17,000 for my doing charities and going on pilgrimages as I like;" (4) the income from Rs. 30,000 for his expenses and those of his daughters and 30 kalams of paddy, the Rs. 30,000 to be taken in equal shares by the sons after his and his wife's deaths ; (5) Rs. 10,000 worth of land, jewels etc., as stridhanam to each of the daughters; (6) Rs. 5,000 worth of jewels for the wife to be taken in equal shares after her death by the sons and daughters; (7) all the remaining property to be taken in equal shares by the five sons. The statement filed by the plaintiff Ex. B dated 24th September 1923 points out that he assisted his father to attain success in his business after the death of his brother, Ramaswami and that the sons of the second wife never did any work. He therefore asks the panchayatdars to grant him half share in the properties he sets out and "an elder brother's (excess) share above them according to the partition effected amongst our ancestors." The statement filed by defendant 2 on 23rd September 1923, Ex. A asks that the five brothers should take the properties in five equal shares and adds : "I am not willing to give any (excess) as elder brother's share to my elder brother, Vasudeva Ayyar;" but he requests the panchayatdars to do him a favour which is in their discretion. In other words, he wants more than his one-fifth share. He also requests that all the immovables be divided into five shares. Ex. C is the statement of defendant 3, that is, the adopted son, dated 25th September 1923. He merely asks for an extra share to cover the expenses that he has to incur in performing the shradda etc., in his adopted family.

Now, the arbitrators had submitted to them a detailed list of properties owned by the family in Exs. D and E. Ex. F is the list of property owned by the family in Kodikulam with suggested shares for the five sons and the two daughters. So, Ex. D shows an agreed valuation of the houses and Ex. F an agreed valuation of lands. The arbitrators seem to have adopted the suggested division in every way except that they substituted the daughters for the father in respect of the Kodikulam property. Now, as stated, the arbitrators issued an award which was begun on 10th April but as a matter of fact not issued till September in which they allowed Rs. 18,000 for the residence and maintenance of the father, provision for the daughters which does not concern us and marriages, and Rs. 11,000 jeshtabhagam to Vasudeva Ayyar and they divided the property into five shares as requested. In the recitals they say they examined the parties, that they gave evidence and statements as to what should be done as to the Jeshtabhagam that Vasudeva should get and that the remaining property should be divided into five shares. The panchayatdars state that they received those statements and perused the accounts and lists etc., and found that the property amounted to a total valuation of Rs. 1,75,000.

On this the Subordinate Judge found that the award was defective in the folowing particulars :

(1) that the father was not given a full share but only a life-estate: (2) that the plaintiff was awarded Jeshtabhagam which is obsolete and illegal; and (3) that the award was produced not by the joint deliberations of the five arbitrators but by one of the arbitrators, Subbayyar, who is one of the three relation arbitrators not examined, in conjunction with the writer of the award, Hari Govinda Ayyar.

As to the first point it is said that this is an illegality on the face of the record because defendant 1 has been deprived of his proper share without his consent. The summary given above and the father's (defendant 1's) statement before the arbitrators, Ex. 1, clearly show that he did not ask for a share. What he wanted was cash, residence in the house and a life-interest in Rs. 30,000 to put it shortly. Everything but Rs. 17,000 was to go to his sons in equal shares; viz., the immovables and Rs. 30,000 after the death of himself and the death of his wife. What he says in his evidence as D. W. 1, is that he wanted the balance i. e., after the sums allotted to him for pilgrimage, charities, etc., to be divided among his sons. He says : "I wanted a division giving each his share and retaining something for myself." It is now said that Ex. 1 says that the property was defendant 1's self-acquisition. There is no doubt that he started with a family nucleus though small and there is no evidence that he ever threw his self-acquisition into the hotchpot and then purported to reserve something out of it for himself. The contention is based on the expression in Ex. 1: "You know also what I have acquired by taking great pains." And in his evidence he says :

"I acquired the whole of my property. As my sons did not agree among themselves, I wanted to effect a partition."

It appears to me that those words alone cannot be said to point to a consciousness on the part of defendant 1 that his property was his own to do what he liked with it and was not joint family property. He made apparently no objection in 1922 when the moveables were divided and as we see he was a party on his own behalf and on behalf of the minors to the reference to arbitration. I think therefore there is nothing in that point.

To take the third point next. Nothing has been said against the three members of the panchayat who are related to the family. All the arbitrators are said to have known the family for thirty years. The objection is not put forward in the written statement of defendant 1 who says in para. 10 that the award is the production of three arbitrators only who acting solely as the agents of the plaintiff, that is the eldest son, produced a document of their own choice for the signature of Nagendra Ayyar and Parasurama Ayyar, i. e., the two other arbitrators. He comments on the fact that the document was commenced to be written on 10th April 1924 and was not completed till September 1924. That is explained by saying that the 10th April happened to be a lucky day and that as very often happens the first few lines of a document are written at an auspicious time leaving the rest to follow. In fact, we do not hear anything of this objection till the re-examination of Nagendra Ayyar, D. W. 2, who now appears as a witness against the plaintiff. This witness says that he did not read the document before he signed it nor did the other arbitrators and he also says that he did not know how to effect a partition and had no intention of taking part in the arbitration. He further says that :

" I told Timma Subba Ayyar to privately and secretly make a division and get Hari Govinda Ayyar to note it down and bring the result to me without informing any of the parties. "

This is a man worth two lakhs of rupees who received all the statements and apparently saw the parties and everything that was done in the arbitration happened at his house. We have been taken through the deposition very carefully and I can only say that the impression left on my mind by the evidence of this witness is an extremely bad one and if it comes to deciding between the evidence of this witness and P. W. 1 the only other arbitrator who gave evidence I have no hesitation whatever in accepting the statement of P. W. 1 in preference to the other. He (P. W. 1) says the arbitrators met seven or eight times, the parties were not anxious that any further enquiry should be made after the statements and the lists and accounts had been put in. Defendant 1 never complained to the witness that Subba Ayyar and the plaintiff and Hari Govinda Ayyar, the writer, were secretly writing the award. This theory that the award was got up behind the backs of the other arbitrators by Subba Ayyar and the writer seems to be a pure afterthought and there seems nothing in the evidence that is worthy of credit to support the suggestion.

The second question as to Jeshtabhagam is perhaps more difficult. We have been referred to cases like Rajangam Ayyar v. Rajangam Ayyar (1), which says that jeshtabhagam is obsolete and illegal; Venkata Reddi v. Kuppa Reddi (2), which says that jeshtabhagam is obsolete; Yerukula v. Yerukula (3) which says it is illegal and should be omitted from the decree that had been passed in that case. So, the objection is based partly on the fact that it is obsolete and illegal and partly on the fact that it again shows an error of law on the face of the award. It must be admitted that the word appears in the preamble to the award and also in the statement, Ex. B, put in by the plaintiff. It will be remembered that he asks not only half-share but for jeshtabhagam as well and I think it is undoubted that he asks for this on account of the fact which he sets out at some length that he has been of use to his family in building up the family business. It is said, on the other hand, that the award of Rs. 11,000 is "for the jeshtabhagam of Vasudeva Ayyar" and that is the word used and not for any service. It is rather an extraordinary fact that, although this practice is said to be obsolete and illegal, we have in the course of this case been referred to recent proceedings in four or five districts of this presidency as far apart as Tinnevelly and Ganjam where this expression at least is still in use. Mayne says that the jeshtabhagam of the eldest son is either 1/10 or 1/20. It will be seen that the arbitrators have awarded Rs. 11,000 extra which is about 44 per cent in the present case. This does not seem to be any proportion known to the Hindu Law and I think there is no doubt that as a claim merely on the ground that one is the eldest son it is illegal. The question is whether the use of the word jeshtabhagam must be held to make the award of Rs. 11,000 illegal when we are satisfied that that extra amount was given for services rendered. A very similar case C. R. P. 794 of 21 came before a Bench of this Court (Krishnan and Waller, JJ.) in November 1923. That was an arbitration and it was suggested in that case that the arbitrator had followed the obsolete rule of Hindu Law giving the eldest brother an extra share as jeshtabhagam and that therefore, under S. 14 (c), Sch. 2, Civil P. C., the award was illegal. The learned Judges point out that if the arbitrator was applying the rule he would have given a half share to the eldest son and not merely Rs. 3,000 and odd would have been given in consideration of having looked after his brothers for many years and educated them. The learned Judges declined to interfere. It seems to me that this is a case of a very similar nature and that although as there the word jeshtabhagam is used the reason why extra allowance was given rests on very good and reasonable grounds, namely, the assistance rendered by the eldest son. It cannot therefore, be said that this is an error of law, for an error of law, only exists when in an award there is stated some legal proposition which is the basis of the award and which is erroneous: Chamsay Bhara & Co. v. Jivaraj Balloo Spinning and Weaving Co. (4).

There is a further matter to be considered and that is this: Are the minors bound by the award? Defendants 4 and 5 were separately represented before us and by the award they get about Rs. 25,000. They naturally do not want the father's share increased so that they do not join in the objection that defendant 1 the father, ought to have had an 1/6th share. The question really turns again on whether the minors are bound by this award called jeshtabhagam. It is said that they were not validly or legally represented at the arbitration. There is no doubt that the father referred the matter to arbitration on their behalf. Ex. 5. but he did not sign Ex. 1 on behalf of the minors. It is further said that he was not competent to represent them as his interest was in conflict with theirs. It is to be noticed that the statement Ex. 5 was signed on 16th September 1923 and it was not till the 25th of that month that the father put in his written statement. On the father's written statement he undoubtedly demanded both absolutely and as life interest a larger amount than he was entitled to. The arbitrators have as a matter of fact awarded him a life interest in a less amount than he would have been entitled to as a sharer. It has been recently held by a Full Bench of this Court in Venkata Someshwaro Rao v. Lakshmanaswami (5) that it is a question of fact in every case as to whether the guardian's interests are adverse or not.

It cannot anyhow be held that the action or non-action of the guardian renders the matter in question void ab initio. Here the father asked for an equal share for the minors with his other sons. There is really no adverse interest because the father as shown expressly disclaimed his right to a share. Though Ex. 1 was not signed on behalf the minors Exs. D and E, the property lists, were and it is not proved that there was 'any negligence on the part of the father in respect of the minors' rights. Jagan Nath v. Mannu Lal (6), holds that it is competent for the father of a joint Hindu family in his capacity as manager to refer the partition of the joint family to arbitration. In that case minors were involved. So also the manager of a joint Hindu family 'even if he be not the father : Balaji v. Nana (7). I am therefore unable to see why the minors should not be bound by this award. They have certainly suffered no deprivation and their only real complaint is against the award of jeshtabhagam which is in my opinion justified for the reasons I have stated. It was also faintly suggested that the arbitrators were bound to take evidence and that the minors were prejudiced because evidence was not taken on their behalf. Throughout the statement put in by the adult members of the family there seems to me to be nothing in any way prejudicial to the minors, save the claims made for some additional consideration which, save in the case of defendant 1, were not considered by the arbitrators. I can see no unfairness to the minors and no prejudice to them. Their interests seem to have been looked after by the family as well as by the arbitrators who as a matter of fact, did very little more than adopt the suggestions put before them in the lists and accounts rendered by the family.

With the best consideration I can give to the case I think the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in sustaining any of these objections to the award and I think that the award is legal and proper and that a decree should be passed in accordance with it. The miscellaneous appeal must accordingly be allowed with costs here and in the Court below.

Wallace, J.—I agree throughout in the conclusions of my learned brother. I only to wish to add a few sentences on the matter of the jeshtabhagam award and its validity as against the minor members of the family.

It is quite clear from Exs. A and B that the matter of a jeshtabhagam award was included in the matters 'referred to arbitration, and from Ex. G that the arbitrators definitely considered the propriety of it and awarded for it what they thought proper. The award was, in my opinion, a unanimous and considered judgment, for I quite agree with my learned brother that D. W. 2's attempts now to discredit it discredit nothing and no one but himself. His present glib confession that he went into the arbitration with no intention of doing his duty, that he deliberately abstained from doing it, and that nevertheless it was he 'who engineered the whole award privately and secretly without the knowledge of the parties or most of his fellow arbitrators is obviously false and inspired by an unscrupulous desire to help the defendants.

The whole body of arbitrators was intimately acquainted with the family and its history, and a unanimous decision by such a body cannot be upset on the grounds urged by the lower Court. There is no ground in the evidence for concluding that the arbitrators awarded the jeshtabagam because they held that the law compelled them to award it. The award of that was therefore not based on any error of law apparent on the face of the record.

As to the minors, they were sufficiently represented by their father and guardian, unless their interests have in fact suffered by such representation, and it is impossible to hold that opinion when they have been awarded exactly the same as their major brothers, (defendants 2 and 3), who presented their case fully, and who were fully heard by the arbitrators. The minors are unable to maintain that their case differs in any respect from that of defendants 2 and 3. I am unable therefore to hold that the award is in any way bad in law, and agree that a decree should be passed in accordance therewith. I agree in the order as to costs.

Government Pleader—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The question that has been referred to me is, what is the amount of court-fee payable in respect of a memorandum of second appeal preferred by a ryot in a suit filed by him under S. 112, Estates Land Act. Under this section, whenever a landholder expresses his intention to avail himself of the powers given to him under the Estates Land Act to sell the holding, he is bound to give through the Collector a written notice to the ryot. That section also provides that, if he (the ryot) does not pay the amount or file a suit within 30 days before the Collector contesting the right of sale, the said holding or any part thereof specified in the notice will be sold. In this particular case, the ryot contested the landholder's right to sell his holding under S. 112. One of the reasons given by the ryot was that there was no proper notice. There were other objections also raised by the ryot. The suit was dismissed by both the lower Courts. The ryot, when he preferred the second appeal to this Court affixed a court-fee stamp of the value of Rs. 10 to the second appeal memorandum. The office took objection to the amount of court-fee that was payable, and as the Taxing Officer felt some doubt as to the exact amount of court-fee payable in respect of the memorandum of second appeal, the matter was referred to the learned Chief Justice and under orders of the Chief Justice the matter has been placed before me for adjudication as regards the exact amount of court-fee payable.

The learned advocate who appeared for the appellant, Mr. K. Bhashyam Ayyangar, contended that the present case is covered by Cl. 17 (b). Sch. 2, Court-fees Act, 7 of 1870, as amended by the Madras Act 5 of 1922 :

"plaint or memorandum of appeal where it is not possible to estimate at a money value the subject matter in dispute and which is not otherwise provided for....."

Under the notification issued by the Government, No. 1245, dated 15th April 1926—The Government were pleased "to reduce to Rs. 15 the fees chargeable under Sch. 2 on memorandum of second appeal in a suit of the class mentioned in Art. 17-B and instituted in a revenue Court."

If this Article were to apply, then the proper court-fee payable in respect of the memorandum of second appeal before me would be Rs. 15. On the other hand, the learned Government Pleader contends that it could not be said that it is not possible to estimate at a money value the subject matter in dispute in the present case: Banwari Lal v. Daga Shankar (1), and then he pointed out that, though under S. 5, Estates Land Act, in respect of rent due to the landholder a charge on the holding is created by the Act, that charge is enforceable either by way of suit filed before the revenue Court or by the landholder taking summary proceedings to realize the rent. If the landholder should elect to proceed, as he has done in the present case, by way of sale of the holding, then under S. 112 the ryot is given the right to file a suit before the Collector contesting the right of sale of the holding. The question then narrows itself to this : what exactly is the meaning to be attached to the expression: "where it is not possible to estimate at a money value the subject matter in dispute," in Cl. 17 (b). In one sense no doubt it is possible to estimate, in however unsatisfactory a manner, the subject matter in the present case, because as pointed out by the learned Government Pleader the question may have to be decided in this case as to what is the amount of rent payable by the ryot to the landholder in respect of which the landholder has taken proceedings by way of sale. But at the same time it is imppossible to shut one's eyes to the fact that no question regarding the amount due might ariso in some of the suits filed under this provision of law. For example, when the ryot disputes the landholder's right on the ground that no legal notice had been served upon him under S. 112, the question that will have to be decided is whether such notice was served on the ryot or not. In such a case the liability of the ryot to pay rent, whatever it is, remains and it is not disputed that the landholder could by means of a suit before the revenue Court recover the same by obtaining a decree and proceedings to execute the same, or he could start fresh proceedings after giving due notice under S. 112, if he is otherwise in order. Learned Judges have had to consider the exact scope of the clause : "it is not possible to estimate at a money value the subject matter," occuring in old Art. 17 (6) corresponding to the present Art. 17 (b), and difference of opinion necessorily arose having regard to the nature of the expression used in that clause. With reference to a plaint filed under S. 77, Registration Act, Benson and Bhashyam Ayyangar, JJ., held in Pydal Nambiar v. Kannan Nambiar (2) that the subject matter was manifestly capable of valuation, and the learned Judges directed that ad valorem court-fee should be levied. In the case reported in the very next page of the same volume Savarimuthi Pillai v. Alagiam Pillai (3), Davies and Moore, JJ., held that it was impossible to give any valuation, in the ordinary sense, in respect of such suits ; and they held that the case came under the old Art. 17 (6) corresponding to the present Art. 17 (b). It is not surprising in this state of circumstances, that the matter came before a Full Bench of this High Court, and in Ramu Aiyar v. Sankara Aiyar (4), the Full Bench following the decision of Garth, C. J., in Jantoo v. Radha Canto Doss (5), held that in view of the wording of the Act the proper view would be to say that it is not possible to estimate at a money value the subject matter in such suits.

Another class of cases, which in my view, would also throw some light on the meaning of the expression I have now to consider arose in connexion with suit for partition by co-tenants alleging possession in the plaintiffs and other co-tenants, and making the other co-tenants defendants. The question arose whether the subject matter of such plaints could be estimated in money value and what was the proper court-fee to be paid in respect of the same. After some difference of opinion it was held in Gill v. Varadaraghavayyan (6), by Wallis, C. J. and Sadasiva Aiyar, J., that in the ordinary acceptation of the expression such claims were not capable of money valuation within the meaning of Art. 17. Finally the Court had to consider the meaning of this expression with reference to an appeal preferred from a decision passed by the Forest

Settlement Officer from whose decision under S. 10, Forest Act, an appeal lay to the District Judge. The question arose as to the exact court-fee payable in respect of the memorandum of appeal presented in such circumstances to the District Judge. The High Court held that the Forest Officer could not be said to be a civil Court or a revenue Court within Clause 1, Art. 17, and that the proper Article to be applied is the old Art. 17 (6), which corresponds to the present Art. 17 (b). In the case before me, the plaintiff-ryots raised (among others) the question that the notice under S. 112 was not valid, since it was not signed by the defendant, the landholder, but by two others, who, it was alleged, had no right to issue such notice ; objection was also raised that the notice was not properly served. These pleas though overruled by the lower Courts, have been taken in the memorandum of second appeal also. Having regard to the decisions of this Court, where the Court had to consider the meaning that has to be attached to the expression in question, I think that I should, following the reasons adopted by this Court in the three classes of cases mentioned by me, decide that it is not possible to estimate at a money value the subject matter in dispute in the present case. In a taxing statute, unless the matter is made reasonably clear, the parties are entitled to bring their cases under the less onerous provision of the Act if otherwise they could do so : Sekharan v. Eacharan (7), Pathumma Umma v. Aliyammakkanath Moideen (8). But in the present case I am not satisfied that the intention of the Act was to bring such a case as the one before me, within the ad veloram court-fee provision. No question could arise with reference to plaints filed under S. 112, because (though in the present case I understand that a court-fee of Re. 1 has been paid on the plaint) under Cl. 35 of the Notification issued by the Government, the Government have been pleased to remit the fees chargeable in respect of plaints in suits instituted before the Collector under S. 112, among others, of the Estates Land Act. The question could arise only with reference to the court-fee payable in respect of appeals and second appeals ; for the reasons I have given above, I have come to the conclusion that the present case before me is not a case where it is possible to estimate at a money value the subject matter in dispute, and that being so, the present case is covered by Art. 17 (b), Sch. 2 to the Act.

According to the recent notification referred to by me, namely, Notification No. 1245 dated 15th April 1926, the amount of court-fee payable on second appeals preferred from decisions of revenue Courts is Rs. 15. The appellant has paid a fee of Rs. 10 and he has accordingly to pay the difference of Rs. 5. I give three weeks' time for such payment.

S. R. No. 17672 of 1928, Decided on 19th April 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, Ellore, in C. C. No. 15 of 1926.

 Court-fees Act, S. 8—Appellant insisting on 15 per cent on market value in case of success—He must pay court-fees on total amount including 15 per cent.

Where a person being dissatisfied with the amount of compensation awarded to him under S. 18, Land Acquisition Act, wants to appeal, insisting in case of his success that not only the excess market value but also 15 per cent. of the same should be decreed in his favour, he must pay court-fees not only on the excess market value but also on 15 per cent thereon: 16 Mad. 369, Dist. [P 47 C 2]

V. Viyyanna—for Appellant.

Govt. Pleader—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The question that has been referred to me is whether an appellant whose lands were acquired under the Land Acquisition Act (1 of 1894), but who, being dissatisfied with the amount of compensation awarded to him by the Court on a reference made to it under S. 18 of the Act, appeals to the High Court, is bound to include in the valuation of his appeal the amount of 15 per cent of the excess market value, and pay court-fee thereon, or whether he is entitled to value his appeal only at the excess market value claimed by him and pay court-fee on that amount only, while insisting in case of success in the appeal that he should be decreed not only the excess market value claimed by him but also 15 per cent on the same.

The answer to this question turns on the proper construction to be placed on S. 8, Court-fees Act. S. 8 runs in these terms:

"The amount of fee payable under this Act on a memorandum of appeal against an order relating to compensation under any Act for the time being in force for the acquisition of land for public purposes shall be computed according to the difference between the amount awarded and the amount claimed by the appellant."

It was argued on behalf of the appellant that under S. 23, sub-S. (1), Land Acquisition Act, the amount of compensation to be awarded is determined by the considerations mentioned in Cls. 1 to 11 of the section and that in construing S. 8, Court-fees Act, the expression "the amount awarded" should be taken to cover only the amount awarded having regard to the considerations mentioned in Cls. 1 to 6 only of S. 23 and that the expression, "amount claimed" in S. 8 should also receive a similar construction, I am unable to accede to that contention. Under the Land Acquisition Act, it is the amount of compensation that should be allowed for the land that has to be determined; and in determining the amount of compensation the Court has to take into consideration not only the provisions of Cls. 1 to 6, S. 23, sub-S. 1, but also the provisions of sub-S. 2 of that section. Sub-S. 2, S. 23 expressly enacts:

"In addition to the market value of the land as above provided, the Court shall in every case award a sum of 15 per centum on such market value in consideration of the compulsory nature of the acquisition."

As I understand the Act, the amount of compensation to be awarded includes not only the market value but also the 15 per cent on such market value. A reference to the other sections of the Land Acquisition Act, in my opinion, makes this clear. Under S. 11, the Collector shall make an award of the compensation which in his opinion should be allowed for the land, and also "the apportionment of the said compensation among the claimants." Again under S. 31:

"the Collector shall tender payment of the compensation awarded by him to the persons interested; and if they did not consent to receive it, the Collector shall deposit the amount of compensation in the Court to which a reference under S. 18 would be submitted."

It is clear that the expression "amount of compensation awarded by the Collector," in S. 31 includes not only the market value but also the 15 per cent thereon, since it is clear that the Collector is bound to tender to the claimants the said 15 per cent also and to deposit the same in Court if the claimants did not consent to receive the same. Again S. 15 of the Act enacts that:

"in determining the amount of compensation, the Collector shall be guided by the provisions contained in Ss. 23 and 24," that is, not only by the provisions of sub-S. 1, Cls. 1 to 6, S. 23, but also by sub-S. 2, S. 23.

It seems to me to be clear that the extra amount of compensation claimed by the appellant in an appeal should under S. 8, Court-fees Act, include also the 15 per cent of the market value and that he should pay court-fees on the total amount including the 15 per cent. He cannot, it seems to me, value his appeal only at the excess market value claimed by him in the appeal, and at the same time in case of success, not only claim to have that excess market value decreed to him but also claim that the appellate decree should automatically give him an additional 15 per cent of the said excess market value. An appeal is different from the claim put forward by him before the Collector. When once the Court, on a reference to it under S. 18, Land Acquisition Act, determines the amount of compensation to be awarded for the land acquired, the claimant, if dissatisfied with the amount of compensation so awarded by the Court, should, in case he prefers an appeal value his appeal at the figure which represents the difference between the amount of compensation awarded to him and the amount of compensation that he claims in the appeal. The amount of compensation awarded to him includes, in my view, the 15 per cent also of the market value, and the extra amount of compensation that he claims in the appeal should also include the 15 per cent of the excess market value which he claims in the appeal.

Of course, it is open to an appellant in a land acquisition appeal, as in any other appeal, in which he claims a sum of money from the other side, to give up a portion of his claim and confine his claim to any particular amount to which he may restrict his claim in appeal. In such cases he is of course bound to pay court-fee only on the amount to which he has so confined his claim in the appeal; but in such a case, in the event of success in his appeal the decree of the appellate Court should award only the amount claimed by him in the appeal, and not more: Muhomed Ali Ajmad Khan v. Secy. of State (1). In the case before me, the appellant, while valuing his appeal at the extra market value only, claims in the event of success an extra 15 per cent also. To entitle him to do so I think, on a proper construction of S. 8, Court-fees Act, that he is bound to include in the valuation of his appeal the extra 15 per cent also and pay the court-fee due on the total amount.

No reported decision on the exact point that I have to decide now had been brought to my notice either by the learned advocate for the appellant or by the learned Government Pleader. The appellant, however, relied on the observations of the Privy Council in the Mahabhalipuram Land Acquisition case reported in the Secy. of State v. Shanmugaraya Mudaliar (2). The observations relied on are at pp. 376, 377 and 379. I am of opinion that the observations relied on by the appellant do not really help me in the decision of the present question. The Privy Council had not to decide any question as to the proper amount of court-fee payable in a land acquisition appeal. The decision itself was passed under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act (10 of 1870).

The learned Government Pleader drew my attention to Ss. 11, 13 and 24 of the old Act of 1870 and also to Ss. 11, 15 and 23 of the present Act. Sub-S. 2, S. 23 of the present Act (1 of 1894), does not find a place in S. 24 of Act (10 of 1870). On the other hand S. 42 of the old Act provided as follows:

"In addition to the amount of any compensation awarded under part 2 or part 3 of this Act, the Collector shall in consideration of the compulsory nature of the acquisition pay 15 per centum on the market value mentioned in S. 24."

The observations of the Privy Council relied on by the learned advocate for the appellant were made with reference to the provisions of S. 12 of the old Act, and as already mentioned, do not help me in deciding the question of court-fee now referred to me. I may note that in cases of appeals by the Government in land acquisition cases, it had been held in S. R. 9324 of 1923, that the Government should pay ad valorem court-fee on the amount of compensation decreed to the claimant to which objection is taken in appeal.

For the above reasons, I have come to the conclusion that the appellant in the in the present appeal, in case he wishes to have the 15 per cent also included in the appellate decree in case of his success, is bound to include the said 15 per cent also in the valuation of his appeal and pay court-fee on the total amount.

I answer the question referred to me accordingly, and give leave to the appellant to amend the valuation given in the appeal memorandum, should he elect to do so, and pay court-fee thereon within one week after re-opening of the High Court in July 1929.

Appeal No. 385 of 1924 and Civil Misc. Petn. No. 2535 of 1929, Decided on 18th July 1929, from decree of Addl. Sub-Judge Bapatla, D./ 15th January 1924.

Civil P.C., O. 6, R.17—Suit for declaration that certain adoption was invalid held barred by limitation—Amendment to change the suit into one for possession which could not be barred—Amendment was allowed.

A suit was filed by reversioners for a declaration that a certain adoption is invalid and that certain alienations made by the adopted son were not binding on them. The suit was held to be barred by limitation having been brought more than six years after alleged adoption became known, and an application to amend plaint by adding prayer for possession was made.

Held : that, as a suit for recovery of possession would not be barred even though one for mere declaration could be under Art. 118 and as therefore the only effect of refusing the amendment would be to force the parties to a separate suit, it was in the interest of justice to allow the amendment: 39 Cal. 418 and A. I. R. 1924 P. C. 137 Rel. on [P 48 C 1]

Judgment.—This is an application to amend the plaint by adding a prayer for possession and to convert the suit into a suit for possession. The suit was filed by the reversioners for a declaration that a certain adoption is invalid and that certain alienations made by the adopted son are also invalid and not binding against them. The Subordinate Judge held that the suit was barred by limitation as it was brought more than six years after the date of the alleged adoption was known to plaintiffs. He did not go into the question of fact whether there was in fact an adoption and whether such an adoption was valid and legal. Pending this appeal the widow died about two or three months ago and the present application is to amend the plaint as we have stated above.

It is clear from the decision of the Privy Council in Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Niazuddin Khan (1), and Kalyandappa v. Chan Basappa (2), that a suit for recovery of possession would not be barred even though a suit for a bare declaration that an adoption was invalid or never in fact took place might be barred under Art. 118, Lim. Act. The question, therefore, is whether we should allow the amendment instead of driving the parties to a separate suit, because even assuming that we confirm the decree on the ground that the prayer for a declaration is barred, the appellants can still file a regular suit and will be in time. Having regard to the fact that the suit was filed as long ago as 1922, and that the question relating to the adoption has yet to be decided, we think it will be in the interests of justice to allow the amendment and to send the case back to the lower Court with directions to try the issues of fact raised by the amendment as, in our opinion, even assuming that the Judge was right in holding that a claim for a bare declaration is barred by limitation, the death of the widow has so altered the circumstances that the Court would have to go into the question as to the validity of the adoption and the validity of the alienations impeached in a claim for possession. In this view, it is unnecessary to decide whether the claim for a bare declaration is barred or not. Even if it is barred, a suit for possession would lie and it would not be barred and in a suit for possession the question as to the factum and validity of the adoption will have to be gone into. In these circumstances, we allow the plaint to be amended as prayed. We set aside the decree dismissing the suit and direct that on the amendment of the plaint the necessary issues be raised and the suit disposed of on the amended plaint. The lower Court will pass necessary orders for filing additional written statements and frame the necessary issues thereon. The petitioner will pay the additional court-fee in the lower Court within the time to be fixed by the learned Judge.

As regards costs, we think the proper order to make is to direct the appellants to pay the costs of defendant 6 in the lower Court which have been taxed at Rs. 80-1-0. As regards the costs of the appeal, they will abide and follow the result.

Alluri Varahalaraju and others—Defendants—Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 297 of 1925, Decided on 25th January 1929, against decree of Dist. Judge, Godavari, in A. S. No. 63 of 1922.

Limitation Act, Art. 47—Order against Hindu father under S. 145, Criminal P. C.—Order is binding on his undivided sons—Suit by sons after three years from such order is barred under Art. 47—Criminal P. C., S. 145.

In proceedings taken under S. 145 an adverse order passed against a Hindu father in possession of the property bought on behalf of the joint Hindu family is binding on his undivided sons though they were not parties to the proceedings. A suit, therefore, by such undivided sons for possession of the properties—subject matter of the proceedings—brought more than three years on such order is barred under Art. 47. [P 49 C 2]

Advocate General and V. Govindarajachary—for Appellants.

P. Somasundaram, A. Satyanarayana, V. Ramanarasu and S. Narayana Aiyangar—for Respondents.

Odgers, J.- In this case the plaintiffs are the appellants. In September 1920 they brought this suit to recover possession with mesne profits of certain lands from the defendants. Plaintiffs' father bought the land in question from defendant 1 in 1911. Proceedings were taken in June 1915 against the plaintiffs' father under S. 145, Criminal P. C., when defendant 2 resisted his possession, in which the posession of defendant 2 in the land was confirmed. The question is whether those proceedings bind the plaintiffs who are the undivided sons of their father Alluri Subbaraju who bought the property on behalf of the joint family. The importance of it is this, that if those proceedings do bind the present plaintiffs they are out of time with this suit because it was instituted more than three years from the date of the final order in the case (Ex. 3) under S. 145, Criminal P. C. It is argued that this order does not bind the sons who were not parties to it and was made without jurisdiction. The order came up to this Court in Criminal Revision Case No. 205 of 1916 after the death of the father Alluri Subbaraju when plaintiff 1 asked to be brought on as legal representative of his father. In the then state of S. 145, Criminal P. C. this was impossible, but this Court held that this order was not made without jurisdiction. We are therefore bound by this decision as to this latter point. An order under S. 145, Criminal P. C. applies to anybody bound by such order or anyone claiming under such person. It is perfectly clear that the plaintiffs were aware of the proceedings, also that the property was acquired for the joint family and the plaintiffs' father was in possession as manager on their behalf. It is also plain that S. 145, Criminal P. C. is only a quasi criminal matter as it falls within the purview of Art. 47, Lim. Act, unlike most criminal proceedings. In re, Nathubhai Brijlal (1) held that all parties with actual notice of proceedings under S. 145 were bound by them. That has also been held here in Crim. Revn. Case No. 87 of 1917. So that not merely the actual parties to, but all persons who may be concerned in, the dispute are parties with whom the Magistrate has to deal, the object being to prevent a breach of the peace. So it is not only the actual parties to the order but all parties with notice of the proceedings who are bound. In Ram Sahai v. Binode Bihari Ghose (2), it is distinctly laid down that where the manager of a joint family has taken proceedings under S. 145 as the managing member he and the whole family are bound by the order under it. This seems to be in accordance with reason and common sense. There therefore seems no good reason why having regard to the authorities cited we should not hold that under the circumstances the plaintiffs were bound by the notice of these proceedings under S. 145. If all persons are so bound who have had actual notice though not parties to the order as laid down in In re, Nathubhai Brijlal (1) and followed in this Court as stated above, it stands to reason that these plaintiffs who admittedly had notice of the proceedings should also be bound. There is the additional reason that their father had acquired the properties as manager of the family on their behalf and it seems only reasonable that the other members of the family should be bound. The plaintiffs must then fail on this point of limitation and the second appeal must be dismissed on that point.

The next question is whether plaintiffs are entitled to recover compensation from defendant 1 now represented by respondents 20 and 21. The sale-deed under which the plaintiffs are said to have acquired title to these lands is Ex. A and is recited to be a deed of sale of inam grant land and zeroyati land. The vendor recites that there is a lease on the land in favour of defendant 2 for eight years from 1907 to 1915. The document then goes on:

"Therefore, you shall, subject to your continuing the cowle period in favour of the said Varahalu Raju alias Ramabhaddiraraju Garu and subject to your collecting from him in my stead, the cist at the rate of Rs. 75 payable each year, on 30th Magha Bahulam, for the four years from the fasli year 1321, according to the instalments settled in the said cowle, take possession of the said land and enjoy the same soon after the expiry of 30th Palguna Bahulam of the year Ananda (15th March 1915) continuing his term until the close of the said cowle period."

This is said to be a covenant for possession and enjoyment after the period of the lease but it turned out that the tenant had a right of permanent occupancy and the learned advocate for the plaintiffs admits that his client was aware of the legal status as an occupancy ryot of the defendant at the time he entered into this transaction Ex. A and he also accepts the finding that he is an occupancy tenant. The District Judge found that the plaintiffs were aware of the nature of the tenure and were therefore not entitled to damages. The Subordinate Judge came to the same conclusion, but he put it on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to obtain possession by coming to Court too late (i. e. on the point of limitation); so that it was their own fault that they failed to obtain possession. The question is: did the plaintiffs fail to get possession owing to the representation of the defendants as contained in Ex. A? It is impossible to say that they did. This part of the case is outside the question of limitation because being a registered document the plaintiffs have six years within which to sue. It may of course be said with reason that the possession that the plaintiff was to get under Ex. A after the expiry of defendant 2's lease was something different from what he had up to the expiration of that lease. And it is perhaps possible to explain this difference by saying that after its expiry he would have been able to take advantage of the provisions of the Madras Estates Land Act with regard to enhancement of rent and so on. Mahomed Ali Sheriff v. Venkatapathi Raju (3) was cited to us for the proposition that mere knowledge on the part of the vendee of a defect in title of the vendor would not by itself defeat the vendee's right on the basis of a covenant implied by the Transfer of Property Act. This is not the only fact in this case because here the plaintiff's father was not only aware of the state of the defendant's title but knew that the covenant must be entirely ineffective. At the same time it is exceedingly difficult to say, especially having regard to the plaintiffs' knowledge of the whole state of things at the time he entered into Ex. A that he has been damnified by the fact that after 1915 he has not been able to collect from the tenants more than Rs. 75 per annum, the rate stipulated in the lease of defendant 2, Ex. B. The contract to give him possession and enjoyment has really become unenforceable either because defendant 2 has acquired occupancy rights by the enactment of the Madras Estates Land Act or by judicial decision. It seems to me that it would be very difficult for a jury or any body sitting as a jury to assess any damages or at least anything more than mere nominal damages in favour of the plaintiffs for the breach of this covenant which as a matter of fact their father knew could never be carried out. Under the circumstances I am inclined to say that the plaintiffs are not entitled to any damages but at the same time I would give them no costs.

Respondents 11 to 14 are held in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge not to be necessary parties and it is difficult to see why they have been made parties to this second appeal. They are dismissed from the appeal with costs.

The Court guardian Mr. Narayana Iyengar for respondents 20 and 21 has received Rs. 35 as his fees from the Registrar and has applied for some additional allowance. I think that an additional sum of Rs. 40 ought to be awarded to him. This sum to be paid before decree is issued.

In the result, the second appeal is dismissed but without costs except as regards respondents 11 to 14 who will receive one set.

Wallace, J.—I agree and just wish to add my own view on the point whether the plaintiff's suit is barred by Art. 47, Lim. Act.

The contention that it is not barred because the order under S. 145, Criminal P. C. was passed without jurisdiction seems to me untenable in this Court in the face of the decision of this Court itself in previous proceedings that the order was with jurisdiction. The fact that the plaintiff was not a party to these proceedings and was not allowed to come on as a party cannot affect the jurisdiction of the order. Plaintiff then can only succeed in the face of Art. 47 if he can show that he is not a person bound by the order under S. 145,

(3) [1920] 39 M. L. J. 449=60 I. C. 235=11 M. L. W. 537.

Criminal P. C. His general argument is that as the proceeding under S. 145 is of the nature of a criminal proceeding, it can only bind the persons actually named therein, and that though Art. 47 lays down that the limitation period shall apply also to persons claiming under those who were bound, he is not claiming under his father but in his own right as a member of the same joint family of which his father was the manager. On his argument therefore he is neither a person bound by the order nor a person claiming under one who is bound by the order. The latter part of his argument may be conceded; the former in my view cannot. Without going into the general question whether an order under S. 145, Criminal P. C. is a judgment in rem and maintains a party found to be in possession as against all the world until he is ousted by an order of the civil Court, I am clear that, where the manager of the joint family in his capacity as such is a party to the proceedings, the joint family as a whole is a party and the proceedings bind any member of the joint family in his capacity as such. The possession of the manager as such is the possession of the joint family, such possession as can in the nature of the circumstances he had. If eventually the civil Court declares that the joint family is entitled to possession, the manager would retain for the joint family the possession given to him by the criminal Court, while if the civil Court declared the other party entitled to possession, the manager could not possibly resist the decree and claim to remain still in possession on his own individual behalf.

The real party to the criminal proceedings in such a case obviously is the joint family and not the individual person who happens to be the manager. If the appellant's view is accepted, the usufulness of the proceedings under S. 145 will be greatly curtailed. While these proceedings are quasi criminal, they are also quasi civil and there can be no legal objection to the actual parties cited being representatives of the others as in an ordinary civil case. In the present case, there can be no doubt that the plaintiff's father was a party to the proceedings in his capacity as manager of the joint family of which the plaintiff is a member. The plaintiff was therefore represented in the proceedings by the manager of his family, and as the manager is bound equally is he bound. The appellant's learned advocate admits that he is not able to quote any reported ruling in his favour. There is a ruling to the contrary on the above lines in Ram Sahai v. Binode Behari Gosh (2). I, therefore, agree that the appellant's suit for possession was rightly dismissed as barred by time.

In a previous suit brought for specific performance on an agreement for sale of his property, the sale-deed executed through Court by a Hindu vendor in favour of his brother, showed that some debts were taken as binding on both brothers and others on the vendor's brother alone and that some items of property were to the heirs of vendor.

Where the only effect of the covenants in a sale deed is that vendee is liable as between himself and the vendor to pay all the debts of the vendor out of all the properties which were the subject of the sale, and personally out of the properties of his own, such a covenant cannot be taken advantage of by the creditors who are no parties to the sale deed. His transferees also cannot claim such priority, for they must be taken to have actual or constructive notice of the title deed of their vendor and they cannot pretend ignorance of its contents. The rights conferred upon the transferees who pay off prior mortgages for using such prior mortgages as a shield are the result of an equitable doctrine in spite of the fact that the mortgages are extinguished, and where a transferrer by reason of his covenants and the transferee by reason of a notice of the transferrer's covenants show a different intention, there is no scope for the application of such an equitable doctrine : 34 Mad. 119, Full.; 43 Cal. 69; 6 C.L.J. 134 ; 14 C.L.J. 500 and 12 *L. S. Varadachariar and A. Seshagiri Sastri—for Appellants.

L. A. Govindaraghara Iyer and K. Rajah Iyer—for Respondents.

Ramesam, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was filed on the basis of a mortgage bond dated 5th March 1914 executed by defendant 1 in favour of one Subramanian Chettiar who was the son of plaintiff 1 and the husband of plaintiff 2. At the time of the mortgage, defendant 1 had a brother Natarajulu and they were undivided. The plaintiffs claim that defendant 1 Narayanasami was the manager of the family and the mortgage deed was executed for purposes binding on the family. The defendants denied these allegations and contended that the debt is not binding on Natarajulu's share. This point was found by the Subordinate Judge against the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs who are the appellants before us do not attack this finding so far as the state of things existing at the date of the mortgage is concerned. A few months after the execution of Ex. A, a suit was filed by Natarajulu for specific performance of an agreement to sell Narayanaswami's share of the family properties with certain other reliefs which it is unnecessary to mention. Ex. C-(1) dated 2nd November 1914 is the plaint and Ex. C is the compromise decree passed in that suit dated 23rd November 1915.

According to the said compromise decree, two of the items included in that suit were settled upon defendant 1's wife for life and all the other properties were to be sold to Natarajulu. In execution of this decree, a sale deed was obtained by Natarajulu through the Court. This is Ex. C (2) dated 30th November 1916. The consideration for the sale deed was Rs. 35,000 and the consideration was to be paid by the vendee undertaking to discharge various debts of the vendor. 16 debts were enumerated in the sale-deed. It is necessary to make particular mention of some of these items. The first item is Narayanaswami's half share of the debt due on a mortgage bond dated 11th August 1909 executed by both the brothers (Ex. 5). The fourth item is a sum of Rs. 356-4-0 due wholly by Narayanaswami on a mortgage bond dated 10th March 1913 (Ex. 16). Item 5 is a sum of Rs. 821-4-0 due wholly by Narayanaswmi on a mortgage bond executed by him on 18th November 1913 (Ex. 16-a). Item 6 is a sum of Rs. 1,100 due wholly by Narayanaswami on a mortgage bond executed by him on 1st November 1913 (Ex. 14). Item 10 is a sum of Rs. 2,675 due wholly by Narayanaswami in respect of Ex. A. It is unnecessary to refer to the other items.

The plaintiffs now claim that Natarajulu's share of the properties also is liable to their debt, first on the ground that after the death of Natarajulu in 1919, these properties survived to Narayanaswami and the mortgage, Ex. A, is at least now binding on the whole of the properties and secondly on the ground that Natarajulu having undertaken to pay off Narayanaswami's debts by the sale deed Ex. C (2), it has become a personal obligation and he is liable to pay off the debts due to the plaintiffs out of the properties of the family and not merely Narayanaswami's properties. This is the first point argued in appeal, the point having been decided by the Subordinate Judge against the plaintiffs. The second point argued by the appellants is that certain alienees from Nataraju or his mother, defendant 2, are not entitled to priority over the plaintiff's mortgage on account of their having paid off certain mortgages of defendant 1 earlier in date than the plaintiff's mortgage. The last point argued in appeal relates to the rate of interest. Defendant 2, the mother of the two brothers, claims to be interested in Natarajulu's half share of the properties not sold to the alienees.

Taking up the first point, one subordinate question that arises is whether after the sale-deed Ex. C(2) the two brothers should be considered as divided or still undivided. Mr. Varadachariar, the learned advocate for the appellants, relied on certain observations of Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., in Venkataramayya v. Ramayya (1). The alienation in that case was by a member of a joint family in favour of a stranger and the point referred to the Full Bench was that fraction of the family property passed to the alienee by the sale deed. The observation relied on is at p. 717. I do not think this observation helps the appellants. If a member of an undivided family sells the whole of his share in some of the family properties or part of his share in such properties but not in other properties, it may be that he continues undivided with the other members in respect of the properties other than those in which the whole or part of his share has been transferred and this is all that the observation at p. 717 amounts to. It almost implies that so far as the properties in which the whole or part of the member's share is sold are concerned, he must be regarded as divided from the other members. But where the sale is not to a stranger but to the remaining members of the family the matter becomes much stronger. The observations at p. 268 of Maharajah of Bobbili v. Venkataramanujulu Naidu (2), do not go beyond what I have stated above and even if there are any observations in those two cases in favour of the appellants, their value must be discounted on the ground that these observations were made long before the decision of the Privy Council in Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj (3).

In the present case, a careful examination of the terms of the compromise and the provisions therein that certain items should go to the heirs of Narayanaswami and the terms of the sale deed, Ex. C (2), showing that some debt were taken as binding on both the brothers and others on Narayanaswami alone—all show the unmistakable intention that the brothers should thereafter be separate. So early as Balkrisha Trimbak v. Savitri Bai (4), such a conclusion was reached. We are of opinion that the finding of the Subordinate Judge on issue 2 is unsustainable. On the facts of this case the presumption of jointness is overwhelmingly rebutted. Therefore there is no survivorship of the properties of Natarajulu to defendant 1.

It is next suggested that the effect of Ex. C (2) is to make Natarajulu liable to pay the plaintiff's debt out of the whole of the properties. In the first place the sale deed is only of Narayanaswami's share of the properties. They are transferred to Natarajulu in consideration of his paying off Narayanaswami's debts. The only effect of the covenants in the sale deed is that Natarajulu is liable as between himself and the vendor to pay off all the debts of the vendor out of all the properties which were the subject of the sale, that is, Narayanaswami's share of the properties, and personally out of the properties of his own but such a covenant cannot be taken advantage of by the creditors who are no parties to the sale deed and so far as creditors like the plaintiffs are concerned their remedies are confined to the rights under their documents. The plaintiff's rights are to sell the mortgaged properties under Ex. A. It may be that if, by non-payment of plaintiff's debt by Natarajulu, Narayanaswami was put to trouble of some kind, he can sue Natarajulu for damages by reason of the breach of the covenant, but apart from this, we cannot see how creditors like the plaintiffs can take advantage of the covenant. Nor can we read anything in the terms of the sale deed to show an undertaking by Natarajulu that he will pay off all the vendor's debts out of the whole of the family properties. On the other hand, portions of the sale deed imply that some of the debts are not binding on Natarajulu at all and he is in no way liable for them and in the case of other debts, he is liable only to the extent of his half share. It is impossible to spell out of these terms an undertaking of Natarajulu in respect of his own share of the properties for Narayanaswami's share of the debts enuring to the benefi of creditors. The analogy of universal donee is invoked by the learned advocate for the appellants but we are not able to say that this analogy helps him. We are therefore of opinion that the plaintiffs can recover their debts only out of the half share of Narayanaswami in the mortgaged properties.

The next question that arises is whether certain of the alienees are entitled to priority over the plaintiffs' mortgage. The following table shows the parties claiming such priority over the plaintiffs, the items in the plaintiffs' mortgage in respect of which the priority is claimed, the debts by reason of the payment of which such priority is claimed and the last column shows the amount to the extent to which the priority is claimed.

Persons claiming priority	Item in respect of which priority is claimed	Prior debts paid	Amount to the extent to which priority is claimed.
Deft. 4	Nos. 1 and 2	Ex. V	Rs. 4,500
Defts. 5 and 6	No. 15	Ex. XVI and XVI (a)	Rs. 3,900
Defts. 15	Nos. 8 and 14	Ex. XIV	Rs. 5,500

Mr. Varadachariar, the learned advocate for the appellants, argued first that as Ex. C (2) provides for the payment of Narayanaswami's debts by Natarajulu he can himself claim no priority if he pays some of these debts and does not pay others, and that being so, persons claiming through him can claim no such priority; and secondly, that in the sale deeds of Natarajulu in favour of the various alienees, they were asked to pay the prior mortgages and therefore they cannot claim any priority. Now it is clear that where a mortgagor sells his property to a vendee requiring the vendee to pay off two or three prior debts of the mortgagor and if the vendee pays off only one of them, he cannot claim priority in respect of it over the others though he may claim such priority in respect of some other debts the payment of which by him was not contemplated. This proposition was decided in Govindasami Tevan v. Doraisami Pillai (5), and both branches of the above statement are illustrated by the decision in Har Shyam v. Syam Lal (6). In the atter case it was held that the vendee could claim priority in respect of the debt X and not in respect of the debts Y or Z

(6) [1916] 43 Cal. 69—22 C. L. J. 227—31 I.C. 2?=20 C. W. N. 601.

This proposition is conceded by the respondents. The question, however, arises how far this disability of the vendee applies to transferees from him. In Bisseswar Prasad v. Saran Singh (7) it was held that the transferees also cannot claim such priority, vide the observations at p. 139 of Bisseswar Prasad v. Saran Singh (7) beginning with:

"In our opinion, they do not, because they had constructive, if not, actual notice of the debt due to Munniram and of the circumstances that Prayag Lall had assumed payment of it. They are consequently, not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee of 28th May 1880, whose debt they satisfied."

In the present case, a perusal of Ex. C (2) shows the position undertaken by Natarajulu, and all his vendees must be taken to have actual or constructive notice of Ex. C (2); that is, the title deed of their vendor and they cannot pretend ignorance of its contents. No case has been cited to support the contention of the respondents that the transferees stand in a better position than the transferrer. There is no analogy between the relative positions of such transferrer and transferee and the relative position of the mortgagor and his transferee who would be transferrer as against a second transferee. The relative rights between the two sets of parties are entirely different. The effect of the sale deed Ex. C (2) is to calculate all the debts of Narayanaswami up to a particular date and to make them stand on the same footing as on that date. The description of the various items of consideration show that all the debts were calculated up to the 5th October 1914 and the total amount of consideration, Rs. 35,000, was made up as on that date, and neither in the hands of Natarajulu nor in the hands of transferees from him can there be any priority between these various debts whatever their original dates might have been. It is unnecessary to deal with the larger contention of Mr. Varadachari that whereover there is a covenant by the vendee to pay off a prior debt of the mortgagor, there can be no priority in respect of it. The authorities relied on by Mr. Rajah Ayyar, for example, Satnarain Tevan v. Shoebaran Singh (8) and Chidambara Nadan v. Muni Nagendrayyan (9) show that no such broad proposition can be insisted on and it is safer to rest the decision in each particular case on the particular intention in that case derived from the facts and not upon any general formula of that kind. But so far as transferees from the first transferee are concerned, there can be no question of their intention, for they stand in no better position than their transferrer and it is unnecessary to examine their intention. After all, the rights conferred upon the transferees who pay off prior mortgages for using such prior mortgages as a shield are the result of an equitable doctrine in spite of the fact that the mortgages are extinguished, and where a transferrer by reason of his covenants and the transferee by reason of a notice of the transferrer's covenants show a different intention, there is no scope for the application of such an equitable doctrine. The decisions in Kasim Moideen Routher v. Annamalai Thevan (10) and in Thorne v. Cann (11), do not help the respondents. I therefore hold that the respondents mentioned in the above table cannot claim priority over the 'plaintiffs' debts in respect of the half share of Narayanaswami's debt under Ex. 5 and the other debts of Narayanaswami and the other bonds mentioned in the table.

The other point which arises in the case is the question of interest. There is no dispute about this. The plaintiffs are entitled to the contract rate up to the date mentioned in the decree for payment, namely, 10th April 1924. The Subordinate Judge allowed it up to the date of the decree and thereafter at 3 per cent per annum. The appellants will be allowed interest at the contract rate up to 10th April 1924 and on the consolidated amount from that date at 6 per cent per annum up to date of payment.

The decree will be modified according to the second and third of the above findings.

The appellants will pay the costs of defendant 2, Govindammal. The appellants will be entitled to proportionate costs on the amounts in respect of which there is a dispute as to priority from the 5th and 6th (in whose place defendant 4 has stepped in) pending appeal and from defendant 15 respectively but as to defendants 4 and 5 the appellants will be entitled to half the costs.

Jackson, J.—I agree. The question of the alienees' priority appears to me to be simply one of fact. They knew that their vendor had undertaken to pay off the mortgages, and they knew that their own sales were effected in pursuance of that undertaking. There is no ground for presuming that with that knowledge they ever intended to keep alive the mortgages which they paid up; and I should find, as a matter of fact that the idea never crossed their minds. No doubt as observed in Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsukh Das (12), it may ordinarily be presumed that a man having a right to act in either of two ways has acted according to his interest. But that presumption of fact is rebuttable as shown in Govindaswami Tevan v. Doraiswami Pillai (5). If the party who pays off the mortgage suffers by the presumption not being in his favour, he has only himself to thank for not committing his intention to paper. Although the intention to keep a mortgage alive need not be formally expressed in India, nevertheless such formal expression by way of deed would save parties considerable confusion, litigation and expense.

PHILLIPS AND REILLY, JJ.

Corporation of Madras — Appellants.

v.

Spencer & Co., Ltd.—Respondents.

Appeal No. 71 of 1928, Decided on 21st February 1929, against original judgment of Beasley, J, D/- 19th April 1928.

(a) Madras City Municipal Act, S. 365 (2) —Power given to council to levy license fees cannot be used as power of taxation.

A Corporation empowered to levy license fees, wanted to raise them from Rs. 25 to Rs 200, solely for the purpose of raising the revenue, the rise being merely a counter demonstration to the order of Government refusing to allow the Corporation to take the abkari revenue of the city.

Held : that the power given to council to levy license fees cannot be used as a power of taxation. [P 58 C 2]

(b) Madras City Municipal Act, Ss. 110 and 111—Taxes and license fees distinguished.

There is a great difference between taxes and license fee. That a tax is not the same as a license fees, is clear from the fact that no permission has to be obtained before the tax becomes payable and the tax is not paid for such permission, whereas the license fee is payable in respect of a permission which is granted by the corporation. So the taxes cannot be treated as being in the same category as license fees under the Act. [P 56 C 2, 57 C 1]

(c) Madras City Municipal Act, Ss. 365 (2) —License fee — Income should be proportionate to trouble and expense of corporation —If otherwise Courts can interfere on grounds of unreasonableness.

The fee income must be more or less proportionate to the trouble and expense incurred by the corporation in issuing license and in controlling trades and other matters for which licenses are issued. But roughly speaking if the fees bring in much more than the cost of necessary operations, or if the fees are so fixed that the whole cost incurred by the corporation in connexion with all the licenses or a grossly disproportionate part of it was imposed on one particular trade or a few particular trades, then the Courts can interfere on grounds of unreasonableness. Hence where the license fees for storing spirits was raised from Rs. 25 to Rs. 200, the Courts interfered : Kruse v. Johnson, (1898) 2 Q. B. 91 and 2 Rang. 215 ; Foll. : Institute of Patent Agents v. Lockwood, 1894 A. C. 347, Ref. [P 58 C 1]

S. Rangaswami Ayyangar — for Appellant.

Vere Mockett and O. T. Govindan Nambiar —for Respondent.

Phillips, J.—The only question for determination in this appeal is whether the action of the appellant, the Madras Corporation, in raising the license fee for storing spirits from Rs. 25 to Rs. 200 was within its powers. Beasley, J., who tried the case has held that the increase in the fee is unreasonable within the meaning of the term as defined by Lord Russel, C. J., in Kruse v. Johnson (1), and has directed refund to the plaintiffs, Messrs. Spencer & Co. of the excess amount paid by them. Mr. Rangaswami Ayyangar for the appellant now takes exception to this finding and says that the power to levy fees for licenses under the Madras Act 4 of 1919 is conferred on the council and it is within their power to fix the fee at any figure they please. He contends that if they fixed it at a figure too high or too low, the taxpayer has two remedies : (1) by exercising pressure on the member of the corporation for his ward with a view to getting the figure altered, and (2) the correction of its own mistake by the council ; but he was not at first prepared to accept the dictum in Kruse v. Johnson (1), that the Court has power to interfere with bye-laws which are unreasonable. The definition given of "unreasonable" at p. 99 of the report of that case is as follows :

"If, for instance, they (i. e., the bye-laws) were found to be partial and unequal in their operation as between different classes ; if they were manifestly unjust, if they disclosed bad faith ; if they involved such oppressive or gratuitous interference with the rights of those subject to them as could find no justification in the minds of reasonable men.

Appellant's contention in the first place is that the fees fixed for licenses for what are called dangerous and offensive trades which are leviable under the provisions of the Act are revenue in the same sense as the taxes which the council is empowered to levy. When there is a question of what is the power of taxation conferred by Government on a public body, a very careful scrutiny is necessary to see that only powers specially conferred are exercised and that nothing further is added to them. In part 3 of the Act which purports to deal with Taxation and Finance, Chap. 5 deals with taxation and enumerates the several taxes which the council is empowered to levy. Licenses are dealt with in part 4 of the Act, and are leviable under S. 287. The power to levy fees for licenses is given in the chapter on procedure. There can be little doubt that there is great difference between taxes and license fees. The fact that in Ss. 110 and 111 the levying of taxes is authorized but is stated to be by way of license fee does to some extent support the argument that taxes and license fees have something in common, but that a tax is not the same as a license fee, is clear from the fact that no permission has to be obtained before the tax becomes payable and the tax is not paid for such permission, whereas the license fee is payable in respect of a permission which is granted by the corporation. I must confess that the words "by way of license fee" in Ss. 110 and 111 are not very intelligible to me and I cannot think that the sections would be affected in any way by the omission of these words. Presumably the legislature intended to attach some meaning to those words, but nothing has been suggested in the course of these proceedings in explanation of the meaning. Whatever may be the meaning, I am satisfied that taxes cannot be treated as being in the same category as license fees under the Act. The argument, therefore, that, when the corporation is empowered to levy license fees, it may do so solely for the purpose of revenue does not seem to me to be tenable. Beasley, J., has held that the fees are leviable as compensation to the corporation for the expenses incurred in the issue of licenses and the general regulation of the trades and other occupations which are licensed and there must be some relation between these expenses and the amount of fees leviable. This was the view which was adopted by the Rangoon High Court in Municipal Corporation Rangoon v. Coorratee Bara Bazaar Co. Ltd. (2).

With all respect, I think this is a very reasonable view to take and, although possibly the above is not the sole consideration which may be taken into account in fixing the amount of fee, it is the main consideration. The license fees are in respect of what are called dangerous and offensive trades, that is to say, it is necessary in the interests of the city that the corporation shall know where such trades are being carried on and shall be in a position to see that they are carried on in a proper manner without causing unnecessary nuisance to other people or danger to the public generally. That being so, it is clear that the corporation must have power, but it does not follow that the corporation has the power to levy any sum it likes by way of license fee in order to raise the revenue and in fact it is conceded by Mr. Rangaswami Ayyangar that there must be some limit to the fee which can be imposed ; but he is not prepared to suggest what that limit will be. If there is such a limit, there is good reason for holding in accordance with the principle of Kruse v. Johnson (1), that, if the fee is unreasonable within the meaning of Lord Russell's definition in that case, the Court has power to interfere with its levy. We have been referred to another case Institute of Patent Agents v. Lockwood (3), in which Lord Herschell when dealing with the rules framed by the Board of Trade under the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1888, which fixed a certain fee, in the course of his judgment observed :

"I confess that it seems to me, if there were any power to impose fees at all, very difficult indeed to arrive at the conclusion, when the Board of Trade have sanctioned a particular fee, that it is within the province of a Court of law to canvass their conclusion, and to determine what is the legitimate amount at which the fee may be fixed."

If that remark is applicable to the present circumstances, it would follow that, as the council has power to fix the fee, it is not within the province of this Court to interfere, but there is a subsequent remark at p. 357, namely :

"I will say one word, however, before leaving this part of the subject, upon the point suggested that they involved something harsh or unfair as regards the respondent".

It is not unreasonable to interpret that as showing that that the learned Judge had the principle laid down in Kruse v. Johnson (1) in his mind, namely, that if there was something harsh or unfair in the rules, it may be that the Court will interfere. The case is certainly no authority to the contrary, and was not even cited in Kruse v. Johnson (1). The question, therefore, before us is whether Beasley, J., was right in holding that the levy of this fee was unreasonable. Apparently from 1904 to 1924 the fee of Rs. 25 was fixed as the fee for storing spirits. Until that date the word "spirits" was interpreted as denatured spirits and the fee was levied for the storage of such spirits. In 1924 and 1925 the license in its present form was granted for a fee of Rs. 25. At the end of 1925 a proposal was made to raise it and we have the minutes of the proceedings of the council from 15th December 1925 to 9th March, 1926 when the council finally fixed the fee at Rs. 200, changing the nature of the license to one for arrack and for foreign liquors containing alcohol. From the notes of the then Commissioner it would appear that the corporation resented the action of Government in collecting the abkari revenue within the city and in not allowing the corporation to utilise such revenue for themselves. As compensation the Government were paying a fixed sum annually to the corporation. The Commissioner suggested that, as the Government insisted on the old conditions being adhered to, the power to levy a fee for storing spirits should be fully exploited and raised. Accordingly the fee was raised from Rs. 25 to Rs. 200. Can it be said that this alteration was made reasonably? Taking it that the fee income must be more or less proportionate to the trouble and expense incurred by the corporation in issuing licenses and in controlling trades and other matters for which licenses are issued, the reason at the bottom of the resolution of the council is clearly not in accordance with the spirit of the Act. The fee was not raised because of the expense of collection or regulation but was merely a counter demonstration to the order of Government refusing to allow the Corporation to take the abkari revenue of the city.

The result of this increase of fee has undoubtedly been to impose on the persons who store such liquor a very unfair burden as compared with other tax payers in the city. From the evidence which has been adduced it would appear that the expenses of supervising the places where foreign liquor is stored are practically nil. The site is inspected when the license is originally granted and, so far as the evidence goes, no further action appears to be taken. If we compare the fee for this license with the fees for other matters which entail much greater expense and trouble on the corporation, such as fees for stables, dairies and storing skins and explosives, we find that the fee for storing spirits is by far the highest, although those other matters entail much greater trouble and are more dangerous and offensive to the general public. The fee for other licenses was not raised at the same time and consequently it is impossible to hold that there was justification for raising the fee for a license for storing spirits by 800 per cent. It was certainly not done with a view to pay for the expenses in connexion with such licenses but was obviously done to increase the revenue of the corporation from liquor, thereby replacing the abkari revenue taken by Government. This being so, I must find that Beasley, J., was amply justified in finding that the levy of the enhanced fee was unreasonable.

While holding that the enhanced license fee is unreasonable, the learned Judge has in his decree ordered that:

> "the plaintiffs are therefore liable only to pay a license fee of rupees twenty five (Rs. 25) which sum is amply sufficient to cover all the duties performed and the expenses incurred by the defendant corporation with respect to those licensed premises and other premises in respect of which licenses have been granted."

While agreeing with him that the enhanced fee is excessive, I do not think that the Court is justified in taking upon itself the power conferred by the Act upon the council, namely, the fixing of the amount of fees; in this case the omission to fix the fee for a license will make no difference in the substance of the decree, for the fee which was formerly leviable was Rs. 25 and this figure must be restored, as the resolution for its enhancement is invalid and the plaintiffs are therefore entitled to the refund of the balance of Rs. 175. The words of the decree quoted above should therefore be removed, but the decree is in other respects confirmed.

A somewhat surprising argument has also been advanced on the question of costs. The learned Judge has passed the usual order that costs should follow the result, and the circumstances would have to be exceptional to justify our interference with the order. Not only must we be of opinion that there were circumstances which justified a departure from the usual order as to costs, but we must be further satisfied that those circumstances were so exceptional that the learned Judge cannot have exercised his discretion judicially in ignoring them.

That is far from being the case here and this ground of appeal must be rejected.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Reilly, J.—I agree with the finding of the learned Judge on the original side that the power given by the Madras City Municipal Act to the council to levy license fees cannot be used as a power of taxation. The Act clearly provides in Part 3 for taxation and lays down what taxes the corporation may levy. Then the Act goes on to an entirely different part, Part 4, which is headed "Public Health, Safety and Convenience." In that part there are provisions to the effect that no person shall carry on certain trades, occupations or use any premises for certain purposes without getting a license from the Commissioner. The section in that part with which we are particularly concerned is S. 287, which provides that no person shall use any place for any of the specified purposes without getting the permission of the Commissioner in the form of a license. A person who wishes to use his premises for such purposes has to apply for a license. The Commissioner may grant, or refuse to grant, such a license. If he grants it, he may fix any conditions or restrictions which he thinks necessary. There is nothing whatever in this section about a person who wishes to use his premises for such a purpose being taxed, or his occupation or his premises being taxed. He has under those provisions to get a license. When we come to the end of the Act, there is another part headed "Procedure and Miscellaneous." S. 365 at the beginning of that part sets out that every license or permission must be signed by the Commissioner and must specify the restrictions, if any, which are imposed by the Commissioner. Then sub-S. (2) goes on to say:

"For every such license or permission fees may be charged at such rate as may be sanctioned by the council."

It is suggested that the fixing of fees for those licenses may be used by the council as method of taxation. Surely, if that was intended, that power would have been provided for in the part of the Act which deals with taxation. What could be the reason for bringing it in as a mere matter of procedure at the end of the Act? Mr. Rangaswami Ayyangar for the corporation has suggested that, because in the sections which deal with taxation one or two of them refer to the method of collecting taxes as "by way of license fees," therefore we must hold that there is no distinction between license-fees and taxes. I can see no sufficient reason in the rather loose language which is used in those sections about the means of collecting taxes to lead us to hold that under the Act it is intended that there should be no distinction between license-fees and taxes. I do not think that the matter really admits of any doubt. But, if there were any doubt about the meaning of S. 365 (2), if it were possible to read that subsection in two ways, in one way as empowering the council to impose taxes on persons who apply for licenses and in another way as empowering them only to require those persons to pay fees, then under the ordinary principle of construction when we are dealing with a statute which imposes or which it is contended imposes any liability on a subject or citizen to taxation, it would be imperative upon us to adopt the construction most favourable to the subject or citizen. But I do not think it is necessary to call that principle of construction to our aid in this case. I cannot imagine that the legislature, when providing for license-fees under the heading "procedure" and omitting them from the provisions regarding taxation, ever intended them to be treated in any way as taxes.

If the power to levy these fees cannot be used for taxation, it is admitted that the council has not the power to fix any arbitrary fee which it chooses. Mr. Rangaswami Ayyangar has admitted that there must be some limit to its power and that the fees must be reasonable. He has rightly contended that in interpreting the word "reasonable" in this connexion we must give it a wide and liberal interpretation. And I quite agree with his contention, that, when such a question comes before a Court, it is not for the Judge to try minutely to assess what is the proper fee; nor is it for the Judge to substitute his judgment in the matter for that of the public body to which the legislature has entrusted it. But I think there are two principles which we may use to determine whether the fees fixed by a Municipal Corporation with powers such as these can be held to be reasonable or not. If we accept the proposition that the power of charging license-fees cannot be used for taxation, then we must say that as a whole the fees charged by the corporation must not be very much in excess of what the duties cast upon them and their staff in connexion with the licenses cost them. There is the cost of issuing the licenses; there is the cost of inspecting the premises to see whether they are suitable for the purpose proposed; and there is the subsequent cost of inspecting the premises to see that they are being used properly and that the conditions and restrictions imposed by the Commissioner are observed. But roughly speaking, if the fees are charged at so high a rate that as a whole they bring in very much more than the cost of these operations to the corporation, then I think we can rightly say that they are unreasonable. There is another principle. Although it is almost impossible for the corporation itself to ascertain, when they are issuing a number of licenses to persons engaged in different trades and occupations, exactly what is the cost of any particular license or of licenses or of licenses for persons engaged in particular trades or occupations—and certainly we could not attempt anything of that sort—yet surely it would be unreasonable if they so fixed the fees that the whole cost incurred by them in connexion with all the licenses or a grossly disproportionate part of it, was imposed on one particular trade or a few particular trades. These principles I think may be of help in ascertaining whether a particular fee is reasonable or not. Mr. Rangaswami Ayyangar referred us to the case of Kruse v. Johnson (1), and asked us to accept the view of what is reasonable and unreasonable taken by Lord Russell, C. J., in that case. That I am very willing to do. But we must remember that Lord Russell in that case said that a bye-law which was partial or unequal in its operation would be unreasonable; and in the same way I think we can properly say that a license fee, if it was imposed partially or in a way which would make it unequal in operation, would also be unreasonable.

Mr. Rangaswami Ayyangar has tried to tell us how much the issue of these licenses is costing the corporation a year, and he has put before us some calculations which show that the total cost of the licensing operations is about Rs. 95,000 a year. I cannot say that I am entirely satisfied with the way in which he has arrived at that result. It appears to me that some parts of his calculations require a good deal of clearing up. But let us assume that his figures are correct. He has also told us that the total amount collected for these licenses is about Rs. 90,000 a year. If these figures are correct, the Corporation is collecting about Rs. 5,000 less than what the licensing operations cost them. If that is so, it would be very reasonable for them to increase their license-fees so as to cover the deficit. How they should increase them is not for us to determine. One obvious method would be an all round increase of license-fees so as to cover the deficit.

Another method would be to find out whether some license fees are clearly too low and to raise them. But what has the corporation done in this case? From the schedule with which Mr. Rangaswami Ayyangar has provided us it appears that there are over a 100 different classes of occupations and trades for which people have to apply for licenses. They have selected the one with which we are concerned—the storing of spirits. The fee for storing spirits before the change with which we are concerned was made was Rs. 25 a year. The storing of spirits is obviously not a very dangerous thing. It is not a thing which is offensive to the physical senses of persons in the neighbourhood. And the evidence shows that the corporation and its staff spend practically no time or effort on inspecting places where spirits are stored. For that kind of license one would expect to find a very moderate fee charged. Perhaps it may be said that Rs. 25 was a moderate fee. But they determined to raise it; and they proceeded to raise it eight times, to Rs. 200. That I find is double the amount charged for storing any other thing, however, dangerous or offensive, in this town. It is four times what is charged for licensing places for storing such dangerous things as nitroglycerine, fulminate of mercury and other explosives. It is many times the fee charged for storing fire works. On the calculations which Mr. Rangaswami Ayyangar has made it appears that, before this change in the rate of fee, about Rs. 1/48 of the whole cost of the licensing operations was collected from the persons who had to obtain licenses for storing spirits; after the change, about Rs. 1/6 of the whole cost of the licensing operations is collected from them. We are informed that there are only 72 of these particular licenses. I find from the schedule with which we have been provided that more than 6,700 licenses are issued for trades, businesses, and occupations. But 72 of them are made to pay about Rs. 1/6 of the cost of the whole licensing operations. I think that, when these facts are stated, no one could really contend that the fee fixed Rs. 200 is in any sense of the word a reasonable one. That being so, the council had no power to fix the fee at so high a figure. They appear to have done it with the intention of using their power as a power of taxation; and I may add that they appear to have used their power for improper discrimination.

I, therefore, agree that there is no sufficient reason for us to interfere with the decree of the learned Judge that the excess over Rs. 25 for each of these licenses must be refunded to the plaintiffs. I agree also that the learned Judge went too far when he attempted to decide for the present or for the future what is the reasonable fee which the council should fix. That, I think, is a matter for them; and, therefore, I agree that the words quoted from the decree by my learned brother should be struck out. With that modification I agree that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Second Appeals Nos. 260 to 291 of 1926, Decided on 23rd July 1929, from decrees of Dist. Judge, Tinnevelly.

(a) Madras Estates Land Act—Policy of Act is that ryots should know exact terms on which they are holding properties—Important change in terms of holding—Ryots must have notice.

The policy of the Madras Estates Land Act would seem to be that ryots should know the exact terms and conditions on which they are holding the properties for any particular fasli, and in case there should be any important changes in the terms of the holding they must have some reasonable notice of the same. That such is the intention is clear from the wording of several sections of the Act [P64 C 1]

(b) Madras Estates Land Act, S. 3 (5)—"Landholder" includes lessee from him.

The definition of "landholder" in S. 3 (5) is wide enough to include also the lessee from the owner or the landlord. [P 64 C 1]

(c) Madras Estates Land Act, S. 52 (3) - Landholder exchanging patta for one fasli - Same will be in force in succeeding fasli.

In cases where the landholder exchanges patta for one fasli, the same will be deemed to be in force in the succeeding [illegible] S. 52 (3); he cannot evade the applicability of S. 52 (3) by giving a lease and putting the lessee in a position to exchange pattas. Where, therefore, a landlord, having granted a lease for a term of years, places the lessee in the position of the landholder, and the patta is tendered by the lessee in the usual Court it shall have the same force as if the same is tendered by the landholder himself: A. I. R. 1922 P. C. 255, Rel. on. [P 65 C 1]

(d) Madras Estates Land Act, S. 27—Under S. 27 Court is entitled to presume that conditions of tenancy for one year continue to be in force for next year—But under S. 52 it so remains in force.

By S. 27 a rule of presumption is enacted and the Courts are entitled to presume that the conditions of tenancy for a particular year continue to be in force in the year immediately following. But under S. 52 it is not merely a question of presumption, for the section enacts that pattas "shall" remain in force. [P 65 C 1]

Judgment.—Plaintiff is the appellant in these second appeals. Summary Suits Nos. 44 etc. of 1916 and Nos. 36 etc. of 1917 were instituted by the plaintiff-appellant in the Court of the Honorary Deputy Collector of Tinnevelly Division to recover rent due in respect of properties in the possession of the ryots defendant in the inam village of Vagaikulam. The inam village belongs to Sri Vyasaraya Swamigal Mutt at Sosalai in the Mysore State. The practice of the Mathadhipati had been, as is disclosed by the evidence in these cases, to grant leases to persons for different terms authorising them to recover the rent from the ryots in possession of the lands. It is in evidence that leases for particular terms were granted, among others, to the father of the plaintiff. The last of the said leases came to an end with fasli 1321; and the plaintiff obtained a lease for faslis 1322 to 1331 from the Mathadhipati, and on the basis of the said lease he instituted the various suits mentioned by me to recover arrears of rent due for faslis 1322, 1323 and 1324.

In the plaints, the plaintiff claimed rent on the basis of "waram." The defendants pleaded that it was the "sharing system" that was in vogue in the village, but that the rates claimed by the plaintiff were not the correct rates and that the correct rates of rent were those paid by them to the plaintiff's father, the previous lessee. As I said, though both claims involved division of the produce, yet, there was difference as regards the proportion in which the produce was to be divided according to the contention of the plaintiff and the defendants, the plaintiff claiming more, while the defendants contended that the plaintiff was entitled only to a less proportion of the produce.

When the present suits were filed, there was pending in the High Court a batch of second appeals preferred by the plaintiff's father as lessee against other ryots of the village to recover rent due for certain faslis. A similar contention was raised in those suits also, and though the Deputy Collector had accepted the contention of the plaintiff, the landlord in those suits, the District Court had modified the decree passed by the Deputy Collector and consequently, second appeals were preferred to the High Court in which similar questions were raised. The parties agreed to have the hearing of the present suits adjourned from time to time so that they may have the benefit of the High Court's decision in the second appeals mentioned by me. The final decision of the High Court was pronounced, after findings had been called for by the High Court, and submitted by the then District Judge, only on 23th December 1916 : vide Ex. H (6) in the case. The real trial of the present suits, therefore, began only after the said judgment of the High Court was passed. Though the present defendants were not parties to the litigation that was pending in the High Court, yet having regard to the fact that similar questions had to be decided in the present suits, the judgment of the High Court was treated as evidence on the points on which the parties were at issue in the present suits. The Deputy Collector considered the judgment of the High Court and the other evidence adduced by the parties to the present litigation and came to the conclusion that the contention of the plaintiff as regards the proportion in which the produce was to be divided was the correct one according to the evidence adduced in the case. There were, however, other disputes raised before him about the plaintiff's right to recover certain cesses. I may mention that as many as nine cases were the subject of dispute between the parties. The Deputy Collector upheld the contention of the plaintiff in respect of seven out of the nine cases ; and in respect of two, namely Kalvainazar and Yavanai, he held that, though the High Court had in the previous litigation upheld the validity of the same, yet, having regard to the evidence adduced by the parties in these present suits the plaintiff was not entitled to recover these two cesses. There was another important question raised before the Deputy Collector with reference to the amount of rent due to the plaintiff for fasli 1322. To properly appreciate the exact contention between the parties relating to the dispute regarding the rent due for fasli 1322 I must mention that, during the existence of the lease in favour of the plaintiff's father, the plaintiff's father had admittedly exchanged pattas and muchilikas for faslis 1315 and 1316. It was a point for decision whether there were subsequent pattas tendered by him for subsequent faslis.

The Deputy Collector held that having regard to the provisions of S. 52 (3), Madras Estates Land Act, pattas which were in force during the currency of the lease granted to the plaintiff's father continued to be in force for faslis 1322 also and, consequently, the plaintiff, who tendered a patta for fasli 1322 which was not accepted by the defendants, was not entitled in this suit to recover rent at a rate different from that mentioned in the patta exchanged by the previous lessee. There was also a further question as regards interest, and also as to the liability of one Kulathu Ayyar, defendant in summary suit 48 of 1916. The plaintiff preferred appeals to the District Court against the disallowance by the Deputy Collector of the two cesses mentioned above. He also appealed against that portion of the decree of the Deputy Collector wherein he disallowed the plaintiff's claim to rents at the higher rates at which he had tendered pattas for fasli 1322. On appeal the learned District Judge discussed the applicability of S. 52 (3), Madras Estates Land Act, in paras. 18 to 22 of his judgment.

His decisi on was that th Deputy Collector was right in his view that the plaintiff was not entitled to the higher rate of rent in respect of fasli 1322.

The main arguments raised before me by the learned advocate for the appellant in these second appeals turn on the correctness or otherwise of the decision of the lower Courts on the applicability of S. 52 (3), Madras Estates Land Act, to the suits in question, so far as the rent for fasli 1322 is concerned. In the first place, it was argued that there was no patta tendered to these defendants after the coming into force of the Madras Estates Land Act, namely after 1st July 1908. It was contended that the very basis for the application of S. 52 (3) would be wanting as no patta tendered prior to the coming into force of the Madras Estates Land Act would according to the contention, attract the result mentioned in S. 52(3). With reference to this argument it was pointed out by the learned advocate on behalf of the respondent that, as a matter of fact, Ex. 4 is a patta on record exchanged by the plaintiff for fasli 1312 that is for the year begining from 1st July 1908 and ending with 30th June 1910, that is, for a period after coming into force of the Madras Estates Land Act. To this it was replied by the learned advocate for the appellant that this solitary patta would not be an answer so far as the other defendants to these suits are concerned. In answer to this it was urged that the case was conducted in the lower Courts on the footing that there was no difference between the reliefs to be decreed as against one defendant, and other defendants in these several suits, and probably it was on that understanding that patta granted to one particular ryot only, out of the several defendants ryots, for fasli 1319 was exhibited. Whatever might be the real reason, I think, having regard to the way in which these cases were conducted in the lower Courts and having regard to the agreement between the parties that the evidence in the main case was to be taken as common to all the other cases and that the decision was to be arrived at on the common evidence, that the circumstance that pattas tendered to other defendants for fasli 1319 have not been exhibited should not make any difference in my decision of these several second appeals. Having this before me the patta tendered for fasli 1319, I think the distinction which was sought to be drawn by the learned advocate for the appellant, that S. 52 (3), Madras Estates Land Act, would not apply to these cases, does not exist. My attention was also drawn to the circumstance that in ground 11 of the grounds of appeal preferred to the lower appellate Court there is a statement to this effect :

"Further the patta for fasli 1321 was only a waram patta and not a pattam patta."

The case of the appellant here, however, is that for fasli 1321, no patta was in fact tendered by the plaintiff or accepted by the defendants. The learned advocate for the appellant suggests that this statement in the lower appellate Court appeal memorandum is probably a mistake and that the reference to patta for fasli 1321 should really be, to patta for fasli 1322. Whatever might be the real explanation for this, there is, as I stated, the fact proved in this case that in respect of at least one fasli after the coming into force of the Madras Estates Land Act the plaintiff's father (the then lessee) did tender a patta containing rates which support the plea of the defendants and, as I have already said, no distinction can be made between the case of defendant 1 and another, having regard to the manner in which this batch of cases has been tried in the lower Courts.

The second argument raised by the learned advocate for the appellant in support of his position that S. 52 (3), Madras Estates Land Act, does not apply to these cases is this. The section evidently contemplates cases where the person who exchanged the previous patta is either the very person who is the plaintiff in the present case, or any other person who is the representative in interest of the person who tendered the previous patta ; and that, as it is admitted in this case that the previous patta was tendered not by the landlord, the Matadhipati, but by a lessee from him for a term of years, therefore, it was argued that, the patta does not enure after the expiry of the lease and that S. 52 (3) could not apply to such a state of circumstances. I had to consider this question in a recent case from Madura, and having regard to the arguments advanced before me then, I came to the conclusion that that argument was not sound. I had the benefit of another argument in this case, and I may say that I have not been convinced that my previous decision was in any way erroneous.

The policy of the Madras Estates Land Act would seem to be that ryots should know the exact terms and conditions on which they are holding the properties for any particular fasli, and in case there should be any important changes in the terms of the holding they must have some reasonable notice of the same. That such is the intention is clear from the wording of several sections of the Act. The definition of 'landholder' in S. 3 (5), Madras Estates Land Act, is wide enough to include also the lessee from the owner or the landlord. There are other provisions of the Act—namely those relating to (1) to commutation of rent, (2) to enhancement of rent and (3) to the conferring of permanent occupancy rights on tenants : see Ss. 40, 30 and 6 of the Act, which contemplate that the landholder under the Estates Land Act would include also lessees in the position of the plaintiff's father and in the position of the plaintiff. It was asked on what principle of law could it be said that the landholder claims from the lessee? It is true that though the lessee could be said to claim from the lessor, it cannot, according to the ordinary law, be said that the landholder is the representative of the lessee. But as remarked by the Privy Council in the case reported in Radhakrishna Ayyar v. Sundarswami Iyar (1) at p. 484 (of 45 Mad.) the question is not whether the plea is res judicata ia the sense that it is binding upon a person who is the representative of the prior party who is bound. After quoting a sentence from the decision of the Divisional Officer in that case to the following effect :

"I therefore find that the previous judgments are res judicata in these suits as they have gone fully into the question of custom relating to the different stipulations in the patta."

Their Lordships observe :

"However natural it may have been to treat the position thus, their Lordships cannot sustain on any legal grounds the plea of res judicata here suggested. In the language of the High Court, the answer is that the general doctrine of res judicata is not in question, but the application of the special rule stated in S. 52 (3), Estates Land Act, under which muchilikas decreed for any revenue year remain in force until the beginning of the year for which fresh ones are exchanged or decreed, and that there is no reason for restricting the scope of the general reference to muchilikas decreed to those decreed by any description pf Court. With this view the Board is in full agreement."

If I understand the reasoning of their Lordships aright, their Lordships, while upholding the plea of the defendants to the effect that the judgment of the revenue Court under Act. 8 of 1865 relating to rates of rent does not constitute the matter res judicata, because according to the ordinary requirements of the doctrine of res judicata the Court which decided the first suit should have competency to entertain the subsequent suit under the Madras Estates Land Act—at the same time held that adjudication in these prior suits as regards the terms of a patta was such as attracted the special provisions of S. 52 (3) of the Act. Turning to S. 52 (3) of the Act I find that a patta accepted for one fasli shall remain in force until the commencement of the revenue year for which fresh pattas and muchilikas are accepted, exchanged or decreed. The decision of the Privy Council is direct authority in support of the position that the section applied to cases where the previous pattas were the subject matter of a decree between the parties. Even in such cases, though the doctrine of res judicata did not apply, they held that the parties were bound, having regard to the provisions of S. 52 (3), by the pattas so decreed. In my view the same reasoning will also apply to pattas and muchilikas which were accepted or exchanged between the parties for the previous fasli. I am accordingly of the opinion that even if the present suits were instituted by the landlord, I should arrive at the same conclusion. Though the lessor could not be said to be the representative of the lessee, yet, having regard to the special provisions of S. 52 (3), patta exchanged for the previous fasli should be taken to be in force for purposes of these second appeals, so far as the rent for fasli 1322 is concerned. One further argument was advanced on behalf of the respondent. In cases where the landholder exchanged patta for one fasli, the same will be deemed to be in force in the succeeding fasli under S. 52 (3); he cannot evade the applicability of S. 52 (3) by giving a lease and putting the lessee in a position to exchange pattas. If the landlord cannot evade the section, then the lessee from him should also be held to be unable to escape the applicability of the section. In the case before me the landlord, having granted a lease for a term of years, placed the lessee in the position of the landholder, and the patta tendered by the lessee in the usual course should have the same force as if the same was tendered by the landholder himself. In this connexion I should draw attention to S. 27, Madras Estates Land Act, where it is enacted that "if a question arises as to the amount of rent payable by a ryot or the conditions under which he holds in any revenue year, he shall be presumed, until the contrary is shown, to hold at the same rate and under the same conditions as in the last preceding revenue year."

By that section a rule of presumption is enacted and the Courts are entitled to presume that the conditions of tenancy for a particular year continue to be in force in the year immediately following. When we turn to S. 52 we find that it is not merely a question of presumption for the section enacts that pattas "shall" remain in force etc.; so that the legislature for reasons of its own thought it proper to enact S. 52 in a way different from that in which S. 27 is worded. After all, it is open to the landholder in such cases to take proper steps to have what he alleges to be his real rights enforced, and if he waited without taking such steps, the section says that the previous patta shall remain in force until certain things are done.

The learned District Judge in dealing with this question observes as follows: see para. 19:

"On the other hand the Act does not make any distinction between a proprietor's patta and muchilika and a lessee's patta and muchilika; there seems some reason to suspect that, if the validity of the appellant's claim were conceded, the safeguards provided for the tenant by the Act with regard to patta and muchilika will prove illusory and in practice enable the landholder to reduce S. 52 (3) to a dead letter in some cases like the present.

Similar observations were made by the Deputy Collector also in support of the defendants' contention and he also came to the conclusion that S. 52 (3) applied to these cases.

For the foregoing reasons, I am of the opinion that the lower Courts were right in these cases in coming to the conclusion that S. 52 (3) applied with reference to the claim of the landlord for rent for fasli 1332. I am not here concerned with the claim for rent for faslis 1323 and 1324, as there is no appeal before me regarding the same. (After considering the subsidiary question of Kalvainazar his Lordships dismissed the appeals and cross-objection and proceeded).

LEAVE TO APPEAL.

Though I feel that this litigation which started in 1915 should come to an end by this time, I regret I am unable to give effect to the same: for one of the questions raised in this batch of second appeals relates to the construction of S. 52, (3), Madras Estates Land Act. It was represented to me that there was no reported case on the construction of this section, and in that view I granted leave to appeal in S. A. Nos. 540 to 568 of 1928 where this question arose. Having given leave in those cases, I feel I am bound to grant leave to appeal in these cases also, since the construction of S. 52 (3) arises in these second appeals also. I accordingly grant leave to appeal.

Appeal No. 431 of 1927, Decided on 23rd July 1929, from order of Sub-Judge, South Malabar, in Appeal No. 214 of 1927.

(a) Transfer of Property Act, S. 91—Suit for redemption by second mortgagee—Second mortgagee can rely upon admission by first mortgagee regarding subsistence of mortgage—Limitation Act, S. 19.

In a suit for redemption the second mortgagee can rely upon an admission made by the first mortgagee in a deed, executed within sixty years next before the suit, in which deed he admitted that the common mortgagor was the owner and that the suit properties were demised to his family on kanom. Such an admission necessarily implies that the mortgage was then subsisting and that it was liable to be redeemed: 26 All. 313, Rel. on. [P 66 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 114—Mere allegation of loss of instrument — Court concluding that there was mortgage—Mortgagee is not relieved from affirmatively making out terms of mortgage—Finding based on such wrong presumption — High Court can take notice of it under Civil P. C., S. 103.

It is a wrong presumption to hold that the mortgagee has only to allege that the original instrument is lost and if the Court comes to the conclusion that there was a mortgage, the mortgagee is relieved from the duty of affirmatively making out the terms of the contract, because the Court may presume that any contract which they set up is true. And a finding based upon such a presumption is vitiated by an error of which the High Court can, if it pertains to facts, take notice under S. 103, Civil P. C. [P 66 C 2 P 67 C 1]

K. Kuttikrishna Menon—for Appellant.

P. Govinda Menon—for Respondents.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—This is a suit for redemption of a kanom alleged to have been made is 1856. It is in its turn said to be a renewal of kanoms of still earlier dates. The plaintiffs claim redemption having obtained a melcharth or second mortgage from a Devaswom said to be the original owner of the properties in question. Their case is that the Devaswom mortgaged those properties to a certain Naduvakat tarwad to secure 2650 fanams and that the annual purapad is 15 paras of paddy. Defendants 1 to 5 and 19 are members of the aforesaid tarwad and represent the original mortgagee. Defendant 6 who is the appellant is in possession of some items and claims an interest in virtue of some deeds executed in his favour by certain members of the same tarwad.

The plaintiffs seek to prove the mortgage by a copy (Ex.-A) of the original kychit executed in their favour. Their case is, that the document was filed in a case and the records in that suit including the original kychit were destroyed during the Moplah rebellion. The District Munsif came to the conclusion that the copy produced is a fabrication and on that ground dismissed the suit.

He has, however, held that it has been proved that the Devaswom is the owner of the properties and that they were demised on kanom to the predecessor-in-interest of defendants 1 to 5 and 19. In coming to this conclusion he acted upon two Exs. S. and W. of the years 1881 and 1893. In those deeds the executants, some members of the tarwad, admitted that the Devaswom was the owner and that the properties were demised to their family on kanom. The District Munsif was justified, on these admissions, in finding that the plaintiffs' Devaswom was at one time the owner of the property. But he observes that these admissions by themselves cannot avail the plaintiffs, for it is their duty to show that a kanom answering to the mortgage alleged in the plaint was created and, secondly, that it was subsisting on the date of the suit. Let us now take the second point first. Under S. 19, Lim. Act, an acknowledgment to be effective must be made before the period of limitation has expired. True, but it is necessarily implied in the admission we have referred to, that the mortgagee acknowledges that the mortgage was then subsisting; in other words, that it was liable to be redeemed. This is the plain effect of the admissions and we are supported in this view by Dip Singh v. Girand Singh (1) at p. 316. On this point therefore we do not agree with the District Munsif; but this does not dispose of the case. It is not sufficient for the plaintiffs to show that there is a subsisting mortgage. It is their duty to prove further the terms of that mortgage and the case with which they came to Court having been disbelieved by the District Munsif, we must hold that they have failed to prove the terms.

An appeal was taken to the Subordinate Judge and he has held that Ex.-A has been satisfactorily proved. If the question is one of fact, we should certainly refuse to disturb his finding, for our powers, though this is in form a civil miscellaneous appeal, are substantially those of a second appellate Court. In reversing the Munsif's finding, the Subordinate Judge has given effect to a wrong presumption. What he says in effect is this: If you find that the plaintiffs have a title, if it further appears that there was a mortgage in favour of the defendants, it is for the latter to disprove the terms of the contract as spoken to by the plaintiffs. In other words, the plaintiffs have only to allege that the original instrument is lost and if the Court comes to the conclusion that there was a mortgage, the plaintiffs are relieved from the duty of affirmatively making out the terms of the contract, because it is said, the Court may presume that any contract which they set up is true. This is, in our opinion, quite a wrong presumption and the judgment of the lower Court, vitiated by this error, cannot be supported.

Applying this presumption, the Subordinate Judge first records a finding in these words:

"It appears to me that there is not sufficient evidence to hold that Ex. A is not a true copy of a kychit that was executed in favour of the Deveswom."

A little lower down he states his conclusion in words very positive and remarks:

"My finding on issue 2 is that the kychit sued on is genuine and that the properties are held under it."

The learned Judge overlooks the apparent contradiction between these two passages.

We have had to reject his finding for this reason and the question is, what is the course we are now to adopt. Under S. 103, Civil P. C., we have ourselves examined the evidence and come to the conclusion that the Munsif has recorded a correct finding. The plaintiffs have made no attempt to prove the case with which they came to Court namely, that the purapad was being paid till 1924. This, in our opinion, confirms the view of the Munsif and in the result we allow the appeal, set aside the order of remand and confirm the decree of the District Munsif.

This appeal against order having been posted to be spoken to this day, the Court made the following order:

Posted for being spoken to. Defendant 6 alone has filed this appeal. But under O. 49, R. 4, Civil P. C., defendants 12 to 17, respondents 4 to 9 are entitled to the benefit of our judgment. The decree of the District Munsif in favour of defendant 6 and defendants 12 to 17 is restored. The result is, the appeal is allowed with costs of the appellant in this and the lower appellate Court.

Judgment.—The defendant is the appellant in this second appeal. The receiver of Melappudi village sued for enforcement of pattah on the defendant a ryot of the village. There was the usual dispute between the parties as to what the proper terms of the pattah should be. The defendant's plea was that one Subbaraya Pillai, who, it was alleged, was owner of the suit village, agreed with the defendant to commute the rents into a fixed money rent permanently and once for all, and issued pattah in Fasli 1328 embodying the rates agreed upon. The Special Deputy Collector of Chandragiri Division who tried the summary suit upheld the contention of the defendant, and came to the conclusion that the proper rates of rent were the cash rates that the commutation was bona fide and binding on the plaintiff. He accordingly directed that the pattah should be amended by insertion of the cash rates as contended by the defendant. On plaintiff's appeal, the learned

District Judge of Chittoor disagreed with the findings of the first Court and held that the rates in the tendered pattahs were the proper rates, and he directed the defendant to accept the tendered pattah and execute a muchilika in exchange with similar terms.

The defendant has preferred the second appeal and on his behalf it was first contended that the appeal to the lower appellate Court filed by the receiver was incompetent. To appreciate the contention it is necessary to state that the Rajah of Karvetnagar had filed a suit to recover possession of the suit village among others, that in the appeal preferred by him to the High Court against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot dismissing the suit, the High Court appointed a receiver in respect of the suit village, and that on an appeal preferred by Subbaraya Pillai and others to the Privy Council against the decree of the High Court passed in favour of the Rajah of Karvetnagar, the Privy Council on 21st May 1922, reversed the decision of the High Court and dismissed the Rajah's suit on the ground that the suit was barred by the law of limitation.

The appeal to the lower appellate Court was presented by the receiver on 12th June 1922. The appellant contends that as soon as the Privy Council dismissed the suit on 21st May 1922, the receivership came to an end and that the receiver had no locus standi to prefer the appeal on 12th June 1922. We are unable to accept the contention. The receiver had not been discharged by the Court which appointed him, time for preferring the appeal would expire before the High Court which appointed the receiver could be moved to pass orders on the re-opening of the High Court, in July 1922, and in the circumstances we think that the receiver's appeal could not be said to be incompetent as contended by the appellant We accordingly overrule this objection.

The next objection raised by the appellant was that Subbaraya Pillai was the owner of the suit village and that the commutation arrangement made by him with the ryot was bona fide and binding on the plaintiff and that the proper rates of rent are the cash rates agreed to between Subbaraya Pillai and the ryot. The respondent in answer to this contention, relied on S. 26, sub-S. (3), Madras Estates Land Act, under which no rate of rent at which land may have been granted by a landholder shall be binding upon the person entitled to the rent after the lifetime of the landholder, if such rate is lower than the lawful rate payable by the ryot before the date of the grant upon the land. The finding of the lower appellate Court is that the new rates fixed by Subbaraya Pillai are lower than the rates payable by the ryot before. As the present case is not sought to be brought within the exception contained in sub-S. (1) of the section, it is clear, having regard to the admitted fact that Subbaraya Pillai died before the fasli in respect of which the present suit was brought, that the rates of rent agreed to by Subbaraya Pillai would not be binding upon the person entitled to the rent after the death of Subbaraya Pillai. It was, however, argued by the learned advocate on behalf of the appellant that it could not be said that the receiver was "a person entitled to the rent" within the meaning of the subsection. Having regard to the definition of "landholder" in S. 3, Cl. 5, Estates Land Act, and having regard to the fact that the Court granted permission to the receiver under O. 40, R. 1 (1) (d), Civil P. C., to file these suits, and also dismissed the application subsequently filed by the ryots to cancel the order granting the said permission for the institution of these suits, we think that the plaintiff the receiver comes within the provisions of sub-S. 3, S. 26, Estates Land Act.

The decision in Swaminatha Odayar v. Sundaram Aiyar (1), relied on by the appellant is distinguishable, as it turned on the wordings of S. 46, Estates Land Act, sub-S. 5 of which specifically provides that sums payable under that section for the acquisition of occupancy ryots shall be paid to the landholder who is the owner of the estate, and any application or proceeding under the section shall be made only to or against such landholder. The Court accordingly held that the application by a non-occupancy ryot under S. 46 of the Act could be made only to the 'owner' of the estate, and not to the receiver in charge of the estate. the word 'owner' does not occur in

(1) A, I. R. 1921 Mad. 314=44 Mad. 274.

S. 26, which is the section with which we are here concerned.

On the merits the lower appellate Court held that Subbaraya Pillai was not the sole proprietor of the village, that he was only one of the legal representatives of the deceased Saravana Pillai, and that the other legal representatives did not join Subbaraya Pillai in the act of commutation of rents relied on by the ryots. It also held that Subbaraya Pillai was in needy circumstances at the time that the new rates fixed by him fell short of the old rates and that " there was no evidence as to the circumstances under which a lower set of rates was charged by Subbaraya Pillai, " and further that

" the grounds on which the so called commutation was made were not really tenable and that they were hardly real. "

We think that the learned District Judge's findings, being findings of fact, should be accepted by us in second appeal.

We hold that under S. 26 (3), Estates Land Act, the rates fixed by Subbaraya Pillai are not binding on the receiver who represents the proprietor of the village.

We accordingly dismiss the second appeal with costs.

B. Sitarama Rao—for Appellant.

P. Govinda Menon—for Respondents.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The question we have to decide arises in execution of a decree passed in a suit brought to enforce a mortgage. The first three defendants in that suit were father, mother and son respectively. Defendant 4 is the wife of the third. Defendant 2, the mother, died before the passing of the preliminary decree. Defendants 5 and 6, her daughters, were added as her legal representatives, defendant 3, her son, another heir, being already on the record. I may mention, though it is not necessary for the purpose of this case, that defendant 5 died and her children were brought in her place on the record. It was after these changes in regard to parties that the preliminary decree came to be passed. Subsequent to the passing of that decree, defendant 3 died. His legal representatives were his father, defendant 1, his widow, defendant 4 and his infant son, who now intervenes in execution and impeaches certain proceedings as being void. On the death of defendant 3, no application was made to bring his legal representatives on the record. They were three in number as I have just shown. Two of them who were adults were already on the record. The third, whose name was omitted to be added was an infant. What happened, however, was, that without defendant 3's legal representatives being formally brought on the record, the final decree in the case was passed. In execution of this decree, a certain sale was held. Defendant 3's infant son to whom I have already referred, now applies that the sale may be set aside on the ground that it is null and void.

The first question that arises is, what is the effect of the omission to bring formally the representatives of defendant 3 on the record? What the result would have been if such omission had occurred, before the passing of the preliminary decree, it is unnecessary to enquire; although I very much doubt, when the representatives happen already to be on the record, whether O. 22, R. 4, applies and the suit abates, as against the deceased party, on the ground that they were not formally added as such representatives. Here, it was after the passing of the preliminary decree, that defendant 3 died; to such a case, it has been held that the provisions relating to abatement do not apply. The principle is thus stated in the judgment of the Full Bench in Perumall Pillai v. Perumal Chetty (1).

"The right of action . . . . . is determined by a preliminary decree, because the final decree is only by way of working out in detail the principles laid down and determined in the preliminary decree."

The case is then analogous to a party being absent on the record at the stage of execution. A good deal of argument was directed at the Bar to the point, what are the powers of an executing Court to call the decree in question, first, when it is wholly null and void, and, secondly, when it is merely voidable? Mr. Sitarama Rao contends that in neither case, can the executing Court decide questions relating to the executability of the decree. He next urges, that although he may concede without admitting, that the executing Court may refuse to give effect to wholly void decrees, in the case of other decrees, its duty is merely to execute them as they stand. The decree before us is clearly not a nullity; and in the present case it is unnecessary to express any opinion on the vexed question regarding the powers of an executing Court.

The question in this case is not one of procedure but of substance. The cases cited at the Bar as to the proper remedy open to the petitioner need not, in my opinion, be discussed. The question of remedy does not arise unless the party has a right which he can enforce; and it is therefore needless to consider whether S. 47 applies, or whether his remedy is by an independent suit. Having regard to the facts of the present case, the principle applicable is that set forth by the Privy Council in the judgment in Khirajmal v. Daim (2). It is sufficient to state only a few facts of that complicated case. Nabibaksh was one of many defendants to the suit which was brought to enforce a mortgage. On a petition presented by him and others the suit was referred to arbitration. Shortly afterwards, Nabibaksh died leaving two widows, an infant son and a daughter. The names of the widows and son were added to the record but the daughter was omitted. The award was duly made and a decree passed. In execution of that decree, certain sales took place. At the instance of the heirs of Nabibaksh, the question arose in a subsequent suit (the one before the Privy Council), are the proceedings binding upon Nabibaksh's estate? Their Lordships held that notwithstanding that the name of the infant daughter was omitted, the estate was sufficiently represented and that the share of the deceased Nabibaksh in the equity of redemption in the property sold was wholly bound by the sale and irredeemable.

The same principle was applied in Kadir Mohideen Marakayar v. Muthu Krishna Ayyar (3). That was a suit upon a mortgage, and before the decree was passed, the mortgagor died. The plaintiff thereupon brought the mortgagor's son, defendant 1, on the record as his legal representative, and after that, a decree for sale was passed. As a fact, defendant 1 was not the sole representative as the mortgagor had left two other sons and three daughters. In execution of the decree, the mortgaged property was sold and the question arose, whether the sale was binding upon the second son of the mortgagor whose name had not been added. It was held that the mortgagor's estate was sufficiently represented and that the sale passed his entire interest including that of his second son. The learned Judges observe:

"In our opinion a person whom the plaintiff alleges to be the legal representative of the deceased defendant and whose name the Court enters on the record in the place of such defendant sufficiently represents the estates of the deceased for the purposes of the suit and in the absence of any fraud or collusion the decree passed in such suit will bind such estate. It will of course be open to any other person who is or claims to be the legal representative or one of the legal representatives of the deceased defendant to apply to have his name also entered on the record as a legal representative in the place of the deceased defendant."

(3) [1903] 26 Mad. 230=12 M. L. J. 368.

It is noteworthy that in the judgment, it is stated that in the case of a Muhammadan family, there is a special need to apply this rule. Otherwise, when a Muhammadan dies leaving innumerable heirs (as not infrequently happens) the omission to bring any one of them on the record may wholly vitiate the proceedings. I refer to this fact specially to show that the contention of Mr. Govinda Menon is without force, that the theory of representation, while it holds good in the case of Hindu joint families, is inapplicable where the parties happen to be Muhammadans. In these two cases which I have quoted, the death occurred before the decree was passed. The rule applies even with greater force when the party as in the present case, dies subsequent to the decree, that is to say, the decree which declares and determines the rights of the parties. The case which more nearly resembles this, is Dip Narain v. Lachman (4). After the preliminary decree, the judgment-debtor died and one of his representatives was brought on the record. A final decree was thereafter passed, which, it was held, was binding upon the other representatives whose names had been omitted to be added.

The representation may be incomplete but yet sufficient : vide Ramaswami Chettiar v. Oppilamani Chetty (5) at p. 8. Was the estate then of defendant 3 sufficiently represented? He left three heirs, one of them being his minor son, the present petitioner; but the other two, who were brought on the record, were the paternal grandfather and the mother of the minor. They must be held to have sufficiently represented the estate and the decree that was passed and the sale that was held are therefore binding upon the entire estate, including that of the infant son. Mr. Govinda Menon urges strongly that there must be something on the record to show that the Judge, who made the order bringing the representatives on the record, applied his mind to the question and was satisfied that the representation was, in the circumstances, sufficient. There is an obvious fallacy in this argument, for, when the Judge makes the order, it is assumed he is not aware of the existence of other representatives. If he then proceeds upon the footing that the representative whose name he is adding, is the sole representative, how can it be said that he has applied his mind to the question of the sufficiency of representation ? There is one feature of this case, which, on facts distinguishes it from the cases I have referred to. Some of the legal representatives were already here on the record, though of course, in a different capacity ; but in those cases an application for that purpose had to be made. This cannot make any difference in principle. The question is not one of form but of substance. The father and the widow of defendant 3 doubtless knew that they were his legal representatives, and I fail to see why on the ground that they were not so described, they should be held not to have represented his estate. A preliminary decree having been passed, they could object to the final decree, only by showing that in the meantime the amount declared to be due had been paid. It is not alleged that any such payment was made and that the decree should not have been made absolute. There is no reason for holding that there was not sufficient representation when the only adult representatives were on the record, and having no defence to make, allowed a final decree, in the usual course, to be passed. The minor therefore cannot question the sale which, as I have shown, is binding upon him. The appeal is allowed with costs throughout.

Madhavan Nair, J.—I agree. In this case a preliminary decree for sale on a mortgage was passed against defendants 1 to 3. Before the final decree was made, defendant 3 died. His legal representatives were his father, defendant 1, his widow defendant 4, and an infant son who now takes objection in the execution proceedings. These were not brought on record as legal representatives before the final decree was passed though two of them who were adults were already on record. In execution of the final decree the rights of defendants 1 to 3 were sold. The respondent, the son of the deceased defendant 3 whose name was omitted to be brought on the record as a legal representative defendant 3 now objects to the sale. The question for consideration is whether the objection raised by him regarding the validity of the decree can be gone into in execution. The District Judge relying on two decisions of this Court, Subramania Aiyar v. Vaidyanatha Aiyar (6) and Arunachala Chettiar v. Abdul Subhan Sahib (7) and also on the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Gora Chand Haldar v. Prafulla Kumar Roy (8), came to the conclusion that the objections raised by the respondent could be heard, and decided by the executing Court. The decisions quoted are inapplicable to the present case as the decrees in those cases were void decrees and the Court had no jurisdiction to pass such decrees. The same cannot be said about the decree in the present case. Though the respondent was not brought on record as the legal representative of defendant 3 in the suit before the final decree was passed, the decree cannot be said to be an absolute nullity on that ground. It is to be noticed that defendant 3 was on record at the time when the preliminary decree was passed and that he died only subsequently. It was held in Perumal Pillay v. Perumal Chetty (1), that O. 22, Rr. 3 and 4, Civil P. C., do not apply to cases of death after the passing of the preliminary decree in a suit. According to the opinion of the Full Bench :

"the right of action.....is determined by a preliminary decree because the final decree is only by way of working out in detail the principles laid down and determined by the preliminary decree."

If so, the decree passed in this case cannot be objected on the ground that it is a void decree and that the Court had no jurisdiction to pass such a decree. It follows that the objection raised by the respondent cannot be gone into in execution. This appeal must therefore be allowed with costs throughout.

In this view, I do not discuss the question whether the final decree in this case is a valid decree binding on the respondent having regard to the fact that the ther legal representatives of the deceased defendant 3, viz., defendants 1 and 4, were already on record though they were not formally brought on record as legal representatives.

T. L. Venkatarama Iyer—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a revision petition against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Dindigul in A. S. No. 120 of 1925 on the file of this Court allowing an amendment of the plaint and remanding the suit to the lower Court for ascertaining the amount of compensation due to the plaintiffs from defendants 7 and 23 to 25. The facts which have led up to this order are as follows. The suit was for redemption of 16 items of property mortgaged usufructuarily by the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiffs to the predecessors-in-title of the defendants. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiffs had no title as regards items 1 to 12 of the mortgaged property and as regards the four remaining items that they had sold away the equity of redemption and had purchased it in the case of only one item 14, with which alone the appeal and the present petition are concerned. It was found that defendant 6 who had purchased this property from defendants 5 and 7 had acquired absolute title and that the plaintiff had lost the right of redemption by limitation. The plaintiffs sought to amend their suit by asking for damages against defendants 5 and 7, which was refused by the Court of first instance but allowed on a revision petition to the High Court in the case reported in Kariya Goundan v. Thirukkaivelu Chetty (1). The plaintiffs had repurchased the equity of redemption from one Ajam Khan but the Court held that the document under which they made this purchase would not be binding on the heirs of Ajam Khan as the plaintiff had imagined at the time of the plaint. This objection to the validity of the document was taken by the defendants for the first time during arguments of the case and I am told by the petitioner's advocate that it was due to a certain decision of the Privy Council which had been given after the suit commenced. In appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge allowed an amendment by adding the heirs of Ajam Khan as parties and found that defendants 5 and 7 were bound to pay compensation to plaintiffs and remanded the suit to the lower Court for ascertaining the amount of compensation due in the shape of mesne profits.

It was sought to be argued before me that there could be no damages awarded for what was lost by limitation. It is not, however, open to the petitioners to take this ground in a revision petition which must be confined to the point on which the remand was made. Other matters have to be taken in the ordinary course of appeal : vide Jainulabideen Maracayar v. Habibulla Sahib (2). The only question therefore before me is whether the amendment should have been allowed and the suit remanded for taking evidence. It is objected that as the suit has not been disposed of on a preliminary issue, O. 41, R. 23 does not apply. Assuming that the rule does not apply, it is now well established that the Court has inherent power to make such remand under S. 151 : vide Muthappa Chetty v. Ramanathan Chetty (3), B. Mallayya v. P. Veerayya (4), Karuppanna Pillai v. Ethumalai Pillai, A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 859 ; Mallayya v. Veerayya, A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 335, Venkamma v. Goparaju Perraju, A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 991, Suppia Nadar v. Muthiah Pillai, A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 984. Jainulabideen Maracayar v. Habibulla, A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 430. The only question therefore is whether in making the remand the Court has transgressed any rule of law, or of procedure so that it must be held to have acted without any jurisdiction. It is argued for the petitioners that the amendment involves a change of the plaintiff's case since they had distinctly stated in their plaint that they were the full possessors of the equity of redemption in this item by purchase from Ajam Khan, whereas now they may be turning out to be only joint owners of the equity of redemption.

It is further argued that there was no reason for the defendants petitioners to take any ground of non-joinder of parties in their written statements as there was nothing in the plaint to disclose such non-joinder. Finally it is urged that evidence of mesne profits should not be now allowed since the plaintiffs had the opportunity of adducing it before and did not do so. I do not think the petitioners have any real grievance in the matter of the amendment. In suits for redemption of mortgages it is necessary to add any one who may have any interest in the redemption in order that the mortgagee may not be worried by multiplicity of suits. But it does not affect the real question between him and the mortgagors once they are all brought on the record. Moreover, in this case it was the petitioners themselves who raised during the course of the argument the objection that Ajam Khan's heirs were necessary parties. They need not have raised this objection at all had it not been obviously to their interest to do so, and they cannot therefore object with very good grace to an amendment of the plaint being allowed, which has become necessary owing to their objection and which does not substantially affect the question at issue. As regards the admission of evidence, it is seen from the judgment of the Court of first instance that evidence was adduced but it related to all the items 1, 2, 13 and 14 together, and the learned District Munsif himself states :

"If the damages had to be assessed, more evidence will have to be taken. That course, however, is unnecessary in my view, as the suit is liable to be dismissed for non-joinder of parties."

Thus evidence of mesne profits was tendered as regards item 14 and the Court of first instance has clearly stated that it would not take more evidence on the point since the suit had to be dismissed for non-joinder of parties. I do not find that there is any reason to suppose that the Court has exercised its inherent powers of remand without jurisdiction.

The last objection is that the learned Subordinate Judge should not have awarded the petitioners to pay costs of the appeal. The only instance which the learned advocate for the petitioners was able to show me of an order as to costs being interfered with in revision is Brij Behari Lal v. Shivnath Prasad (5). That was a peculiar case in which it was held that the Court which gave costs had actually no power in the circumstances to award costs at all. There is no reason to interfere in the present case. In the result, the petition is dismissed with costs.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The short question is : What is the effect of Ss. 199, 200 and 201, Companies Act, read with S. 3 ?

An order was made by the High Court under S. 187 ordering the payment by a contributory in respect of a call. He has property in the District of Tanjore against which the liquidator can proceed. The latter accordingly produced the order before the District Judge and applied for its execution. The Judge overruling the objection of the contributory held that he had jurisdiction to enforce the order.

We have to decide whether the order of the District Judge is right. It is stated by both sides that the only relevant provisions of the Act bearing on the question are the four sections to which we have referred. To them, therefore, we propose to confine our attention. The decision really turns on the meaning of S. 200 read in the light of S. 3.

The relevant portion of the former section runs thus :

"Any order made by a Court for or in the course of the winding up of a company shall be enforced in any place in British India other than that in which such Court is situate, by the Court that would have had jurisdiction in respect of such company if the registered office of the company had been situate at such other place."

Let us apply the section to the facts of this case. The order was made by the High Court in the course of the winding up. It is sought to be enforced in Tanjore. Under the section, which is the Court that can enforce it? The answer is :

"the Court that would have had jurisdiction in respect of such company, if its registered office had been situate at Tanjore."

What then is that Court? The answer to this question is furnished by S. 3, which reads thus :

"The Court having jurisdiction under this Act shall be the High Court having jurisdiction in the place at which the registered office of the company is situate."

In other words, if the registered office of this company is situate at Tanjore, the Court having jurisdiction under the Act, would be the High Court. From the foregoing statement, it follows that the only Court that can enforce the order in question against property at Tanjore is the High Court of Madras. We do not propose to decide the question, in what manner, in the event of an application being made to the High Court, is the order to be enforced, by direct action or by its being transmitted to the Tanjore Court? That is a point which does not arise at present. We fail to see how Ss. 199, 201 relied upon by Mr. Venkatachari support his contention. The section that confers jurisdiction is S. 200 and the other two sections referred to by the learned advocate merely deal with the mode of enforcing the orders. This, in our opinion, is the proper construction of these previous sections.

The view we have taken receives support from Kayastha Trading and Banking Corporation v. Jai Karan Lal (1). Mr. Venkatachari asks what purpose then does S. 200 serve? The answer is simple. It obviously can apply to a case where an order made by the High Court of one Province is to be enforced in another Province; and as the Patna High Court in the decision we have cited has pointed out, in such a case, it can only be enforced by the High Court of that other Province.

Lastly, Mr. Venkatachari seeks to support the order of the lower Court by relying upon S. 3, Cl. 3, which says :

"Nothing in this section shall invalidate a proceeding by reason of its being taken in a wrong Court."

It is very doubtful whether this clause applies to a case of this kind. In any case, it can have no application, as the Patna case has decided, when the objection was taken at the very commencement and at the proper time. This appeal is allowed with costs.

The act of the Official Liquidator in applying to the lower Court is bona fide and we, therefore, allow him to take his costs out of the estate.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 38 of 1929, Decided on 30th April 1929, against order of Venkatasubba Rao, J., D/- 27th February 1929 reported in A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 607.

 Letters Patent (Mad.), Cl. 15—(As amended up to December 1928)—Judgment by a single Judge after 1st February 1929—Judge refusing leave to appeal—Refusal to grant leave is not appealable.

The intention of the legislature as appearing from Cl. 15 is that a judgment passed by a single judge in a second appeal after 1st February 1929 is final and not appealable and that an appeal could be entertained against the said judgment only if the Judge who decided the second appeal granted leave to appeal. If leave to appeal is refused by such Judge no appeal lies from the order refusing leave to appeal: (Case law considered.) [P 78 C 1, 2]

Judgment.—This is an appeal purporting to have been preferred under S. 15, Letters Patent, against the refusal by a learned Judge of this Court of leave to appeal from the judgment passed by him in a second appeal.

A preliminary objection is taken by Mr. Venkataramana Rao, the learned advocate who appeared for the respondent that no appeal lies from such orders of refusal of leave to appeal.

Clause 15, Letters Patent of this High Court, was recently amended on 3rd November 1927, and on 12th December 1928. The effect of these amendments is to declare that no appeal shall lie to the High Court from the judgment passed in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction in respect of a decree or order made in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction by a Court subject to the superintendence of the High Court (and not being an order made in the exercise of a revisional jurisdiction or in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction) of one Judge of the High Court, or of one Judge of any Division Court pursuant to S. 108, Government of India Act, made on or after 1st February 1929, unless the Judge who passed the judgment declares that the case is a fit one for appeal. The second appeal in question was heard by the learned Judge after 1st February 1929 and the learned Judge when moved by the present appellant has declined to grant leave to appeal under Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. The appellant has preferred this appeal against the said refusal by the learned Judge to grant leave to appeal. The question is whether this appeal is maintainable.

As remarked by the Privy Council in Minakshi v. Subramanya (1), at p. 27:

"it is not to be assumed that there is a right of appeal in every matter which comes under the consideration of a Judge; such right must be given by the enacted law or equivalent authority."

The Privy Council made a similar observation in the case reported in Mayor & Co. of Montreal v. Brown and Springle (2), at p. 184:

"The rule of law in this country is that an appeal does not lie unless given by express legislative enactment see also Lane v. Esdaile (3) at p. 211 Lord Halsbury, L. C."

That being so, the appellant must point out the provision of law under which he claims this right of appeal. The rule would apply with equal, if not with greater force, when it is sought to prefer appeal against the decision of one learned Judge of a Court to a Division Court of that Court. Under S. 108, Government of India Act, the Chief Justice shall determine what Judge in each case is to sit alone and what Judges of the Court are to constitute the several Division Courts. The decision passed by such Judge or Division Court would be final unless a right of appeal be specifically given. Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent is the only provision which has been brought to our notice, and it is under that clause that the present Letters Patent Appeal has been preferred. On a reading of Cl. 15 as amended, it is clear to us that no appeal would lie to the High Court from a judgment passed by one Judge of the High Court in second appeal, after 1st February 1929. No further appeal to the High Court is available except where the Judge who passed the judgment declares that the case is a fit one for appeal.

When a right of appeal is given subject to any condition, it is clear that the said condition should be strictly complied with before the right of appeal could be taken advantage of. As stated in Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, Chap. 12 S. 3:

"Where it was provided that no appeal should be entertained unless certain rules were complied with, the neglect of the statutory requisites would obviously be fatal."

Mr. Raghava Rao, the learned advocate for the appellant argues, however, that what Cl. 15 prohibits is only an appeal from the judgment of one learned Judge on the merits of a second appeal, and that the clause does not prohibit a right of appeal from the refusal of one learned Judge to declare that the case is a fit one for appeal; in the case of such refusal, he argues, there is right of appeal, and if the appellate Bench also agrees with the learned Judge on the question that the case in not a fit one for appeal, then only is there an end of right of appeal. In other words, if we understood his contention correctly, he argues that while there is no right of appeal against the judgment passed on the merits in the second appeal, there is a right of appeal from the refusal in such a case to grant leave and the appellate Bench should decide, as best as it could, whether the refusal to grant leave to appeal was right or not. He did not hide from us the fact that the appellate Bench may have for this purpose to go into the merits of the case itself, to such extent as it thought necessary.

He also argued that the question now is not in respect of a decree or order, made in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction by a Court subject to the superintendence of the High Court, but that it is with reference to a judgment passed by the High Court itself, and that the restrictions referred to in Cl. 15 do not apply to a judgment of the High Court.

We are clear that the arguments of the learned advocate for the appellant are untenable and that the present appeal is not maintainable.

The practice of providing a right of appeal subject to conditions, though comparatively new to India, has been prevailing for a long time in England; sometimes leave of the Judge who decided the case or of the Court is made the condition precedent for the entertainment of an appeal; in other cases leave of either a Judge or the Court on the one hand or of the Court of appeal on the other is made a condition precedent. An instance of the former is furnished by S. 45, Judicature Act of 1873, and an instance of the latter is furnished by the Judicature Act of 1894 S. 1 (5). In India we have got an instance furnished by S. 75, Cl. 3, Provl. Insol. Act where a right of appeal to the High Court is given on obtaining leave of the District Court or of the High Court, in respect of certain orders mentioned therein. English Courts had to consider the very question raised in this appeal before us, namely ; whether there is any right of appeal from the refusal of a Judge to grant leave to appeal.

In Kay v. Briggs (4), the Court of appeal held :

" where a Divisional Court has refused special leave to appeal under S. 45, Judicature Act, 1873 from their decision given in an appeal from a county Court, the Court of appeal has no jurisdiction to hear an appeal from such refusal. "

The following passage occurs in the judgment of Lord Esher, M. R. :

" If this Court could overrule the discretion given by that section to Divisional Courts, the practical effect would be to allow an appeal here in every case, because the facts of each would be brought before us in order to enable us to decide whether or not we ought to overrule that discretion. I think that the real meaning of S. 45 is to confine the power to give leave to appeal absolutely to the Divisional Courts. I am of opinion therefore that we have no jurisdiction to interfere with the exercise of their discretion. "

Fry, L. J., observes as follows in the same case.

" If an appeal from the refusal of the Divisional Court to grant leave to appeal could be brought to this Court, our order would not satisfy the only contingency upon which the section provides that the decision of the Divisional Court shall not be final, because special leave to appeal would be given not by the Divisional Court, but by this Court. The decision of the Divisional Court would cease to be final, although the contingency remained unsatisfied.

In Lane v. Esdaile (3), the House of Lords decided that

" no appeal lies to this House from a refusal of the Court of appeal to grant special leave to appeal from a judgment of the High Court . . . . . such a refusal is not an order or judgment of the Court of appeal within the meaning of S. 3, Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876. "

At p. 215 Lord Herschell observed as follows :

" If the contention of the appellants were well founded I think it would follow that under this S. 45, Judicature Act (of 1873), there could be an appeal to the Court of appeal from a refusal by a Divisional Court, and an appeal again from the Court of Appeal to this House ; so that every county Court case might be brought up to this House upon the question whether an appeal should be allowed or not. "

Lord Field remarked at p. 216 ;

" it seems to me that if your Lordships were to say now ' we will give leave, ' and the Court of appeal must enforce that, it would be imposing upon them the duty of giving a leave, as their leave, which they in their own judgment think ought not to be given. "

We may refer to one more case, Ex parte Stevenson (5), where

" Judge at Chambers having refused to grant leave under Sch. 2, Cl. 26 (a), Housing of the Working Classes Act 1890, the Divisional Court held that no appeal lay to them from his decision. The Court of Appeal held that no appeal lay. "

Lord Esher, M. R. at p. 611 laid down the law in the following words :

" I am on principle and on consideration of the authorities that have been cited, prepared to lay down the proposition that, wherever power is given to a legal authority to grant or refuse leave to appeal, the decision of that authority is from the very nature of the thing, final and conclusive and without appeal, unless an appeal from it is expressly given . . . . The very nature of the thing really concludes the question ; for, if, where a legal authority has power to decide whether leave to appeal shall be given or refused, there can be an appeal from that decision, the result is an absurdity and the provision is made of no effect. If the contention for the claimant be correct it would follow that the case might be taken from one Court to another till it reached the House of Lords on the question whether there should be leave to appeal. That cannot be so. For these reasons, I think the appeal must be dismissed. "

Fry, L. J., gives some other reasons in support of the same position, at p. 612 :

" Is the order granting or refusing leave to appeal, subject to appeal ? In my opinion it is not. I do not come to that conclusion on the ground that the word " order B " is not properly applicable to it ; but from the nature of the thing and the object of the legislature in imposing this fetter on appeals. The object clearly was to prevent frivolous and needless appeals. If, from an order refusing leave to appeal, there may be an appeal, the result will be that in attempting to prevent needless and frivolous appeals, the legislature will have introduced a new series of appeals with regard to the leave to appeal . . . . . It appears to me that that would be an absurd result in the case of a provision the object of which is to prevent frivolous and needless appeals. Therefore from the very nature of the thing, the decision of the Court which has the power of giving leave to appeal is, in my opinion, final."

It is perhaps useful to quote one or two sentences from the judgment of Lopes, L. J., at p. 612:

"Where an appeal is given that is made subject to the leave of the Court or a Judge, or any other legal authority, I think that the granting or refusal of leave by such Court, or Judge, or other legal authority, is final and unappealable. The object of making appeals subject to leave is to prevent unnecessary and frivolous appeals. If an appeal were allowed from granting or refusal of leave to appeal, the result would be that, instead of checking appeals, they might be multiplied to a most mischievous extent; for an appeal from the granting or refusal of leave might be carried from the Divisional Court to this Court and from this Court to the House of Lords. For these reasons I think that the preliminary objection must prevail."

It was argued that the order passed by the learned Judge refusing leave to appeal in this case should be taken to be a judgment within the meaning of the Letters Patent and in support of that position certain decisions of this Court were cited to us: Tuljarama Row v. Alagappa Chetty (6), Sonachelam Pillai v. Kumaravelu Chettiar (7), Official Assignee of Madras v. Ramalingappa (8), and Maharaja of Pittapuram v. Rama Rao (9). Having regard to the decision of the House of Lords in Lane v. Esdaile (3), already referred to, it is, to say the least, very doubtful whether such an order refusing leave could be said to be a 'judgment' for the purpose now under consideration, within the meaning of Cl. 15, Letters Patent. But we are clear, reading Cl. 15 as a whole, that the intention of the legislature is that a judgment passed by a single Judge in a second appeal after 1st February 1929, is final and not appealable, and that an appeal could be entertained against the said judgment only if the Judge who decided the second appeal granted leave to appeal. This, to our mind, is clear from the provisions of Cl. 15, Letters Patent. The learned Judge having in this case declined to grant leave to appeal, the judgment in second appeal is final. Whether the order refusing leave to appeal be a 'judgment' or not, it is clear that no leave to appeal that might be granted by a Division Court would satisfy the requirements of the clause which provides that an appeal would lie only when the Judge who heard the second appeal grants leave to appeal. The English cases fully support the above position. A decision of this Court reported in Madhava Aiyar v. Muthia Chettiar (10), referred to by the learned advocate for the respondent supports this view, though we think that the grounds for holding that no appeal lies in the present case are probably stronger than the grounds mentioned in the case in Madhava Aiyar v. Muthia Chettiar (10).

For the above reasons we are clear that no appeal lies from the refusal of leave to appeal by a learned Judge from a judgment passed by him in a second appeal after 1st February 1929, under the amended Cl. 15, Letters Patent, and we dismiss the appeal with costs of the Respondent (Plaintiff) 1.

Original Suit Appeal No. 33 of 1928, Decided on 1st May 1929, from judgment of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., D/- 25th November 1927, in Civil Suit No. 595 of 1925.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 6. R. 4—Allegations of fraud or breach of trust—Pleadings must be particularized and specific.

The litigant ought to know, at any rate, in general terms what case he has got to meet, and especially in cases where there are allegations of fraud and breaches of trust. These matters ought to be particularized to a point at which he knows not merely generally but in detail what he has to meet. [P 79 C 2]

Coutts-Trotter, C. J. — I have had the advantage of reading the judgment prepared by my learned brother in this case and I entire agree in the result. I only desire to say one thing in this connexion. There seems to me to be a grave defect in the method of pleading and still more in the method of drawing up the issues which appears to be finding favour in these Courts. It is a settled rule of English pleading that any charge involving anything of the nature of fraud should be set out specifically with particulars where necessary. For instance, if breaches of trust are alleged on the part of a trustee it is essential that they shall be particularised in precise detail, such as sums of money or other items of trust property alleged to have been misappropriated. Besides that safeguard we have the system in this country of having issues settled before the trial which is supposed to extract from the pleadings the matters which are really in dispute between the parties and to reduce them to a series of short propositions. That is not part of the English system. It is inherited from the Scottish system of jurisprudence. Not being familiar with that system I can express no opinion as to its merits or demerits in the country of its birth. But I do know this in a general way that a Scottish Judge who is settling issues treats it as a very serious matter and reduces his issues to a high degree of precision and exactitude even when full pleadings are demanded. In India I am afraid the system of settling issues is so perfunctory that the issues are really worse than useless as a guidance to the trial Judge. That, at any rate, was in the main my experience during the eight years in which I sat day by day on the original side. Sometimes the issues were vitiated by the fact that when one got into the case it was quite obvious that they put the onus on the wrong party; sometimes they were so vague as to be a less guide to what really was to be tried even than the pleadings. I could not take a better example than issue-settled in this case which runs as follows :

"Have the trustees been guilty of any, and, if so, what breaches of trust, misfeasance, malfeasance and non-feasance in respect of the trust estate ?"

That opens the door to allow the defendants to bring any sort of charge at the trial, unspecified and unparticularised, and gives the plaintiff whose conduct is impugned no sort of notion what charge and how many charges, all obviously of a very grave nature, he has to meet. I remember asking a very experienced and eminent county Court Judge in England whether he did not find difficulty from the absence of regular pleadings in the county Courts such as one would find in the High Court. He said :

"No; I find that the parties know perfectly well what they have come to have decided and at the time their case is opened their advocates know exactly what matters to direct my attention to."

Whether that be correct or no, of course, I am not in a position to say ; but of this, I am quite certain that, if one is to act on that principle not only issues but pleadings just as well be abolished tomorrow. That, I think, is not right especially in India because I think the litigant ought to know, at any rate, in general terms what case he has got to meet, and especially in cases where there are allegations of fraud and breaches of trust. I think that those matters ought to be particularised to a point at which he knows not merely generally but in detail what he has to meet. I would personally suggest that issues settled as they are now settled by a Judge who knows nothing about the case and usually signs the issues drafted by counsel who know little more, are worse than useless and have a fictitious importance which they do not deserve. I would far sooner see attempts made by better instruction in the Law College and above all in the Chambers where the budding practitioner learns his business in the art of pleading with sufficient definiteness, to make it clear exactly what the Court is called upon to try. In every jury trial in England a junior counsel for the plaintiff before the case is opened summarises the pleadings giving the substance of them and concludes in these words ; and a good junior will make it clear to the jury what exactly the issues are raised by the pleadings and takes a good deal of trouble to see that his summary is correct and omits nothing material. But, of course, with the laxity of pleadings which obtains in this country it is very difficult, it is almost impossible, that the issues settled on those pleadings should not partake of the same laxity. The remedy appears to me to teach the budding practitioner to plead properly and definitely. It should not be difficult to teach a young man how to plead. There is a very good work by Dr. Blake Odgers in England and for the student it is not really necessary to go to the larger work by Bullen and Leake except for proper forms of pleading in particular classes of cases. Two books on pleading have appeared in this country, one by Sir Cecil Walsh, K. C., who recently retired from the Allahabad High Court, and the other a bigger book which I looked through at the time but the name of the author of which I regret to say I have forgotten. Of course at one time English pleadings were overlaid with technicalities and plaintiffs were often nonsuited for some purely technical slip in the pleading and had to amend it and start all over again all that after witnesses have been summoned, briefs delivered and everything was ready for trial. That state of things was put an end to by Judicature Acts and I think the present state of pleading in England, though it leaves room for making it quite easy to distinguish between the work of a neat and slipshod pleader, really does enable the Judge to know exactly what the points at issue between the parties are. If a pleading is vague and leaves it obscure as to what precisely is the case intended to be set up, it is quite easy for the opposite party to take out summons for further and better particulars of this or the other paragraph of the statement of claim or defence and hundred of such summonses are disposed of after hearing counsel by the Masters every day in Chambers.

"On that issue is joined and those are the issues which you have to try.";

It is the rarest thing in the world to have applications for particulars of allegations in pleadings in an Indian Court. I think that what happens is that the juniors in charge of the cases trust to the settlement of issues to bring definitness into the case, a hope in which in my experience they have often been grievously disappointed and of course at that stage the leaders probably would not even have considered the case at all which may not come up for trial for months. Most Indian pleadings are overlaid with pleading the evidence in support of the particular facts alleged. That is useless cumbering of them but as a rule it does not do much harm. But in cases where there are allegations of fraud or kindred allegations more particulars are absolutely essential and I should like to see the Indian student and the young budding advocate put through a real course of proper instruction in the art of pleading. That would bear fruit in time if it is properly carried out, and I think it must be taught in the first instance by English Professors or English Barristers who worked under and know the English system. I am not gainsaying that in the hands of experienced advocates at the trial, the opening of the case of the parties gets rid of a lot of verbiage and focusses the attention of the Court on what is really material and really necessary. But in my opinion it is almost impossible to gather it from the issues even with the assistance of the pleadings, which I must honestly confess I think are less loose and vague in their terms than the majority of issues framed to-day.

The Indian system of pleading we have adopted is of course taken from the English system of jurisprudence just as the framing of the issues is taken from the Scottish system as I have pointed out; but unfortunately particularity and preciseness which are characteristic of all very ably drawn English pleadings are entirely absent from Indian pleadings for the most part. There are no doubt some well-drawn pleadings in India but almost invariably there are very often cases in which summons has been taken out by the opposite party to compel the pleader on the other side to redraft his pleadings in a more specific form. I think it would be well worth while to have a committee of legal teachers and a few practitioners to go into this matter and consider what suggestions could be fruitfully made to bring about a better state of things. I think the present is a case in which vague pleadings and vague issues might have led to serious embarrassment or even to a miscarriage of justice.

Walsh, J. — This is an appeal by plaintiff 1 against two parts of the decree in C. S. No. 595 of 1925. The suit arose in the following circumstances. The appellant is the adopted son of one Rathnavelu Chetti who was a Dubash in Best & Co. This Rathnavelu Chetti was a wealthy gentleman and on 18th May 1919 he executed a deed of trust setting apart certain moveable and immovable properties for certain charities and for allowances to some of his relations. Effect was given to the deed of trust from July 1919 and the founder died in February 1922. His adopted son, the appellant, succeeded his father as President of the Trust Board. Owing to the fall in value of the trust properties, the trustees found themselves unable to meet the sums payable under the trust-deed from the income of the trust properties. They passed a resolution in March 1923, to cut down the allowances proportionately all round. This being objected to by some of the beneficiaries, an application was made on the original side asking for directions for the abatement of the provisions contained in the trust deed. Waller, J., ordered that a suit should be filed and consequently this suit was filed by the trustees. The materially contesting defendants were defendants 11, 12 and 18. Of these, defendant 11 is the sister's son of the founder of the trust. He is really responsible for any serious opposition to the suit scheme but he has not appeared in this Court to oppose the appeal. A commissioner was appointed by the Court to go into the accounts and submit his report. His first report was dated 15th March 1927 and a further report was called for to take accounts as to what a building known as "Kilton" cost for construction and how much of the total cost had been taken out of the trust funds. We are not concerned in this appeal with the matter of "Kilton." The decree states in para. 2 that the commissioner's two reports be and are hereby confirmed, but with regard to the two matters on which this appeal is preferred and which are dealt with in paras. 4 and 5 of the decree, the commissioner gives no decision on the first and on the second his report does not support the order passed in the decree.

The first is a matter of payment of Rs. 3,150 to plaintiff 1 between February 1922 and April 1923. According to the deed of trust, during the minority of plaintiff 1 the sum of Rs. 350 per mensem was to be paid to the wife of the founder which was to be for her own maintenance and that of plaintiff 1 and for the education of the latter. After plaintiff 1 attained majority, the founder's widow was to get Rs. 250 per mensem and plaintiff 1 Rs. 350 per mensem. Defendant 11 objected that the plaintiff 1 did not attain his majority until 7th April 1923, whereas the trustees had been paying him at the rate of Rs. 350 per mensem from February 1923 to April 1923, as if he had attained majority. Defendant 11, who as stated above, has been the person really raising objections to the suit, made no clear statement on the point in his written statement. He merely states in para. 10 that the allegations in para. 9 of the plaint are not quite correct. Para. 9 of the plaint states that, after the death of the founder, expenditure was considerably increased by the founder's wife and his adopted son becoming entitled to the monthly allowances of Rs. 250 and Rs. 350 respectively. All that defendant 11 does in para. 10 of his written statement is to recapitulate the exact terms of the trust deed. He does not state definitely that plaintiff 1 had not attained majority or at what stage he actually did attain majority. In the written statement filed by defendants 12 and 18, there is a definite statement that plaintiff 1 became entitled to a monthly allowance of Rs. 350 only on 7th April 1923, when he attained majority. There was no specific issue framed on the point and the only issue by which this matter can be said to be covered is the general issue 7 :

" Have the trustees been guilty of any and if so, what breaches of trust, misfeasance, malfeasance, and non-feasance in respect of the trust estate ?"

The matters that were referred to the commissioner were to take the following accounts namely :(a) an account of the properties of the trust estate and (b) an account of the income that the said properties will fetch if proper and reasonable care is exercised. Before the commissioner, defendant 11 led evidence as to the minority of plaintiff 1. Plaintiff 1's advocate seems very properly to have objected on the ground that it was not a question referred to the commissioner. The commissioner, (while he took some evidence), probably in view of the fact that he was not asked to report on this matter, merely states:

" If the Honourable Court accepts the defendant's contentions the receipt of this item of money by plaintiff 1 would be unauthorized."

No evidence was led on the matter before the learned Judge whose only reference to it in the judgment is as follows:

" The next question is as regards the sum of Rs. 3,150 which was collected by the trustees after the death of Rathnavelu Chetty and taken by plaintiff 1 in his personal capacity as and for his allowance. So far as this is concerned, it is clear that he was not entitled to any allowance until he attained majority. Plaintiff 1 has not shown how he was entitled to his allowance. He will, therefore, bring back Rs. 3,150."

In our opinion, the learned Judge has thrown the onus on the wrong side in this matter. It was for those who attacked the administration of the trustees to show that they had committed misfeasance in this respect. As noted above, the question was not one referred to the commissioner and objection was taken by plaintiff 1 to his enquiring into it. The commissioner gave no opinion on the matter and as no evidence on it was led before the learned Judge, there is properly speaking no evidence on the point and, therefore, the alleged misfeasance has not been proved. The learned advocate for the appellant has, however, taken us through the evidence adduced on the point before the commissioner and in our opinion the evidence on plaintiff 1's side is much superior to that adduced by defendant 11. Defendant 11 was the only witness examined to prove that plaintiff 1 was not a major when his adoptive father died. Now plaintiff 1's adoptive father together with defendant 11 had filed a suit in 1922 of which the plaint is Ex. H. The date of the plaint is unfortunately not given in the printed portion extracted and the date put in the index, 15th July 1917, is obviously wrong for the suit was only one of 1922. In Ex. H, the present first plaintiff was defendant 5 and while, in the case of other defendant who were minors the fact is distinctly stated and their guardian named, the present plaintiff 1 is not described by his adoptive father (plaintiff 1 in that suit) or by the present defendant 11 (plaintiff 2 in that suit), as a minor.

This suit was, as regards his adopted son, a formal one by Rathnavelu and it is not alleged that there was any adverse interest between the plaintiff in that suit and present plaintiff 1. When defendant 11 was cross-examined on this point before the commissioner, he had no explanation to give and said he did not know whether the averment in the plaint was right or wrong and that he signed it because Rathnavelu Chetty asked him to sign it. On the other side, defendant 11 relied on Ex. 4. This purports to be a copy of a transfer certificate given when plaintiff 1 left the Lutheran Mission Secondary School at Purasawakam and the entry relied on in it is " date of birth as per admission register, 7th April 1905." In the first place, the document itself has not been properly proved. It is professedly a copy of the transfer certificate. Defendant 11 as D. W. 1 says, he did not get it from the Head Master but from defendant 7. The latter is not called nor is the Head Master called. Even if Ex. 4 be accepted as a correct copy coming from proper custody, it would not be evidence on the point of date of birth because it is a copy of a copy.

It is the admission register alone which would be evidence of the date of birth. As a matter of fact, Ex. 4 possesses very suspicious features. We find in it purporting to be part of the document itself and in such a position that it must be part of the document " No. 61/1922-23." These certificates have got to be given at the time the boy leaves the school for another school. How this No. 61/1922-23 could appear on a certificate that the boy left on 30th

April 1915 has not been explained. Another suspicious feature is that the pupil's name is given there as R. Rathnasabapathy. Plaintiff 1 had admittedly not been adopted at the time he left the school. His name was then Manickam, and his initial should have been " M " and it was only after his adoption that he would get the intial " R " of his adoptive father Rathnavelu. Defendant 11 filed Ex. 2 alleged to be a copy of a will executed by Rathnavelu Chetty on 3rd February 1922, in which plaintiff 1 is described as a minor. Notice was served on the plaintiff's vakil for the production of this will before the commissioner but he refused to produce it on two grounds: (1) as noted above that this matter of plaintiff 1's majority was not referred for enquiry to the commissioner and (2) that the pleader did not represent plaintiff 1 in his personal capacity but as a trustee. This is all the evidence about plaintiff 1's minority.

Not only was there no specific issue raised on the point but. assuming that such an issue was raised, the onus has been thrown on the wrong party. From a strictly legal point of view, there is no evidence at all and so the contention of plaintiff 1's minority fails. Even if the evidence tendered before the commissioner be taken into account the evidence afforded by Ex. H is much better than that of Ex. 4 which is really not admissible at all and Ex. H is certainly as good evidence as Ex. 2. We, therefore find that plaintiff 1 is not liable to restore the sum of Rs. 3,150.

As regards the second matter appealed against, this is dealt with in para. 5 of the decree. It concerns a sum of Rs. 10,713-8-0 expended for the repairs of the property known as " Rathna Villa," which the appellant has been ordered to restore. As stated by the learned Judge the trustees met and refused to allow a claim which plaintiff 1 had made with regard to this expenditure: vide Ex. Z. The learned Judge then proceeds:

" The further question, however, arises as to whether this sum of Rs. 10,713-8-0, which is now in dispute and which was claimed as having been spent for repairs was money taken out of the trust funds or money taken out of the private funds of Rathnavelu Chetty. On this part of the case the onus is on plaintiff 1, who claims this sum, to show that it was taken out of the private funds of Rathnavelu Chetty. It finds an entry in Ex. G-I which is the trust account book. I am not satisfied on the evidence before me that it has been proved that this amount which finds a place in Ex. G-1 was really spent out of the private funds of Rathnavelu Chetty."

The accounts, however, filed and exhibited prove clearly that the expenditure must have been out of the private funds. The commissioner's report contains nothing to the contrary and the only reference in the report itself to this sum is where it is merely quoted as a criterion for what would be reasonable expenditure on repairs and whitewashing of buildings. Turning to the accounts, Ex. A shows that the total receipts of the trust fund was Rs. 78,473-0-10, and the total expenditure was 1,10,378-6-8. Of this the trustees disallowed a sum of Rs. 10,713-13-8 on account of improvements, to Rathna Villa thus reducing the net expenditure to Rs. 99,664-9-0. Deducting from this the amount collected Rs. 78,473-0-10, the balance due to the founder's estate is Rs. 21,191-8-2. These are the accounts which the commissioner has found correct. It is obvious therefore that this amount of Rs. 10,713-13-8, which plaintiff spent for the repairs to Rathna Villa must have been taken out of the private estate of Rathnavelu Chetty, because even after disallowing it from the expenditure, there was still a sum of Rs. 20,000 and odd due to the estate. In other words, plaintiff 1 could not possibly have got the money out of the trust. He, therefore, is clearly not bound to make it good. The appeal must be allowed on this point also.

In the result, the appeal is allowed throughout. The costs will be as follows. The costs of respondents 25 and 26 to come out of the trust estate (Rs. 425). Respondent 11 to pay Rs. 350 as and for the costs of the appellant and the balance of the taxed costs to be recovered by the appellant from the trust estate. The respondent or each set of respondents who have appeared by their advocates, other than respondent 11, to be paid Rs. 50 each out of the trust estate.

Appeals Nos. 281 of 1925 and 196 of 1926, and Civil Revn. Petn. No. 626 of 1925, Decided on 13th November 1928, from decrees of Addl. Sub-Judge, Masulipatam, D/- 22nd April 1925, in Original Suits Nos. 29 and 61 of 1924.

 (a) Part performance—Possession taken by vendee in pursuance of an alleged contract for sale—Vendee failing to get sale-deed registered under Registration Act, S. 77—Vendee is not entitled in his suit for possession to claim part performance—Transfer of Property Act, S. 54.

In a suit for declaration of title and possession, a vendee, who first relies on a sale-deed, which he has finally failed to get registered under Registration Act, S. 77 and next relies on an agreement of previous date to the sale-deed, plus his present possession, is not entitled to any relief by the application of the doctrine of part performance. There is nothing on the conscience of the vendor who has done all that he was required to do to carry out his part of the transaction. The vendee failed to carry out in failing to get, either through some fault or misfortune of his own, the sale-deed registered. Under these circumstances the vendee is not entitled to be put in the same position as if the sale-deed never existed and to insist on the doctrine of part performance. The vendee has no equities, nor has he an equitable title. (Case Law discussed). [P 90 C 1]

A contract for the sale of immovable property creates no interest in the property, it creates a right in personam and establishes a fiduciary relationship. Such a relationship of trustee and cestui que trust endures only so long as some obligation remains undischarged by the trustee. A trust is extinguished when its purpose is completely fulfilled or when the fulfilment of its purpose becomes impossible. Accordingly the relationship created by a contract for sale of immovable property ends when a registered instrument comes into existence. It also ends as soon as the vendee does something, or something occurs, to absolve the vendor from his promise. [P 94 C 1]

In a suit for possession and declaration of title, the vendee put forward as genuine a sale-deed in respect of the suit lands. It was shown that the vendor had acquitted himself of his duty to execute a sale-deed, and the only duty remaining was to collaborate in its registration. But in a previous suit between the same parties instituted under Registration Act, S. 77, it had already been found that registration could not be effected on account of an allegation of vendee's forgery, in regard to the sale-deed.

Held: that the effect of that decision was clearly to declare that the vendor was under no obligation to assent to registration, and since no other obligation remained, the fiduciary relationship ceased and with the termination of that relationship disappeared the equitable right of the vendee to retain possession. He became a mere trespasser. (Case law discussed.) [P 94 C 1]

Odgers, J.—Appeal No. 281 of 1925 is by the defendant. The suit corresponding was O. S. No. 29 of 1924 and asked for possession of A and B schedule lands and for a declaration that the plaintiffs are entitled to lands in Schs. A, A-1 and B. The defendant was in possession of A and B scheduled properties and the suit was decreed. Appeal 196 of 1926 is by the plaintiff (defendant in O. S. No. 29 of 1924) corresponding to Suit No. 61 of 1924 which was for recovery of A-1 schedule properties of which possession had been awarded to plaintiffs (in O. S. No. 29 of 1924) by an order under S. 145 Criminal P. C. This was dismissed.

C. R. P. 626 of 1925 corresponds to O. S. No. 1 of 1925 which was a suit under S. 9, Specific Relief Act, for possession of A and B schedule properties. The plaintiff was defendant in O. S. No. 29 of 1924, and the suit was dismissed. Hence the defendant in O. S. No. 29 of 1924 is the appellant in both the appeals and the petitioners in the C. R. P. before us.

Appeal No. 281 of 1925 (O. S. No. 29 of 1924) had been argued as the main appeal. In the plaint the plaintiff alleged trespass by the defendant on A schedule lands in April 1916. Prior to that date plaintiffs had been in possession of all lands in Schs. A, A-1 and B. In 1918 defendant 1 forged a sale-deed which purported to convey all lands in Schs. A, A-1 and B to himself. There were registration proceedings in connexion with this document (which will have to be referred to in detail later on) and while these were pending the defendant had had possession awarded to him on B schedule lands by an order under S. 145, Criminal P. C. There was a similar order with regard to A schedule lands. In the written statement defendant 1 alleges that the plaintiffs agreed to sell A and A-1 schedule lands for Rs. 21,000 and on 24th April 1916 put defendant 1 in possession of same, that money was required to pay plaintiff's creditors and when it was found that the debts exceeded Rs. 21,000 there was a fresh agreement whereby the lands in A, A-1 and B schedules were sold to defendant 1 and B schedule lands were delivered over to him. It should here be noted that the agreement to sell A and A-1 schedule lands is in writing (Ex. 1) and is dated 24th April 1916. Defendant 1 sets up an oral agreement to sell B schedule lands, whereas the plaintiff alleges that what was agreed to as regards B schedule was only to mortgage them for Rs. 8,000. In any case, the result seems to have been that defendant 1, got into possession of B schedule lands also during the registration proceedings. These proceedings arose from the presentation of the document, Ex. A-2 for registration which was refused by the District Registrar. Defendant 1, appellant then brought a suit O. S. No. 17 of 1920 for its compulsory registration under S. 77, Registration Act, which was decreed. On appeal to the High Court a division Bench differed, Phillips, J. holding the suit should be decreed and Devadoss, J. that it should be dismissed. The Letters Patent appeal came before a Bench of three Judges and is reported in Guravayya v. Venkataratnam (1). The allegation was that a valid sale-deed for A and A-1 schedule properties had been incorporated with the mortgage of B schedule properties, the signature and attestations preserved and part of the rest treated as a palimpsest, i. e., the original writing obliterated and a fresh writing superimposed thereon. The character of the alterations and the appearance of the document were commented on by the learned Chief Justice in the report. The Letters Patent Bench decided that all that the Registrar had to do was to look at the form and not the substance of the document and that in a suit under S. 77, Registration Act, the same considerations should guide the Court which guide the Registrar. The Chief Justice further says that the inference that the alterations in Ex. A-2 were made after the execution of the document in its original state by the defendants "is almost irresistible." I interpolate this expression of opinion by the learned Chief Justice here because it may have a bearing on the question hereafter to be considered though it is no part of my duty in this case to enquire whether defendant 1 had in fact forged Ex. A-2. To return to the written statement of the defendant in O. S. No. 29 of 1924, it was filed on 4th October 1921 after it is said, the decree in the District Court in O. S. No. 17 of of 1920 in favour of the defendant. There is no doubt that in the written statement defendant 1 takes his stand on the sale deed.

After the decision in the Letters Patent Appeal which was given on 10th April 1924, defendant 1 filed an additional written statement on 28th October 1924 in which he contended that the plaintiffs had put him in possession of the suit lands in pursuance of the "agreements recited in para. 3 of the written statement previously filed" referring to the agreement as to A and A-1 schedules and the "fresh agreement" whereby B was also sold. He pleaded that by virtue of this possession the plaintiffs are not entitled to claim it from him. In their reply the plaintiffs deny the "fresh agreement" i. e., to sell B lands and delivery of possession to plaintiffs in pursuance of it. They set out the agreement to mortgage B schedule lands to defendant 1 for Rs. 8,000 and assert that on 17th October 1918 two separate documents were executed by plaintiffs in favour of defendant 1: (a) sale-deed for Rs. 26,600 in pursuance of agreement (Ex. 1) and (b) a simple mortgage bond for Rs. 8,000.

Issues were framed and the parties went to trial. The learned Subordinate Judge has so far only decided as a preliminary issue, issue 2 of the amended issues raised, viz., whether defendant 1 can invoke the doctrine of part performance in answer to plaintiff's claim for possession of the suit lands, to any and what extent. He held that it was unnecessary to decide if defendant 1 took possession as he took his stand on the sale-deed (A-2), that there was merger of the contract or contracts to sell in the sale-deed, to which the rules in the Transfer of Property Act must apply, and that defendant I could not fall back on the contracts which had thus become merged in the sale. He also held that a Court in equity would not and should not afford its assistance to one in defendant's position and decreed the suit.

There has been a very long argument before us on the law and the position requires careful examination. The appellant contends that his possession together with the agreement Ex. I gives him an equitable title which he can rely on not only in defence but also in attack (as he is plaintiff in O.S. 61 of 1924). If he has thus an equitable title, is it liable to be defeated by his failure to get Ex. A-2 registered? Can any relief be given to a party who may not have a right to specific performance?

The doctrine of part performance does not permit a party to plead the Statute of Fraud in certain cases after a part performance by the other party to an agreement. The reason is that where one party has stood by and allowed the other to perform his part of the contract, it would be fraudulent to allow him to plead the statute. In England at any rate it is clear that the doctrine is confined to contracts falling with the jurisdiction to decree specific performance and so has no application to contracts of service for more than one year or to contracts of guarantee. Further, acts of part-performance can only be relied upon if they are such as to be referable to no other title than such a contract as is alleged and such acts must further be of such a nature and done in such circumstances as to render it a fraud by the other party to refuse performance of the contract; hence the other party must have been aware that they were being done on the faith of the existence of a contract. The doctrine has only lately been judicially recognized in this Court. It was held by the Full Bench in Veerareddi v. Bapireddi (2), that in the face of the provisions of S 54, T. P. Act, which were imperative there was no room for importing the provisions of English Equity. In Ramanathan v. Ranganthan (3), a Letters Patent appeal, an unregistered deed of exchange was in question. Possession was taken under it and defendant began to expend money on his plot and completed a building on it. Plaintiff then brought a suit to recover possession. The majority held he was entitled to do so owing to the absence of a registered deed of exchange. Wallis, C. J., held the plaintiff estopped by his acquiescence. Seshagiri Ayyar, J., differed on the ground that when the law says that title can be acquired only in a particular way, there is no room for the application of the doctrine of estoppel. On the Letters Patent Appeal, Abdur Rahim, J., agreed with the Chief Justice, while Sadasiva Ayyar and Napier, JJ., agreed with Seshagiri Ayyar J. Napier, J., held that a defence based on acquiescence could not prevail and as to the doctrine of part performance, the contract was executed and that accordingly a total performance of an executed contract was alleged to operate to create legal rights in violation of a statute and that there was no room for the application of the English doctrine of part performance in this country.

The matter has, however, been decided as for as we as a Bench are concerned by a Full Bench ruling in Vizagapatam Sugar Development Co. v. Muthurama Reddy (4). The only judgment delivered (that of Schwabe, C. J.) is very short and if one may say so with respect, not explicit as to the limits of the doctrine. It is clear, however, that he founds his opinion on the 'trend of opinion' of the Privy Council in Venkayamma Rao v. Appa Rao (5) and Mahamed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (6) and on the fact that all the other High Courts in India have taken an opposite view to that hitherto taken in Madras. The Full Bench overruled Ramanathan v. Ranganathan (3) and Veera Reddy v. Bapi Reddi (2). The learned Chief Justice points out that the Transfer of Property Act recognises unregistered contracts for the sale of land but that they create no interest in the land itself, but leave their contractual effect as between the parties unimpaired. Further the Division Bench on receipt of the Full Bench opinion decided that the application of the doctrine of part performance in this country is not limited to cases where the right of specific performance is not barred. Under these circumstances, it is obviously useless to canvass the decision of the Full Bench or examine the judgments in Ramanathan v. Ranganathan (3) and Veera Reddi v. Bapireddi (2), to show that the law ought to be applied as there laid down—the Full Bench has decided they are wrong. We are therefore left with these facts—some of them assumed or admitted—since no evidence except certain documents has so far been taken. The plaintiff made an agreement (Ex. 1) for sale of A, A-1 schedule lands; and tendered a sale deed duly executed to defendant to whom they delivered possession. According to the plaintiffs they further tendered him a simple mortgage deed. These two now appear compounded as A-2. The defendant says that the mortgage was a sale and that a fresh agreement was entered into whereby all the mortgage properties A and A-1 and B were sold to him. He first relies on the sale deed A-2 which he has finally failed to get registered; he next relies on the agreement (Ex. 1) possibly coupled with an alleged oral agreement to sell B schedule lands, plus his possession. Is he entitled under these circumstances to rely on the doctrine of part performance? Has he been defrauded?

The two learned Judges who heard the appeal in O. S. 17 of 1920 in the first instance were divided as to the amount of purchase money paid; the respondent here says only Rs. 2,000 was paid. The Subordinate Judge has not decided the matter but has referred defendant to a separate suit after delivery to plaintiff of the property has taken place. We are therefore not in a position to say that the defendant has paid the whole consideration to plaintiff who according to him is now trying dishonestly to recover what he had practically already sold. Further, the English doctrine clearly excludes payment of consideration as one of the grounds for its application cf. per Lord Cotton, J. in Britain v. Rosister (7) and no Indian authority has been shown to us to the contrary. A number of cases have been cited to us—not all of them relevant after the Full Bench ruling. But some must be shortly referred to. In the leading case of Maddison v. Alderson (8) Lord Selbourne said at p. 475:

"In a suit founded on such part performance the defendant is really "charged" upon the equities resulting from the acts done in execution of the contract and not (within the meaning of the statute) upon the contract itself. If such equities were excluded, injustice of a kind which the statute cannot be thought to have had in contemplation would follow. Let the case be supposed of a parol contract to sell land, completely performed on both sides, as to everything except conveyance; the whole purchase money paid; the purchaser put into possession; expenditure by him (say in costly buildings) upon the property; leases granted by him to tenants. The contract is not a nullity; there is nothing in the statute to estop any Court which may have to exercise jurisdiction in the matter from inquiring into taking notice of the truth of the facts. All the acts done must be referred to the actual contract, which is the measure and test of legal and equitable character and consequences. If, therefore, in such a case a conveyance were refused, and an action of ejectment brought by the vendor or his heir against the purchaser, nothing could be done towards ascertaining and adjusting the equitable rights and liabilities of the parties, without taking the contract into account. The matter has advanced beyond the stage of contract; and the equities which arise out of the stage which it has reached cannot be administered unless the contract is regarded."

It seems to be the fact that the foundation of the doctrine is there regarded as a contract not completed by conveyance. So in Rawlinson v. Ames (9), Romer, J., quoting the passage from Maddison v. Alderson (8), set out above and Fry on Specific Performance, 6th Edn., p. 276, holds that the acts of part performance on the part of the plaintiff in altering her flat were solely referable to a contract of letting and also that they were such that it would be a fraud in the defendant to take advantage of the contract not being in writing, after the plaintiff had altered her position for the worse. It is very difficult to see how the appellant here has altered his position for the worse (apart from the question of payment of consideration) or has been defrauded. His attempt to get the sale-deed tendered to him by the other side registered has finally failed. Can he be heard to say under the circumstances that he has a right to invoke the doctrine of part performance? Mr. Ch. Raghava Rao, his advocate, contends that he is entitled to wholly disregard the registration proceedings and to treat them as if they had never taken place and to say that by having taken possession under the agreement the appellant has acquired not only equitable rights but a good equitable title to the property only inferior to a full title of ownership under the Transfer of Property Act, and this equitable title has been recognized in India and various cases are quoted to substantiate this proposition. I confess I had always understood that one of the main objects of the Indian Law was to abolish as far as possible the distinction which prevails in English Law between legal and equitable ownership, cf., the Privy Council in Webb v. Macpherson (10 & 11), where they say:

"The law of India speaking broadly knows nothing of the distinction between legal and equitable property in the sense in which that was understood when equity was administered by the Court of Chancery in England."

It is perfectly true that in the Transfer of Property Act there are imbedded certain equitable doctrines and principle, and in fact a Full Bench of this Court in Vizagapatam Sugar Co. v. Muthurama Reddi (4), bases its decision partly on the fact that contracts for the sale of land are recognized by the Transfer of Property Act. Reference may also be made to the doctrines of priority, marshalling and contribution, and to the Specific Relief Act where the equitable rules speaking generally as to specific performance are codified so far as they are to be applied in this country. It is contended that S. 3, Ill. (g), illustrations to S. 13 and S. 27 (b), are examples of equitable titles recognized by the Spefic Relief Act, which was enacted in 1877. In the Trusts Act we have S. 91 corresponding to Ills. (g) and (h), S. 3, Specific Relief Act. In the Transfer of Property Act, we have S. 40, rights available against the transferrer previous to the transfer; S. 55 (4) (a) which enacts that the seller takes rents and profits till ownership passes to the buyer, i. e., under S. 54; S. 55 (1) (e) the seller is bound to take care of the property till delivery to the buyer; S. 55 (5) (a) where ownership has passed, the buyer bears the loss. There are many differences between the rights and duties of the buyer and seller after the contract for sale has been entered into in the Indian and English Law. cf., Dart on Vendors and Purchasers (12). But under the Indian Law it is observed that the buyer takes no risk till the ownership has passed and is entitled to no rents till the ownership has passed. He is not liable for charges etc., on the property until the ownership has passed. The following group of cases were quoted on one side or the other in connexion with this contention as to equitable title. Karalia Nanubhai v. Mansukhram (13) in which before the case was decided in the Court of first instance the title had been perfected by conveyance and was clearly a case under S. 91, Trusts Act, coupled with Ss. 40 and 55 (6) (b), T. P. Act. Furthermore the case is explained in Lalchand v. Lakshman (14) as not going the length of saying that a registered deed of conveyance is not necessary to pass ownership to the vendee and in this case Lalchand v. Lakshman (14) the Court held there was no equity in the defendant's favour, for he could have got the deed registered, the plaintiff having executed it.

The learned Judges then go on to decide that part performance cannot be admitted in face of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and as to this part of the case its authority is no doubt no longer law. Salamatuzzamin v. Masha Allah Khan (15), a case of exchange with no deed but long possession; the Court held that the transaction was binding relying on the Privy Council decision in Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar (6). The Court felt no doubt it would be inequitable or perhaps fraudulent to disturb the transaction which was a very longstanding one. Everything had been done in that case as regards the property in suit and the shop, which it was agreed to exchange for it, as though the exchange had been formally carried out. The exchange ought to have been effected by a registered instrument. One of the learned Judges Piggott, J., held that the Privy Council decision Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar (6) could not be applied to the facts of that case but that the parties were bound by their contract so far as it was carried into effect and by the equities arising from their own acts.

In Desai Bhai Jorabhai v. Ishwar Jeshing (16) it was held that a registered title could not prevail over a prior oral sale after payment of price and delivery of possession with notice to the subsequent buyer. No law is cited in the judgment. In my opinion it is a case which can be explained by the application of S. 91, Trusts Act and S. 40, T. P. Act. Syamkisore v. Umesh Chandra (17) was a case of fraud as the transferee was said to have been "lulled into security" by the transaction that had taken place.

Under these circumstances I find it very difficult to hold that a party in the position of appellant can give the complete go by to the existence of the document A-2 and is entitled to rely as an innocent and practically defrauded party on his possession under the agreement Ex. 1. It is not contended that he falls within any of the sections or illustrations of the Specific Relief Act, Trusts Act or Transfer of Property Act to which reference has been made.

Though I assume that the doctrine is incorporated from the English law and must be taken subject to its conditions and limitations as they are applied, the only reference to such limitations that I can find in the cases that have been cited to us is in Deb Mal Jha v. Baldev Jha (18), a case from the High Court of Patna where the learned Judges say that the essential conditions are: (1) final engagement and (2) actings unequivocally referable to the agreement. The other two limitations already quoted supra from Fry on Specific Performance are not referred to by the learned Judges; but I assume that they exist or that at least there must be some unjustifiable conduct in seeking to upset a transaction where the other party has on faith of the agreement altered his position for the worse. It seems to me that in this case the respondent has done all that he could be required to do. There is no standing by until the appellant altered his position for the worse and then seeking to take advantage of the Statute of Frauds or the Registration Act to upset the transaction. It may also be observed that there is no question here of a fresh document when the respondent has done everything in his power to convey the legal ownership to the appellant. Venkataswami v. Krishtayya (19) is a case where the plaintiff had a complete remedy under the Registration Act and not having chosen to follow it had "only himself to blame" that the efficacy of the document has not been completed by registration. The Court held he was not entitled to a decree for compulsory registration. This was followed in Thayarammal v. Lakshmi Ammal (20), where Oldfield, J., said:

"It is true that Courts of Equity would assist a plaintiff to effectuate an incomplete title if the default is due to act of God or conduct amounting to fraud on the part of the executant. But here no default is attributable to defendant 1. On the other hand, it is the default of the plaintiff in not paying the consideration that led to the document remaining unregistered."

They further held that an unregistered deed cannot be treated as an agreement to sell: cf., Subbaraya Pillai v. Devasahayam Pillai (21): see also the remarks of V. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., in Kuppuswamy Goundan v. Chinnaswnmi Goundan (22) at pp. 231 and 239 (of 28 M. L. W.). In this connexion I may also cite the remarks of Coutts Trotter, C. J., in Satyanarayana v. C. Venkata Rao (23) at p. 314 (of 49 Mad.):

"And it must be remembered that although in this country the remedy of specific performance is a statutory remedy, it nevertheless is simply a crystallization into statutory form of an equitable remedy to which laches was, as it is to all equitable claims, an answer. How can it be said that a man who is given an express statutory remedy by an Act of legislature under S. 77, Registration Act, and has failed to take advantage of it, has not been guilty of laches and is entirely free from blame, passes my comprehension."

Mr. Raghava Rao attempted to strengthen his case by contending that there was a fiduciary relationship between the respondent and his clients as to the sale of this land. For our purpose it comes very near to the requisites for the application of the doctrine of part performance. As so often stated the latter doctrine is applied because there is some unfairness or fraud on the part of the party who insists on the voidability of the contract. Equity will not allow him to take advantage of the statute under certain circumstances. It acts in fact in personam as it always does and on the conscience of the party affected. So also in fiduciary relationships there is the same unfairness or unconscientious dealing which equity will take hold of and will correct. The Full Bench case in Bapu Apaji v. Kashinatha Sadoba (24), was cited which sums up the equitable doctrines to be found in the Indian statutes and which I have set out at some length already. In that case Scott, C. J., said :

"Once it is recognized that the plaintiff is violating his fiduciary obligation, it is clear that the Court cannot grant him the relief which he seeks, for it will not aid him in committing a breach of trust and his suit must fail."

Venkatesh Damodar v. Mallappa Bhimappa (25) decided that even if the remedy of specific performance was no longer open to the defendants the Court would in a proper case come to their assistance. A case in the Privy Council on appeal from the Loke Yew v. Port Swettenham Rubber Co. Ltd. (26) ob- obviously contained an element of fraud and the equitable doctrine applied by the Court was in fact enacted in one of the Colonial Statutes.

To sum up it appears to me that a person in the position of the appellant is not entitled to any relief by the application of the doctrine of part performance. There is nothing on the conscience of the respondent who has done all that he was required to do to carry out his part of the transaction. The appellant has failed to carry out in failing to get, either through some fault or misfortune of his own, the document A-2 registered. Under these circumstances he is not entitled to claim to be put in the same position as if A-2 had never existed and to insist on the application of the doctrine of part performance in his favour. I am equally clear that he has no equities, nor has he an equitable title such as is recognized by any of the Indian Statutes or Case law. He obviously cannot sue for specific performance and it is impossible on the authority and on the assumption that the respondent is outside what I may call the statutory equities already referred to, to hold that he has an equitable title only less than full ownership to this property. The same remarks apply to his contention that the respondent is a bare trustee for him. The learned Subordinate Judge found that there had been merger i. e., that this agreement Ex. I had merged in the sale deed. The cases quoted above in Venkataswami v. Krishtayya (19) and Thayarammal v. Lakshmi Ammal (20), seem to support this and the latter case is authority for saying that an agreement for sale cannot be spelt out of the unregistered sale deed. Here of course we have an actual agreement to sell. Ex. I. How its force can be revived when it has become transformed into a regular conveyance I fail to see.

For these reasons I have come to the conclusion that the Subordinate Judge was right in his conclusion and it must be upheld. It is unnecessary for me to approve all the reasons given by him for his opinion. The two appeals must be dismissed with costs. The Civil Revision Petition will be dismissed without costs.

Curgenven, J.—These are respectively two appeals and one Civil Revision Petition arising out of three suits tried together by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Kistna at Masulipatam and relating to properties described as the A, A-1 and B schedule properties. The appellant in the appeals and petitioner in the revision petition is one Cherukuri Venkataratnam, whom I will refer to throughout as the appellant. Respondent 1 in the three proceedings is one Bolla Guravayya.

In March 1916, respondent 1, according to his version of the facts, wished to buy certain lands in Kottapalle village, and to obtain funds agreed to sell to the appellant the A and A-1 schedule lands for a sum of Rs. 21,000. The agreement which he executed on 24th April 1906 is Ex. I, and he confesses to having received a sum of Rs. 2,000 but no more, as advance payment. Thereafter nothing was done until 1918, when, after a remeasurement, the price of the lands was settled at Rs. 26,600 and odd. Respondent 1 wanted an additional sum of

Rs. 8,000 as he had some debts to pay, and it was agreed that the appellant should furnish this amount upon a mortgage to him of some other property of respondent 1's, the B schedule lands. Accordingly on 7th April 1918 respondent 1 executed two documents: (1) a sale deed of lands A, A-1 and (2) a simple mortgage deed in respect of land B. After execution, these documents were handed over to the appellant. According to respondent 1, the appellant made use of these two deeds, by combining them and erasing some of the script and substituting other writing, to forge a sale-deed (Ex. A 2) for all the three properties.

This impugned document is dated 10th June 1918, and is for a sum of Rs. 30,000 it being recited that the whole amount had been paid. Upon being asked to cooperate in the registration of this document, respondent 1 denounced it as a forgery. When the appellant presented it for compulsory registration, the Sub-Registrar refused to register it, and an appeal to the District Registrar of Kistna, who held an inquiry under the Act, was dismissed on 26th February 1920. The appellant then filed a suit (O. S. No. 17 of 1920) in the District Court under S. 77 of the Act for a decree directing the registration of the deed. He obtained such a decree on 29th September 1921, and the document was, in pursuance of it, registered on 15th October. The respondents preferred an appeal (A. S. No. 300 of 1921) to this Court. The learned Judges who heard it differed in opinion. The appeal was accordingly dismissed, but in a Letters Patent appeal, reported as Guravayya v. Venkataratnam (1) and decided by the Chief Justice and Ramesam and Wallace, JJ., this decision was reversed, and the registration of the document was ordered to be cancelled.

Meanwhile on 18th April 1921, while the suit to compel registration was pending in the District Court, the respondents filed O. S. No. 21 of 1921 in the same Court for a declaration of their title to all the three properties, and for possession of the A and B schedule properties, alleging that upon certain false averments the appellant had obtained possession of them in proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C. The plaint did not mention the agreement to sell, Ex. 1, but characterised the appellant's sale deed as a forgery. The latter, in his written statement, which was filed a few days after the District Judge gave him a decree in the registration suit, relied upon this decision as making the genuineness of the sale deed res judicata, and, apart from that, asserted its genuineness. He further pleaded that he had been put in possession of the A, A-1 lands under Ex. I, and of the B lands under the sale deed. Issues upon these pleadings were framed on 4th October 1921, and the suit was subsequently transferred to the file of the Additional Subordinate Judge, being renumbered as O. S. No. 29 of 1924. While it was still pending trial, both the appeal and the Letters Patent appeal were heard in the High Court, with the results already noted. In consequence of the different situation created by the decision in the Letters Patent appeal, the appellant applied for and obtained permission to file an additional written statement. This, dated 28th October 1924, contended that, apart from any question relating to the sale deed, the respondents had put the appellants in possession of the suit lands in pursuance of agreements to sell, and that that circumstance together with payment in full of the purchase moneys, gave him a valid defence against the claims for a declaration and to recover possession.

Of the other two suits now before us, O. S. No. 61 of 1924 was filed by the appellant to recover possession of the A-1 schedule land, while O. S. No. 1 of 1925, by the same plaintiff, was under S. 9, Specific Relief Act, for the possession of the A and B schedule properties. The averments in these suits were similar in character to those in the respondent's suit.

The learned Additional Sub-Judge has decided the three suits in the respondents' favour, decreeing O. S. No. 29 of 1924 and dismissing the other two. His view is that the decision in the Letters Patent appeal is binding upon the appellant, and that it amounts to a finding that he fabricated the sale deed; and that in such circumstances it is not open to him to fall back upon the agreements coupled with possession under them as an equitable defence against the respondent's legal title. As I read the judgment, the learned Additional Subordinate Judge has sought to apply two separate principles, the one that the appellant, not having come with clean hands, is not entitled to the equitable relief prayed for, the other that since upon his own showing matters had gone so far as the execution of a sale deed, his only remedy lay in enforcing the provisions of the Transfer of Property and Registration Acts.

With regard to the former of these two grounds, it is important to note, in the first place, that a Registrar holding an inquiry under S. 74 et seq of the Registration Act, has only to find, with regard to genuineness, "whether the document has been executed." His decision is not in the printed papers furnished to us; but presumably the onus was cast upon the appellant, and it was found that he had not discharged it. The sole issue tried in the suit ran thus:

"Was the document dated 10th June 1918 executed by defendants 1 and 2 for themselves and by defendant 1 as the guardian of minor defendants 3 to 5?"

The District Judge answered this question in the affirmative. Phillips, J., agreed in so answering it. Devadoss, J., considered that the document had not been proved to have been executed by the defendants. The learned Judges who decided the Letters Patent appeal certainly went no further than this. The learned Chief Justice, with whom the other two learned Judges concurred, observes indeed that "the document bears the most apparent traces of having been tampered with," and the inference that these alterations were made after the execution of the document in its original state by the defendant is almost irresistible. But he goes on to point out that in a suit under S. 77 the same considerations should guide the Court which should guide the Registrar in considering his duty to register or to refuse registration and that the Registrar:

"has to ask himself merely this: Is this document now tendered to me to be registered actually in the state in which it was executed by the parties to it"?

It need scarcely be added that a finding that the evidence will not support an affirmative answer to this question is not equivalent, as the Additional Subordinate Judge appears to think, to a finding that the document was forged by the appellants. In fact, the only relevance of these proceedings is to show that the appellants made an attempt, which the respondent successfully resisted, to get registered a document which he put forward as a genuine sale deed relating to the suit properties, and that it was found that the document was not registrable. Without further enquiry, therefore, the lower Court was not justified in concluding that the appellant had forged the sale deed.

There remains for consideration whether, leaving open the question of the appellant's conduct in relation to the sale deed, he has an equitable defence against the respondent's claim to recover lands A and B, and an equitable right to be restored to the possession of land A-1. Since the lower Court has decided this question without taking any evidence, we must proceed upon the averments in the written statements and assume that there as a valid agreement to sell land B in the case of lands A and A-1, this is not disputed and that the appellant was permitted to enter in pursuance of the agreements. We may assume too, if necessary, that the purchase money was paid in full.

The application of equitable doctrine to cases where there is an agreement to sell followed by delivery of possession but not by a registered conveyance may be considered from two fairly distinct points of view. These may be termed respectively the doctrines of a fiduciary relationship and of part performance. It has been contended that according to each of these lines of reasoning the appellant is entitled to resist dispossession.

The doctrine of a fiduciary relationship differs from that of part performance in that while the latter has been imported into India direct from English cases in equity, the former may be deduced from various of our statutory provisions, although indeed these are, perhaps necessarily, of an equitable character. There is a very clear exposition of this principle in a Bombay case decided by a Full Bench of five learned Judges Bapu Apaji v. Kashinatha Sadoba (24) and I cannot do better than outline the course which the reasoning takes there.

According to S. 54, T. P. Act, sale is a transfer of ownership in exchange for a price paid or promised or part paid and part promised, and such a transfer in the case of immovable property of the value of one hundred rupee and upwards can be made only by a registered instrument ; a contract for the sale of immovable property does not, of itself, create any interest in or charge on such property. These provisions do not, however, exhaust the relations which flow from a contract for sale of immovable property according to Indian Statute Law. Though an agreement to sell creates no interest in the land it imposes an obligation upon the legal owner ; and it is this obligation which gives rise to such equitable rights as the other party may possess. As against a transferee with notice, or a gratuitous transferee, from the legal owner these rights are declared in three separate enactments : in S. 40, T. P. Act, in S. 91, Trusts Act, and in illustration (g) to S. 2, Specific Relief Act, under the definition of "trustee". The last named runs thus.

A buys certain land with notice that B has already contracted to buy it. A is a trustee, within the meaning of this Act, for B, of the land so bought.

This is in different terms the same proposition as is contained in S. 91, Trusts Act, that the transferee with notice must hold the property for the benefit of the person who has contracted to buy it, to the extent necessary to give effect to the contract. And S. 95 of the same Act lays down that a person so holding property :

" must, so far as may be, perform the same duties, and is subject, so far as may be, to the same liabilities and disabilities, as if he were a trustee of the property for the person for whose benefit he holds it."

Now it is clear that whatever rights may be enforceable against a transferee with notice, as a trustee, must be enforceable against his vendor, so that we reach the conclusion that a person who has contracted to sell immovable property is a trustee of his promisee.

" Where, then a vendor who has contracted to sell immovable property and has under the contract put the prospective vendee in possession, sues the latter in ejectment, he repudiates, if the vendee is willing to complete the purchase, the fiduciary obligation arising out of the contract, and annexed to the ownership of the property, and seeks to treat the vendee as a trespasser. Once it is recognized that the plaintiff is violating his fiduciary obligation, it is clear that the Court cannot grant him the relief which he seeks, for it will not aid him in committing a breach of trust and his suit must fail ; the defendant is no trespasser, but is in possession under the contract which the plaintiff has bound himself to carry out Bapu Apaji v. Kashinatha Sadoba (24)."

This doctrine, so stated, would appear to be unassailable ; and it has received recognition by the Judicial Committee in the case Loke Vew v. Port Swettenham Rubber Co. Ltd. (26) arising from the Federated Malay States, where the law applicable is in effect the same as here. A different view has been at times taken both by this Court and elsewhere. The Full Bench in Veera Reddi v. Bapu Reddi (2) held that an equitable defence of this nature offended against the provisions of S. 54, T. P. Act. Sir Arnold White, C. J., thought that it infringed "the strict letter of the law", and Subramania Ayyar, J., considered that

" to hold otherwise would be to ascribe to the contract the very effect (that it should create an interest in the property) denied to it by the statute in the most explicit terms."

So too in Lalchand v. Lakshman (14) it was held that the circumstance that the Transfer of Property Act says that no title of ownership can be created to immovable property of value Rs. 100 and upwards otherwise than by a registered conveyance :

" excludes all considerations of equity based on part or whole performance, and makes the law laid down in the Act applicable whether the vendee is suing or is sued.".

The alternative view is that the "strict letter" of S. 54 does not exclude such considerations. "Sale" is defined as a "transfer of ownership, "and "such transfer" can be made only by a registered instrument. Only therefore if recognition of these equitable rights entailed the conclusion that a transfer of ownership had taken place could it be said, in strictness, that this provision would be thereby violated? But it is not so. Ex hypothesi the " trustee, " whether he be the party to the contract to sell or a transferee with notice, remains legal owner of the property. There has been no " transfer of ownership, "—if there had been such a transfer, not even a subsequent transferee without notice would be protected. It is clear that the party in possession has no legal title, only the rights of a cestui que trust. These rights, I conceive, are not negatived by the further provision in S. 54 that a contract for the sale of immovable property does not, of itself, create any interest in or charge on such property. It is true that in this respect Indian law differs from English.

law, and that under English law it may not be necessary to have recourse to such doctrines as those of a fiduciary relationship or of part performance. But although a contract of sale with us creates no interest in the property, it creates a right in personam, and it is as correlative to this right that the obligation arises not to go back upon the agreement so long as the other party is willing to complete.

This latter qualification raises the question of the limits of the theory of a fiduciary relationship. Such a relationship of trustee and cestui que trust, it is apparent, can endure only so long as some obligation remains undischarged by the trustee. A trust is extinguished when its purpose is completely fulfilled or when the fulfilment of its purpose becomes impossible: cf. S. 77, Trusts Act. Accordingly the relationship ends when a registered instrument comes into existence. It also ends as soon as the promisee does something, or something occurs, to absolve the promisor from his promise. To turn now to the facts of the present case, the appellant has put forward as genuine a sale deed in respect of all three properties. According to his own showing, therefore, respondent 1 has acquitted himself of his duty to execute a sale deed, and the only duty remaining would be to collaborate in its registration. But in a suit between the parties it has already been found that registration cannot be effected, and it is not contended that that finding will not be res judicata between the parties. The effect of that decision was clearly to declare that respondent 1 was under no obligation to assent to registration, and since no other obligation remains the fiduciary relationship ceases and with the termination of that relationship disappears the equitable right of the appellant to retain possession. He has become a mere trespasser.

We come then to the alternative defence put forward, based upon the equitable doctrine of part performance. The question whether, in view of the terms of S. 54, T. P. Act, there is room in this country for the doctrine of part performance, has given rise to much difference of judicial opinion, especially in this Court. I need only refer again to the Full Bench case Veerareddi v. Bapureddi (2) which has been regarded as a decision upon this subject, and in which it was held, as already noted, that the provisions of the statute are imperative and cannot be disregarded on equitable grounds, and to the Letters Patent appeal, Ramanathan v. Ranganathan(3) where of a Bench of three learned Judges two refused to recognize the principle, while the third was prepared to act upon equities arising out of the parties' conduct. Both these cases came under the consideration of a Full Bench in Vizagapatam Sugar Co. v. Muthurama Reddi (4), upon a question referred in the following terms:

"Do the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act or of the Registration Act preclude the application of the doctrine of part performance laid down by the Privy Council in Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar (6) and Venkayamma Rao v. Appa Rao (5)?"

An answer was returned in the negative, the learned Judges intimating that this opinion was fortified by two considerations, the one that the two rulings of the Privy Council mentioned in the reference indicated the trend of their Lordships' opinion, the other that every other Court in India had taken the opposite view to that adopted in the two Madras cases cited above, which were accordingly held to have been wrongly decided. It will be observed that the question put, and the answer given, were in perfectly general terms.

Basing ourselves therefore upon the terms of this decision, the point that arises is whether in the particular circumstances of this case the plea of part performance should be allowed to prevail. We have heard an instructive argument as to the nature of the doctrine, and the limits within which it should be applied, considered both in England in its relation to the Statute of Frauds and in India in its relation to the Transfer of Property and Registration Acts. The law in England is thus stated in Fry on Specific Performance, 6th Edn., p. 276:

"In order thus to withdraw a contract from the operation of the statute, several circumstances must concur: 1st, the acts of part performance must be such as not only to be referable to a contract such as that alleged, but to be referable to no other title; secondly, they must be such as to render it a fraud in the defendant to take advantage of the contract not being in writing; thirdly, the contract to which they refer must be such as in its own nature is enforceable by the Court; and fourthly, there must be proper parol evidence of the contract which is let in by the acts of part performance."

(It will be convenient to take this statement as a basis in considering the conditions in which the doctrine should be applied in this country.)

The first condition appears to me not to arise under our statutes. Under S. 4, Statute of Frauds, no action may be brought on any contract for the sale of lands unless the agreement upon which the action is brought is in writing. The cases in which equitable considerations have permitted a departure from this rule have been cases of parol agreements to convey followed by possession; and no such departure has been allowed unless the possession has been unequivocally referable to the contract. The reason for this rule is explained in the judgment of Lord Selbourne, L. C. in Maddison v. Alderson (8). The Statute of Frauds does not avoid parol contracts, but only bars the legal remedies by which they might otherwise have been enforced. The object is to prevent fraud by requiring that an agreement to be enforceable, should be written and signed:

"Courts of equity will not permit the Statute to be made an instrument of fraud."

Accordingly they will not furnish an opportunity for fraud by admitting evidence of the alleged connexion between an equivocal act and an antecedent contract. "As to the acts done in performance," says Lord Hardwicke, quoted by Lord Selborne:

"they must be such as could be done with no other view or design than to perform the agreement."

The acts, in fact, must presuppose a contract of the kind set up, and no other. It is probably upon this ground that the payment of purchase money, in itself an equivocal act, is not enough to constitute part performance of the contract. In India, however, it is not necessary that an agreement to sell, to be enforceable, should be in writing, and I draw the inference that no such reason therefore would exist for excluding evidence where it was doubtful to which of two alleged contracts possession should be referred. And upon the same considerations I conclude that the fourth condition named in Fry is not in terms applicable, although it is of course necessary to prove the agreement under which part performance has taken place.

Of the remaining two conditions 2 and 3, I would deal with latter first. It should be noted that it stipulates that the contract must be such as "in its own nature is enforceable by the Court." This is not the same thing as to say that the defendant must possess a subsisting right to sue for specific performance. It refers rather to the nature of the contract. Both in England and in India it has been held that the doctrine is confined to transfers of immovable property, though in England, Kay, J., in McManus v. Cooke (27) was inclined to go a little further and to hold that it applied "to all cases in which a Court of Equity would entertain a suit for specific performance if the alleged contract had been in writing."

It is of course necessary that the contract should be one which the promisor is capable of executing—where, for instance, as in Gajendranath Dey v. Ashraf Hossein (28) a mutwalli who could only grant a lease for a term not exceeding five years granted one for ten years with a covenant to renew, it was held that specific performance could not be decreed, and it would equally follow, I think, that the defence of part performance could not be successfully set up. It has been further urged before us that the right to enforce specific performance must be actually subsisting, but it seems impossible on general principles to maintain that when the bar of limitation arises any such change takes place in the equitable relationship between the parties as would bar the defence. The point arose in Venkatesh Damodhar v. Mallappa Bhimappa (25) and was decided in favour of the defendant upon the principles adopted in the Full Bench case Bapu Appaji v Kashinatha Sadoba (24). Reference may also be made to Laxman v. Raoji (29) and Meher Ali Khan v. Aratunnissa Bibi (30) and it may further be noted, although the point is not discussed, that the facts of the Privy Council case Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar (6) were such that the remedy of enforcing specific performance must long have been barred. Indeed may it not be said that the longer the possession has lasted the stronger the equities have become in the defendant's favour.

A more debatable question is whether the defence may be set up after a conveyance has been executed and where registration has not been effected. Difference of opinion has arisen whether in such circumstances a suit for specific performance would lie. In Syam Kisor v. Dineshchandu (17) and Mt. Akli v. Mt. Daho (31) ability so to sue appears to have been found, and adopted as a ground for accepting an equitable defence against dispossession. A contrary view has, however, been taken, as regards the maintainability of a suit for specific performance in such circumstances, in a series of decisions in this Court: Venkataswami v. Krishtayya (19), Thayarammal v. Lakshmi Ammal (20) and Satyanarayana Rao v. Venkata Rao (23). The reasoning followed is that to permit a person who holds an unregistered conveyance to sue for specific performance would be to permit him to evade the provisions of the Registration Act, which supplies him with the special remedy of enforcing registration upon special terms as regards limitation. In the case last cited, the learned Chief Justice has given reasons for his disagreement with decisions to the contrary, which "take upon themselves by a side wind to get rid of the period of limitation strictly imposed by the express words of the statute."

I would add that the remedy given by the Registration Act is in itself a special mode of enforcing specific performance and that where a special mode is prescribed the general mode is by implication excluded. It does not necessarily follow, however, that even upon this view of the law a defence of part performance may not be maintained by one who holds an unregistered conveyance. There appears to have been no decision upon the point so that I must rely upon analogical reasoning. The objection that, since the defendant might have sued to enforce registration and so complete his title, and that therefore equity will not protect him, seems to me to have little if any greater force than it has where the transaction has not reached the stage of a sale deed, because there too the defendant could have sued for specific performance. If in the latter circumstances omission to sue, and allowing the claim to become barred, do not bar the defence, I am unable to see how in the former circumstances the equities are differently affected. I think accordingly that the mere fact that the appellant here had a sale deed, and even the further fact that he did endeavour to get it registered through the machinery of the Registration Act, do not of themselves destroy such equities as may exist in his favour.

Coming now to the second condition stated in Fry, viz., that

"the acts of part performance must be such as to render it a fraud in the defendant to take advantage of the contract not being in writing,"

we may replace the last words by "to take advantage of the absence of a registered deed of coveyance." to bring the proposition into accordance with our law of transfer. For the leading English case which applies this test we have to go again to the judgment of Lord Selbourne in Maddison v. Alderson (8). "In a suit founded on such part performance," he observes:

"the defendant is really "charged" (the word taken from S. 4 of the Statute of Frauds) upon the equities resulting from the acts done in execution of the contract, and not (within the meaning of the statute) upon the contract itself. If such equities were excluded, injustice of a kind which the statute cannot be thought to have had in contemplation would follow."

This passage, with others from the same judgment, are cited by Romer, J., in Rawlinson v. Ames (10), which was an action brought for specific performance upon an oral contract to lease a flat in pursuance of which the plaintiff undertook extensive alterations to suit the taste of the proposed lessee. The defendant set up the Statute of Frauds as a defence, and the learned Judge had to consider therefore:

"whether there are here sufficient acts of part performance to take the case out of the statute."

The judgment contains an instructive review of earlier decisions, undertaken for the purpose of ascertaining the principles upon which the doctrine really rests. As to this, it is sufficient to say that the conclusion is reached that the law stands as laid down in Fry; and as to the special facts of the case the learned Judge says:

"It only remains to consider whether the acts of the plaintiff were such as to render it a fraud in the defendant to take advantage of the contract not being in writing. As to this I can feel no doubt. I am satisfied that had the plaintiff laid out the flat in the manner that she herself wished, it would, when constructed have differed materially from what it is at present. As a result of acceding to the requests and suggestions of the defendant she is now possessed of a flat which is not likely to commend itself to tenants. It would cost her a sum of about Rs. 177 to alter the flat to a condition in which it would be possible for her to let it to other persons. She has, therefore, in carrying out her part of the contract, materially changed her position for the worse."

I do not think that the Indian Courts have applied the doctrine otherwise than in accordance with these principles. In the Privy Council case Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar (6), already referred to, which may be said to have established the rule in this country, their Lordships quote with approval Lord Selbourne in Maddison v. Alderson (8), where he dwells upon the injustice which would be brought if the equities were excluded. In most of the cases decided by the High Courts in India, some of them before this Privy Council judgment, the question has been whether the doctrine is applicable at all rather than whether the circumstances justify its application: see for example Salamatuzzamin v. Masha Allah Khan (15) and Lalchand v. Lakshman (14). A marked feature of many of these cases is that comparatively rarely is the expression "part performance" used at all, and equity, in its quest for a basis, has wavered between that principle and the principle of a fiduciary relationship.

The truth seems to be, as that circumstance would suggest, that the two principles are really in essence identical. It is a condition of the application of each that the promisee should be ready to complete the contract, that the promisor should resist or neglect its completion, and that some wrong—whether its description as fraud, breach of faith, injustice, or unfairness—is thereby occasioned to the promisor. A necessary condition of this is that a trust should subsist between the parties; and having found that this condition is here absent, the foundation goes for a defence of part performance, equally with a defence based upon a fiduciary relationship.

To save the appellant from the consequences of this conclusion Mr. Raghava Rao has fallen back upon the theory of an equitable title or equitable estate. As soon as the appellant was put in possession under the agreements to sell, he argues, he acquired an equitable title to the property, and nothing that he might have done afterwards—even to the forging of a sale deed—could divest him of it. The contention is of course based upon the English principle that a contract for the sale of land creates such a title, which differs from our law, that such a contract does not of itself create any interest in the land.

This difference declares itself in the rules embodied in S. 55, T. P. Act, with respect to the rights and obligations of seller and purchaser upto the date of sale —rules which discountenance the theory of an equitable ownership in existence before that date. "The Law of India" say, their Lordships of the Privy Council in Webb v. Macpherson (11):

"speaking broadly, knows nothing of the distinction between legal and equitable property in the sense in which that was understood when equity was administered by the Court of Chancery in England."

In Sandu Walji v. Bhikchand Surajmal (32), where the question of part performance arose, Fawcett, J. was able to concede the validity of that defence while holding that the English rule, that a contract for the sale of real property mrkes the purchaser the owner in equity of the estate, is clearly opposed to the express provisions of S. 54. For the latter proposition he referred to another Privy Council judgment Maung Swe Goh v. Maung Inn (33). The citation of further authority is unnecessary. The equitable rights arising out of an agreement to sell, even when followed by possession, are rights in personam, and it is as such and not otherwise that a Court applying principles of equity will enforce them.

I agree accordingly that the appeals should be dismissed with costs, and that the Civil Revision Petition should be dismissed without costs.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 169 of 1928, Decided on 22nd April 1929, from judgment of Sub-Judge, Chittoor, in O. P. No. 16 of 1927.

(a) Madras Local Boards Act, S. 45—Mere nomination and election of the requisite number of members without President's election does not render special officer functus officio and he can adjourn meetings from one date to another.

The special officer had finished the election of elected members and the momination of nominated members was also done, but no President had yet been elected.

Held: that the Board was not fully consituted without electing the president and that therefore the special officer was not yet rendered functus officio and so could preside over meeting held before that time and was fully entitled to adjourn meeting fixed for a certain date to another : Smith v. Paringa Mines Ltd., (1906) 2 Ch. 193 and A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1152, Dist. [P 99 C 1]

(b) Election—Marking ballot paper with blue pencils does not invalidate election if it does not indicate the persons using them.

In an election two members by previous arrangement with a candidate used blue pencils to assure him that they had voted for him and election was sought to be cancelled on the ground that the secrecy of the ballot was violated:

Held: that unless it could be proved that the use of blue pencils indicated the persons who used them, the election would not be rendered invalid : 10 C. P. 733; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 614 and A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 766, Foll. [P 99 C 2]

(c) Madras Local Boards Act,—Election enquiry Rules 4 (2) and 11—In lots, use of double system of slips wherein successful candidate is not necessarily first drawn does not invalidate election, being only bona fide variation.

Bona fide variation in the system of drawing lots does not invalidate an election. In an election in drawing lots use of double system of slips, one set being marked with the names of candidates and the other set having one paper marked with a cross to indicate the prize and the other a blank, had to be resorted to, the system being such that the successful candidate was not necessarily the first drawn.

Held: that this was not such a variation as to invalidate the election. [P 100 C 2]

T. Krishnaswami Iyer—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The petitioner seeks to set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge of Chittoor, dated 31st October 1927, by which he dismissed the petitioner's objection petition to the election of respondent 1 as the President of the Union Board of Arkonam. By G. O. 4290 L. & M. dated 5th October 1926 the Local Government had in pursuance of S. 45 (1) of the Madras Local Boards Act dissolved the said Union Board and ordered it to be re-constituted and under Cl. (3) of the same section appointed Mr. Muthuswami Iyer, Sub-Magistrate of Arkonam (respondent 2) as special officer to exercise all the powers and duties of the Union Board and its President till it was properly re-constituted. The special officer was instructed to make arrangements for the election of the nine elected members, and the President, Taluk Board, Ranipet, was requested to nominate the three nominated members, and when that was done the special officer was to arrange for the election of the President so that the reconstituted Union Board might be brought into existence as early as possible. The special officer had got the nine elected members elected and the three nominated members nominated, Then he called a meeting of the members to elect a President for 20th April 1927. This date was by subsequent notice changed to 25th April 1927 as the special officer could not be present on the 20th owing to Easter. At the meeting held on 25th April under the presidency of the special officer, there was a tie, the petitioner and respondent 1 each securing five votes at the ballot. Thereupon the special officer proceeded to decide the question by casting lots which he did by using 2 sets of two slips each. One set contained the names of the candidates. Of the other set one paper bore a cross mark to indicate the prize or president; the other slip was blank. Both sets of slips were independently shaken and put aside and one slip from each set was drawn by the hand of a little boy aged under 10. At first the petitioner's name was drawn along with the blank slip. Then respondent 1's name was drawn along with the prize president's ship. Respondent 1 was declared elected.

The petitioner in his petition to the lower Court objected to respondent 1's election on various grounds of which four were pressed in the lower Court: (1) The special officer had no authority to preside over the meeting of 25th April, as he had become functus officio by the election and nomination of the full complement of members. (2) He had no power to adjourn the meeting from 20th to 25th April and so the meeting on the latter date was not validly held. (3) The secrecy of the ballot which resulted in a tie was violated by the use by two of respondent 1's supporters of a blue pencil to mark their votes. (4) The drawing of lots was not done in the usual manner or according to the rules, and the petitioner's name having been first drawn he should have been declared elected. The lower Court rejected all these grounds of objection. The petitioner's learned advocate has pressed the same objections in this Court.

The contention that the special officer had no power to preside over the meeting at which the election of the new president was to take place is based on the theory, unfounded in my opinion, that the new Board had been fully reconstituted by the election of the elected members and the nomination of the nominated members, and that thereupon the duties of the special officer were at an end. By S. 12 (3) every Union Board shall elect one of its members to be a president to whom by various provisions of the Act most important functions of an administrative and executive character are assigned. In fact a Board without a president is unthinkable and unworkable under the Act, and it follows that till the president was elected, the Board was not fully constituted. The 12 persons who had been elected or nominated had not taken the oath or entered on their office and could not be left to shift for themselves at that stage. None of them had any authority to summon a meeting of his future colleagues or to administer the oath or to conduct an election for the president. It is in fact to prevent such an impasse that S. 45 empowers the Local Government to invest the special officer with all such powers of the Board and its president as it may determine between the dissolution and the re-constitution of a Loal Board and in the G. O. dated 5th October 1926 the special officer was expressly instructed to arrange for the election of the president. This was exactly what respondent 2 did and he did no more. This contention fails.

I do no not see how if it was competent to the special officer to convenue the meeting for 20th April he was incompetent when he found it impossible to attend on that date to postpone the meeting by previous notice to a more convenient date. There was no adjournment in the proper sense as the meeting of the 20th was not held but only a fresh date fixed for the meeting. There was nothing which required the meeting to be held on any particular date. The petitioner's advocate referred to Smith v. Paringa Mines Ltd. (1) and Dwarkacharyulu v. Sri Krishnan, A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1152. The former case relates to the directors of a limited company, the articles of which did not give the directors power to postpone general meetings of shareholders once called. In the latter case which arose under the transitory provisions in Sch. 10, Local Board Act, at a meeting of the Union Boards Members called to elect their president by the President of the Taluk Board some members of the Union Board attended; but there was no quorum. The Taluk Board President instead of calling a fresh meeting purported to adjourn the meeting to a future date. It was enough for the decision of the case and all that was decided was that the President of the Taluk Board could not according to the meaning of the particular rule under which he acted dispense with the formalities of a fresh meeting and that an election of the Union Board President held at the so-called adjourned meeting was invalid. This has no bearing to this case. This contention also fails.

The next objection is that the secrecy of the ballot was violated because two of respondent 1's supporters used by previous arrangement with respondent blue pencils to mark their votes so as to assure him that they had voted for him. The law on the point is settled and will be found discussed in Rogers on Elections p. 112: see also Woodward v. Sarsons (2), Xavier v. Joseph (3); Viswanatha Pillai v. Periaswami Pillai (4). The question was really one of fact whether the use of blue pencils by two of the voters in this case did really indicate the persons who used them. The petitioner examined witnesses to prove the alleged arrangement. The learned Judge disbelieved the evidence and found that the marks being in blue pencil did not help to identify the voters and that one of those who use blue pencils could not be identified even after the enquiry. This objection also fails.

(2) [1875] 10 C. P. 733=44 L. J. C. P. 293=32 L. T. 867.
(3) A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 614.
(4) A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 766.

The last objection is that the method adopted by the special officer for drawing lots was not proper. According to the R. 4 (2) of the rules for election of President and Vice Presidents where there is a tie the election is to be determined by drawing lots and the person whose name is first drawn is to be declared elected. According to Webster's Dictionary in drawing lots each competitor may place his lot (marked) in a receptacle from which a disinterested person draws one, on the owner of which the chance falls, or each competitor may draw one of a series of lots the chance falling upon the person who draws one previously specified. In casting lots the lots are placed by the competitors in a receptacle which is then shaken until one falls out, the chance falling on its owner.

The rule refers to a method of drawing lots, in which the name first drawn is the successful one and this implies that only one set of lots is to be used. The reason why the special officer adopted the method of double set of tokens which according to Webster is another method of drawing lots is that he was provided with a copy of the old rules which had been superceded and which simply required that lots should be cast in the presence of the members. To this extent therefore there was a variation from the strict letter of the prescribed mode of drawing lots. The question is whether this variation vitiated the election. The special officer who was examined in the case explained that after the ballot resulted in a tie he explained to all present that he proposed to cast lots and how he proposed to do it. No one objected and there can be no question that the use of the double sets of slips instead of a single set was perfectly bona fide on the part of all present and that the petitioner and every one else concerned acquiesced in it. The petitioner's present objections are no doubt due to the fact that he was defeated and it is not too much to presume that if he had won, he would not object to the method. The petitioner's contention that his name having been first drawn though with a blank slip, he should have been declared elected is of course entitled to no weight as he cannot both adopt and disown the same method. If he adopts it as he and every one else did at the time, the successful candidate is not the one that drew a blank though it should be the first drawn, but the one that drew the crossed slip. Obviously under the method adopted the petitioner was not the successful candidate and he cannot claim to be successful, except by distorting the method into one which it was not meant to be either by him or by any one else. The only question is whether the use of a double system of slips in which the successful candidate is not necessarily the first name drawn was a violation of R. 4 (2) as to invalidate the election. In view of the fact that the violation, if any, was a perfectly bona fide one on the part of the special officer and that the petitioner and every one else present thought it the proper course and acquiesced in it and that the use of double slips or lots is after all merely a method of drawing lots which is the essence of the matter. I am of opinion that the matter is covered by R. 11 (c) of the rules governing election enquiries which enacts that no election should be set aside by any non-compliance with the provisions of the Act or rules unless the result of the election had been materially affected by the same. In this case there is no foundation for saying that the method of double slips affected the chance of the petitioner's success any more than his rivals'. The election itself having to be determined by chance (drawing of lots) and the method adopted not having affected either candidates' chance of success at the expense of the other it cannot be said that that method affected the election materially or at all. On this ground, this objection also fails. This petition is dismissed with costs.

RAMESAM AND JACKSON, JJ.

Sukratendra Tirtha Swami—Defendant—Appellant.

v.

N. N. Prabhu — Plaintiff—Respondent.

Appeals Nos. 382 and 383 of 1924, Decided on 3rd April 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, South Kanara, D/- 8th May 1924, in Original Suit No. 109 of 1921.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 9—A Brahmin excommunicated by recognized spiritual tribunal—Order of excommunication passed in good faith, without malice, and in exercise of spiritual authority—No negation of natural justice—Suit by the Brahmin for declaration for being in caste and for damages is not cognizable.

A Konkani Brahmin had been excommunicated by order of spiritual tribunal which was the recognized authority in all such matters the order having been passed in perfect good faith, without malice and in due exercise of spiritual authority. There was no negation of natural justice, on which ground alone such private quarrels could have been recognizable by law Courts.

Held: that the suits by the Brahmin for declaration that he was in caste as well as for damages, on the ground that the order of the spiritual tribunal was illegal and libellous ought to be dismissed as uncognizable. [P102 C 1]

(b) Tort—Defamation — Malice alleged—Overwhelming proof is required in case of tribunal.

Once it is found that a tribunal has exercised its function in a legal manner when condemning an admitted offence it requires overwhelming proof to sustain a charge of malice, in a case of defamation. [P 101 C 2, P 102 C 1]

T. Rangachariar and B. Sitarama Rao —for Appellant.

Advocate General—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff, a Konkani Brahmin of Mangalore, dined on 24th October 1920 in company with members of various communities, including three panchamas. This was reported as a caste offence by members of his caste to the defendant the Swami of Kasi Mutt, who is the recognized tribunal for deciding such matters. The defendant took care to discover the true facts of the case (Ex. 18, 20th November 1920) and interviewed several persons on behalf of the plaintiff; Sreenivasa Pai and Venkata Rao first on 11th November, and again on 15th November, two Bhandarakars at about the same date; and, after 20th November a regular deputation with full instructions of all that had to be said on the plaintiff's behalf. There is some suggestion that these persons instead of stating plaintiff's case merely applied for an adjournment and fuller inquiry. This is very improbable, but the point need not be laboured because plaintiff himself sent to the defendant a document Ex. G, which is obviously the statement of his case. He admitted the defendant's right to take prompt and immediate action in the matter and did not deny the truth of the complaint made against him; but he detailed several instances of other persons infringing the rules of the caste, and evidently meant to confront the defendant with the alternatives of condoning or of condemning all the offences that were set forth.

After receipt of this document the defendant excommunicated the plaintiff by his order Ex. J. of 23rd November 1920 "until further orders." Thereupon the plaintiff attempted to enter the temple frequented by his caste, and on admission being refused, launched a suit on 6th May 1921, for a declaration that the order of the defendant was illegal and the plaintiff was "in caste" (O. S. No. 52 of 1921) and another suit 22nd November 1921 for Rs. 7,500 damages on the ground that the order was illegal and libellous (O. S. No. 109 of 1921.)

The lower Court dealing with both suits in one judgment, decreed that the defendant's order was null and void (O. S. No. 52 of 1921) and plaintiff was was entitled to full damages (O. S. No. 109 of 1921.)

The defendant appeals against both decrees.

From the above recital of fact it is difficult to see how the plaintiff's private quarrel with his caste can concern the public Courts of law. The defendant's order is denounced in the plaint of O. S. No. 52 of 1921 as illegal because no opportunity was given to plaintiff to offer his defence; in other words because the fundamental principle of alteram partem audi was violated. But obviously not only was defendant offered, but he availed himself of the opportunity of presenting his defence. To urge that a charge must be framed, that a personal interview is essential, or that the Guru must sit at the feet of his disciple and learn the correct interpretation of the sacred law, is idle embroidary of the main principle. The defendant who received the various deputations sent by the plaintiff, and perused Ex. G cannot by any stretch of imagination be said to have offended fundamental principle.

Then in both suits an issue of malice was raised. Once it is found that the recognized tribunal has exercised its function in a legal manner, when condemning an admitted offence, it requires overwhelming proof to sustain a charge of malice. In these suits the proof adduced is meagre beyond description. Quite possibly the persons who formally brought the matter to the notice of the defendant may have been actuated by malice; but unless he is proved to have conspired with those persons, that cannot affect the defendant. There is no evidence of conspiracy. Plaintiff's witness 9, a respectable vakil and Bank president, candidly admits that in the several interviews which he had with the defendant he did not appear to him to be actuated by malice. The learned Subordinate Judge (para. 53) finds that the defendant wished to make an example of the plaintiff for presuming to address to his Holiness a lawyer's letter Ex. F and Ex. G. This opinion he bases upon a detailed summary of evidence in the same paragraph, under fourteen heads, none of which afford the slightest justification for his view. In such circumstances to impute is to exhibit malice.

And this is the whole relevant content of a case which contains a printed record of four hundred pages, and occupied fifty-seven days in the hearing alone. It is a crying scandal. A law Court is not a hall of entertainment, and any Judge alive to his proper responsibilities would have disposed of this case in two sittings.

We find in O.S. 52 of 1921 that the only ground which could have rendered the suit cognizable, viz., the negation of natural justice, is not established. The order in question was issued without maice and in good faith in the exercise of the defendant's spiritual authority. In O. S. No. 109 of 1921 we find that there is no proof of malice, and no legal ground for damages. Reversing the decrees of the lower Court we dismiss both suits with costs throughout.

Criminal Revn. No. 140 of 1929, and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 120 of 1929, Decided on 21st August 1929, against order of Town Sub-Magistrate, Trichinopoly, D/- 1st February 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 239 (6) — Joint trial—Complaint against five accused the first being abettor—Abettor discharged being unidentified — Charge framed against others and prosecution witnesses cross-examined—Further inquiry against accused 1 directed on revision—Joint trial of abettor with others was not ordered—Criminal Trial.

A complaint was filed against five persons under S. 325, Penal Code, the 1st being included as an abettor. Accused 1 was discharged on the ground of not being identified and charge was framed against the other four accused. On revision further inquiry was directed which was to give further opportunity to the prosecution witness to identify accused 1. Meanwhile proceedings against the other four accused had proceeded and prosecution witnesses had been cross-examined after the charge.

Held: that though ordinarily the correct course is to try an abettor with the primary offender yet in this particular instance the proceedings had reached such a stage that a joint trial could not be ordered: A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 638, Ref. [P 103 C 1]

Order.—The petitioner is the complainant. He filed a complaint against five persons which was taken on file against accused 2 to 5 as voluntarily causing grievous hurt under S. 325, I.P.C., and against accused 1, who is a pleader, as abetment of that offence, under Ss. 325 and 114, I. P. C. The Town Sub-Magistrate of Trichinopoly who tried the case discharged accused 1 on the ground that he had not been identified, and framed a charge against the remaining accused of the offence stated. The complainant then applied to the Sessions Judge of Trichinopoly to revise the order discharging accused 1 and the application was granted, the learned Sessions Judge directing further inquiry which was to include affording several of the prosecution witnesses an opportunity of identifying accused 1. In Criminal Revision Case No. 952 of 1928 Reilly, J., refused to interfere with this order.

Meanwhile, as I have said, a charge had been framed against the other accused and the first prosecution witness had been further cross-examined after charge. The question then arises as to the correct procedure to be adopted, whether, as the petitioner urges, the joint trial of all the accused could be resumed or whether the trial of accused 1 must be conducted separately.

The parties appear to have been canvassing this question before the local courts, for I find an application by accused 1, disposed of by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on 5th January 1929, in which it is said that there can be no question of a joint trial, and another application by the complainant to the Sub-Magistrate insisting that a joint trial is necessitated by the circumstances. The Sub-Magistrate is, however, of a contrary opinion. I think that the views taken by these Courts are correct.

No one disputes the general principle, to which Spencer, Offg. C.J., gave expression in Sogaimuthu Padayachi v. Emperor (1), that ordinarily the correct course is to try an abettor with the primary offender or offenders. Where no reason to the contrary appears, the enabling provisions of S. 239, Criminal P.C., should be availed of. In the present case, however, it is I think only necessary to consider what a joint trial would involve to be satisfied that it cannot now be had compatibly with observing the rules of procedure.

Suppose, then, that accused 1 is reinstated in the dock, along with the remaining accused. The proceedings against those accused, as I have said, have extended to the framing of a charge and to the further cross-examination of a witness after charge. One of two courses must then be pursued. Either that part of the proceedings against accused 2 to 5 which took place after the order discharging accused 1 was passed must be expunged, so as to restore them to that point in the inquiry which has been reached in the case of accused 1, or inquiry must be conducted solely into accused 1's case until it reaches the stage at which it stands against the other accused. For adopting the former alternative I can find no justification. It is not to be found in the order directing further inquiry against accused 1. Cancellation of the charge could only be justified on the ground that it had been improperly framed, and no such ground can be alleged. We are left then with the second alternative, and that presents even greater difficulties. Assuming that the inquiry is taken up against accused 1 at the point where it was dropped, the next step would be the examination of P. Ws. 6 to 9 touching their identification of accused 1, and their cross-examination upon this question. Their statements would be evidence against accused 1, but although what they said might bear upon the case against the others, it would not be evidence against them. The Court would have to distinguish in its mind between what was admissible against one of the accused and what was admissible against the others. It need scarcely be said that such a position would be at variance with the principles upon which a joint trial should be connected. It would in effect be no joint trial at all, because while the inquiry preceding charge was being conducted against accused 1, proceedings against the remainder would be at a standstill.

I conclude then that the Sub-Magistrate is taking the only practicable course in deciding to try accused 1 separately. Since the statements of the prosecution witnesses already recorded must be appropriated to one or other of the inquiries, and cannot, as to any part of them, be made to serve for both, this will involve a de novo inquiry into the case against accused 1. The Criminal Revision Petition is dismissed.

Criminal Revn. Cases Nos. 214 and 513 of 1929 and Criminal Revn. Petns. Nos. 186 and 465 of 1929, Decided on 30th July 1929, against order of Sess. Judge, Tinnevelly, in Cr. R. C. 44 of 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 437—Accused charged under Penal Code Ss. 457 and 380—Trying Magistrate discharging them under Criminal P. C., S. 209—Sessions Judge cannot pass order under S. 437 but can order inquiry under S. 436.

Section 437 relates only to cases triable exclusively by the Court of Session. Where, therefore, the accused, charged under Penal Code, Ss. 457 and 380, have been discharged by the trying Magistrate under Criminal P. C., S. 209, the Sessions Judge, acting under S. 437, cannot pass an order against the accused directing that the order of discharge be set aside and that the trying Magistrate do commit the accused to take their trial at the Sessions. The correct procedure is to order further inquiry under Criminal P. C., S. 436 : 15 M. L. J. 373. Rel. on. [P 104 C 1]

Order.—The petitioners in this case were discharged under S. 209, Criminal P. C., by the Sub-Magistrate of Koilpatti, the complaint against them being one of house breaking by night and theft in a building under Ss. 457 and 380, I. P. C. The learned Sessions Judge of Tinnevelly, taking the matter up suo motu, issued notice to the accused and passed an order on 14th January 1929, against which this petition is presented, directing that the order of discharge be set aside and that the Sub-Magistrate do commit the accused to take their trial at the Sessions. No section of the Criminal Procedure Code is quoted as authority for this order but I must take it that it purported to be passed under S. 437, Criminal P. C., because that is the only section under which a revising Court has power to order commitment. If that be so, the learned Sessions Judge appears to have overlooked the circumstance that the section relates only to cases triable exclusively by the Court of Sessions, and the offences of house breaking by night and theft in a building do not fall within that category. The same error was dealt with in a case Thammanna v. Emperor (1), referred for orders. The correct procedure was to order further inquiry under S. 436.

It has been pressed upon me that the Sub-Magistrate had valid grounds for his order of discharge, and that further proceedings should not be taken against the accused. After reading and considering the judgments, I think the best course is that I should make an order setting aside the order of the Sessions Judge directing commitment and restoring the case to his file for disposal according to law. Since there has been a change of officers, it will be open to the present Sessions Judge freshly to consider whether further enquiry into the complaint is justified. I order accordingly.

In the matter of Firm, P. L. S. K. R. —Petitioner.

O. P. No. 166 of 1928, Decided on 9th October 1929.

(a) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 26—Branch and older firm at Ipoh, a place outside British India—Older firm wound up—Assets in shape of outstandings divided between partners—Part falling to share of assessed firm—During the year of assessment remittance from Ipoh assessed to income-tax to extent of profits made there—Accounts did not conclusively prove remittance to be outstandings—Assessment held good.

An assessed firm had a branch or agency operating at Ipoh in Federated Malay States. There had been an older firm there but this was would up and the assets in the shape of outstandings divided between the partners. Part of these assets fell to the share of the partners in the assessed firm and were shown as credit in its general balance. During the year for which the firm was assessed Ipoh branch remitted Rs. 1,20,000 in all to British India. Income-tax Department acting upon the presumption that to the extent profits were made at Ipoh this remittance was composed of these and declined to accept the contention that the remittance was derived from realization of the old firm's outstandings and so was mainly capital. The assessed firm did not prove by means of accounts which were duly examined that the remittances were not composed of profits liable to tax.

Held : that the assessment was good in law. [P 105 C 1]

(b) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 66—High Court cannot scrutinize evidence.

When a reference is made to High Court under S. 66, High Court is not entitled to scrutinize evidence, as Commissioner's decision upon the evidence is final. [P 105 C 1]

Judgment.—In this application under S. 66, sub-S. 3, Income-tax Act, 1922, the Commissioner of Income-tax has been given notice to show cause why he should not refer certain questions of law for the determination of this Court.

The facts are in brief that the assessed firm had a branch or agency operating in Ipoh, Federated Malay States. There had been an older firm there, but this was wound up and the assets, in the shape of outstandings, divided between the partners. One half of these assets in this way fell to the share of the partners in the assessed firm and were shown as a credit in its general balance. During the income-tax year 1926-27 the Ipoh branch remitted four sums of Rs. 30,000, Rs. 1,20,000 in all, to British India. The contention which the firm raises is that these remittances were derived from realizations of the old firm's outstandings, and were therefore mainly capital. The Income-tax department has declined to accept this explanation, and has acted upon the ordinary presumption that, to the extent that profits were made at Ipoh—about Rs. 53,000—the remittances were composed of these.

The learned Advocate General, who appears for the applicants, virtually has to argue that the Comissioner of Income-tax must accept as conclusive accounts and statements produced by the firm showing the source from which these remittances were derived; any less qualified proposition will not serve his purpose, because the matter becomes then one of evidence, and the Commissioner's decision upon the evidence is final. It will be seen from the Commissioner's order dated 16th July 1927 declining to state a case for the determination of this Court that the claim was disposed of on the ground that the petitioners had not proved by means of their accounts, which the Income-tax Officer had duly examined, that the remittances (to the extent referred to) were not profits liable to tax. That being so, there is no question but that the assessment is good in law. It is not our business to scrutinize the evidence, but in view of certain aspects of it which have been brought to our notice during the arguments we may add that the collections of old outstandings, as made, appear to have been added to the general balance of the firm, and that the remittances were made from that general balance; further, that, upon the applicants' own showing (statement 4) when the first remittance was made on 31st July 1925, a sufficient sum had not yet been realized from the old outstandings to meet it. These circumstances suggest that the accounts themselves are not conclusive of, if indeed compatible with, the applicant's case.

We dismiss the application with costs. Advocate's fee, Rs. 150.

Appeal No. 516 of 1928, Decided on 5th April 1929, against order of Sub-Judge, Madura, D/-24th November 1928.

 (a) Civil P. C., O. 34, R. 3—Adjustment made out of Court between preliminary decree and final decree cannot be pleaded against passing of final decree.

An adjustment made out of Court between the dates of preliminary decree and final decree cannot be pleaded against the passing of final decree under the new Code though payment to mortgagee was allowable under the old Code under Ss. 88 and 89, T. P. Act: 2 Pat. L. J. 533; 25 C. L. J. 553; 42 Mad. 61 and 12 P.R. 1913, Ref. [P 107 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 34, R. 5—Want of notice of application for final decree does not make decree illegal—Civil P. C., O. 9, R. 13.

While a notice should issue on an application for final decree, the failure to issue such notice is not an illegality which ipso facto renders the decree void and by itself necessitates the setting aside of the decree. Person concerned must show that he has a prima facie case on merits: 32 Cal. 253; 35 M. L. J. 375; 44 Cal. 454; 10 C. L. J. 91; A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 393; 25 Mad. 506; 27 Mad. 40; 4 *C. (c) Civil P. C., S. 141—Application of S. 141 doubtful where procedure is clear—Civil P. C., O. 34, R. 5.

It is doubtful whether S. 141 which says that "the procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits shall be followed as far as it can be made applicable in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction" should be applied where procedure is clearly laid down as in a matter under O. 34, R. 5. [P 107 C 2]

(d) Civil P. C., O. 23, R. 3—Adjustment of decree outside the Court cannot be enforced under O. 23, R. 3 which relates to satisfaction of suits—Civil P. C., O. 34. R. 3.

Order 23, R. 3 relates to the satisfaction of a suit and not to the satisfaction of a decree and to hold that parties can adjust a preliminary decree between themselves out of Court and get such adjustment enforced under O. 23, R. 3, would render the whole scheme of O. 34, R. 3 nugatory. [P 108 C 1, 2]

K. V. Sesha Iyengar—for Appellant.

P. R. Ganapathi Iyer and K. P. Panchapagesa Iyer—for Respondent.

Walsh, J.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are as follows: The plaintiff obtained a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit on 23rd March 1928. Three months' time was given for the payment of the mortgage debt. An application was put in by the plaintiff on 28th June 1928 and a final decree was passed. Notice of this application was not sent to defendant 2 in the suit. The appellant who is defendant 2 put in a petition on 19th October 1928 to have the ex parte final decree set aside and to stay execution of the proceedings on the ground of an adjustment made between himself and the plaintiff some time during April 1928. The Court passed an order as follows:

"I think therefore that the grounds for setting aside the final decree are not strong. But I think I may in the interest of justice give the petitioner a chance of proving the so called adjustment, if he shows his bona fides to satisfy the decree by paying half the decree amount in two weeks."

Defendant 2 not having paid the amount on the date fixed, his petition was dismissed. Against this order of dismissal, he has appealed.

The learned advocate for the appellant takes as his main ground that notice is required for the passing of the final decree and that if such a notice is not given, the application to set aside the final decree falls under O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C., and the Court has no option in such a case but to set aside the decree. He also urges that an adjustment out of Court can be pleaded against the passing of the final decree in a suit for sale. The rulings as to whether a notice is or is not necessary have been conflicting mainly due to a difference of opinion as to whether an application for a final decree is a proceeding in execution or not. Turning to the Code itself in O. 34, R. 5 we find nothing which directs a notice to the other side on an application for final decree. The following cases have been relied on to show that notice is required: Bibi Tasliman v. Harihar Mahto (1), Kanakasundaram Pillai v. Somasundaram Pillai (2), Rajendra Lal Sur v. Atal Bihari Sur (3) Bachu Singh v. Bicharam Sahu (4) and Maruthiswamiyar v. Subramania Ayyar (5). The other side quotes Krishna Ayyar v. Muthuswami Apyar (6), Pandu Prabhu v. Juje Lobo (7) and Mahomed Taki Raza v. W. A. Thomas (8), and Mahadeo Pandey v. Somnath Pandey (9). There is a similar conflict of decisions as to whether O. 9, R. 13, applies to an application made to set aside a final decree in a suit of this sort. Turning to the authorities quoted for the appellant, it may be observed that Bibi Tasliman v. Harihar Mahto (1) merely lays down:

"that a Court has inherent power to deal with the application to set aside the order made ex parte and can set it aside upon a proper case being substantiated."

This ruling as pointed out in Mahomed Taki Raza v. W. A. Thomas (8) does not support the contention that a notice is required. In Kanakasundaram Pillai v. Somasundaram Pillai (2), it was held that O. 9, R. 13 applied and that it made no difference that the rule talks of a summons and not of a notice. Rule 32 of the Civil Rules of Practice says that notice of an interlocutory application shall be given to the other parties to the suit or matter or their pleader not less than three days before the date appointed for the hearing of the application. But it cannot be maintained that the non-observance of the Civil Rules of Practice is an illegality unless such a rule can be found in the Code. The learned Judges in Kanaka sundaram Pillai v. Somasundaram (2) no doubt remarked:

"the Code provides certain procedure to be followed in the proceedings for a final decree; an application has to be made by the preliminary decree-holder and notice has to be given to the judgment-debtor to show cause why such a decree should not be passed."

But the learned counsel for the appellant has not been able to show us anything in the Code which requires such a notice. In Maruthi Swamiyar v. Subramania Ayyar (5) the learned Judges following the decision in Bibi Tasliman v. Harihar Mahto (1) and Kanakasundaram Pillai v. Somasundaram Pillai (2) state: "we think that notice has to be given." As pointed out Bibi Tasliman v. Harihar Mahto (1) is not an authority for that contention. As regards Rajendra Lal Sur v. Atel Bihari Sur (3) all it decided was that the Court could interfere. Emphasis is laid upon an observation in that case quoted from Ajant Singh v. Sundarmall (10):

(1) [1905] 32 Cal. 253=9 C.W.N. 81 (F.B.).
(2) [1918] 35 M. L. J. 375=48 I. C. 71.
(3) [1917] 44 Cal. 454=39 I. C. 969=25 C.L.J. 455.
(4) [1909] 10 C. L. J. 91=1 I. C. 677.
(5) A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 393.
(6) [1902] 25 Mad. 506=12 M. L. J. 62.
(7) [1904] 27 Mad. 46.
(8) [1906] 4 C. L. J. 317.
(9) A. I. R. 1926 All. 757=48 All. 828.
(10) [1913] 17 C. W. N. 862=16 I. C. 567.

"It is an elementary rule of universal application and founded upon the plainest principles of justice that a judicial order which may possibly affect or prejudice any party cannot be made unless he has been afforded an opportunity to be heard."

This clearly cannot be taken to mean that such an order is inherently illegal from the start and that all that a party wishing to set aside such an order has to show is that he had no notice. For instance, in the case of a temporary injunction passed in cases of emergency without hearing the parties under O. 39, R. 3 such an order is certainly one which can be made and it is not sufficient for the party wishing to set it aside merely to show that it was made ex parte and without notice. Bachu Singh v. Bicharam Sahu (4) only lays down that a notice should ordinarily issue and the most recent decision of the Madras High Court Sri Maruthi Swamiar v. Subramania Ayyar (5) does not state more, than that a notice should go. While therefore it may be true that a notice should issue on an application for final decree I cannot find any authority which goes the length of holding that the failure to issue such a notice is an illegality which ipso facto renders the decree void and by itself necessitates the setting aside of the decree. In this connexion I may notice an argument attempted for the respondent that the Court put the appellant upon terms and that as the terms were not complied with the petition had to be dismissed but it appears from a reading of the order that what the Court put the appellants on terms about was not the setting aside of the decree but the hearing of his petition at all.

Finally it is argued that even if it may be held that the suit is not pending after the preliminary decree in such a sense as to make O. 23, R. 3 applicable, yet S. 141, Civil P, C., has to be applied, and the procedure to be followed should be the same as in suits wherein notice is necessary. S. 141 merely lays down that:

"the procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits shall be followed as far as it can be made applicable in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction."

Here we have got the procedure actually laid down which applies to this particular matter under O. 34, R. 5, and it makes no mention of notice. Under the circumstances it cannot be held that S. 141, Civil P. C. makes want of notice an illegality. It is doubtful if it applies to a matter were a clear procedure is laid down.

The second question which arises is whether an adjustment made out of Court between the dates of the preliminary decree and the final decree can be pleaded against the passing of the final decree. Under the old Code a payment could be made either into Court or to the mortgagee under Ss. 88 and 89, T. P. Act, but the new Code has deliberately done away with that option of making payment to the mortgagee out of Court. The provisions of O. 34, R. 3, show that the money must be paid into Court. The only case which the learned advocate for the appellant has been able to quote suggesting that adjustment out of Court can be pleaded is Jogendra Prasad Narain Singh v. Gouri Shankar Prasad Sahu (1). The facts of that case are not fully set out in that judgment nor the actual arrangement made and it is not certain from the language whether the agreement between the parties was before or after the preliminary decree. It states that the appellants put in a petition to the effect that the decree had been satisfied in part by an arrangement out of Court this arrangement being that the value of an elephant taken by the decree-holders from the judgment-debtors before the making of the decree absolute should be credited to the accounts to be taken on the mortgage. It is just possible to read this sentence to mean that the agreement was made before the preliminary decree with a stipulation that it should not be recognized till the account was taken. In any case it is difficult to understand without further details what happened in that case. There appears to have been a preliminary decree for the taking of accounts but what exactly happened then is not clear. The learned Judges then go on to state:

"it is true that under O. 34 R. 5 it is contemplated that all payments made upon a preliminary decree should be paid into Court. There is nothing in the rule to justify the view that O. 23, R. 3 does not apply to adjustments of account made between the date of the preliminary decree and the date on which the accounts between the parties are finally settled."

An entirely contrary view is taken in Linga Raja v. Pethu Raja (12) which follows Piran Bibi v. Jitendra Mohan (13). The learned Judges make a cautious reference to Jogendra Prasad Narain Sing v. Gouri Shankar Prasad Sahu (11) as follows :

"it may be that if between the passing of the preliminary decree and the passing of a final decree for sale the defendant obtains a certificate under the provisions of O. 21 R. 2, he can take advantage of that to reduce the amount for which the property is to be sold."

But they do not state that he can obtain a certificate under O. 21, R. 2 or how he is to do it. The general trend of the decisions under the present Code is that an application for final decree is not a proceeding in execution and therefore O. 21, R. 2 will not apply at all. It is unnecessary to discuss whether if in an execution proceeding the judgment-debtor had by some means obtained a certificate between the date of the preliminary decree and the final decree he could claim a deduction on the amount of the final decree. In Banarsi Das v. Nattu Mal (14), the Punjab Chief Court lays down that the Court has no option under O. 34 R. 5, except to pass a final decree for sale of the property if the money has not been paid into Court. In Rama Goundan v. Vellappa Goundan (15), the Court held that even where money has been deposited under O. 9, R. 13 and the ex parte decree set aside this was not to be regarded as money paid into Court under the preliminary decree, that the decree-holder was guilty of no fraud in not bringing it to the notice of the Court and that the Court was bound on his application to pass a final decree for the full amount.

One other argument may be noticed, that O. 23, R. 3, applies and the Court is bound to recognise such adjustment out of Court. But O. 23 R. 3, relates to the satisfaction of a suit, not to the satisfaction of a decree, and to hold that parties can adjust a preliminary decree between themselves out of Court and get such adjustment enforced under O. 23, R. 3 whould render the whole scheme of O. 34 R. 3 nugatory. As stated above this procedure of paying into Court the amount due under the preliminary decree in a mortgage suit for sale was a deliberate restriction of the previous privilege of paying the mortgagee out of Court under the Transfer of Property Act. The orders under the code must be construed reasonably with reference to each other. I hold that O. 23, R. 3 is not applicable.

In the result it appears to me that mere want of notice does not per se render the decree liable to be set aside. Even assuming that it does, as the adjustment sought to be pleaded is not one which the Court can recognise even if we were to hold that the Court should have passed an order setting aside the ex parte decree the result would be exactly the same, namely, that we would have to dismiss the petition on the ground that the adjustment pleaded was not one which the Court can recognise even if true. The decree would then have to be restored. In these circumstances, the appellant would gain nothing by a decision in his favour as regards the necessity for setting aside the decree and the relief granted would be nothing but a form of words. The ultimate result would be the dismissal of the appellant's petition which is exactly the final order appealed against.

In the result therefore the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Wallace, J.—I agree generally.

With reference to the question whether notice must, as a matter of law, go before a final decree can be passed in a mortgage suit for sale, all that can be said in the present state of the law and the authorities is that, while such a notice is not prescribed by law, it is in practice advisable, and that, if it is not issued, it is open to the party aggrieved, if he can show that he has been aggrieved, to come up under O. 9, R. 13 and have it set aside. This is the effect of the Full Bench decision in Bibi Tasliman v. Harihar Mahto (1), and the ruling in Sri Maruthi Swamiar v. Subramania Ayyar (5), to which I was a party, does not go further than that. The appellant therefore has to show, in the words of the Bibi Tasliman's case (1), that he has substantiated a proper case. This does not in my view mean merely that he substantiated a proper case by showing that he had no notice but he must also show that he has a prima facie case on the merits, which makes it worthwhile for the Court to spend further time on issuing a notice and hearing him. If he does so, then the Court will take it as a point of law that a notice ought to have been issued to him, the absence of which will bring O. 9, R. 13 into operation.

That raises the second question whether it is worthwhile to interfere in this case. The only contention which the appellant wants to put before the lower Court is the plea of adjustment of the preliminary decree by payment out of Court between the dates of the preliminary and the final decree. I agree with my learned brother for the reasons given by him that such an adjustment cannot be pleaded when the Code distinctly lays down that payment must be into Court. I can see no reasons for allowing adjustment out of Court to be pleaded, a plea which, as often as not, is based on false or flimsy ground and yet requires considerable amount of enquiry before it can be finally settled. It was, I have no doubt, for the purpose of avoiding such enquiries, that the right of payment out of Court, permitted under S. 89, Transfer of Property Act, was taken away. O. 23 R. 3 cannot be read to override the clear terms of O. 34, Rr. 3 and 4.

V. N. S. Chockalingam Chetti—Plaintiff—Respondent.

Appeal No. 142 of 1925, Decided on 6th September 1929, against decree of Sub-Judge, Sivaganga, in O. S. No. 100 of 1922.

(a) Hindu law—Custom—Custom is not founded on reason—One custom is no evidence of existence of another.

Custom cannot be said to be founded on reason, for no reason, even the highest whatsoever, would make a custom or law. Custom cannot therefore be enlarged by any parity of reasoning. Customs may be similar or contradictory, probable or improbable, and the existence of one custom is no evidence for the existence of another. The only proof of custom is the evidence of that custom and not other evidence that given certain data certain results follow with the force of law: 37 Cal. 322, Rel. on. [P 110 C 2]

(b) Hindu law—Stridhanam—Succession—Among Nattu Kottai Chetti caste, stridhanam does not revert to parent's family when daughter dies leaving female issue.

There is a custom, in the Nattu Kottai Chetti caste, having the force of law that, if the daughter of the family dies issuelsss, the stridhanam will revert to her parents, but there is at present no clear custom having the force of law, by which such reverter occurs when the daughter has a female issue and dies leaving such issue. Wallace, J.—The question for decision in this appeal is whether the plaintiff has proved the caste custom set up by him in derogation of the Hindu law of inheritance. The plaintiff is of Nattu Kottai Chetti caste. It is a custom in that caste, when the daughter of a house is married, for her parents to present to her jewels, vessels and money which become her stridhanam. There is also a custom which has been recognized by this Court in A. S. No. 196 of 1923 that if that married daughter dies without issue, that stridhanam reverts to the donors, her parents. The plaintiff before us contends for a custom that that stridhanam reverts to the parents even when the woman has had a female issue and that female issue herself dies without issue. Under ordinary Hindu law a female issue would on the death of the mother inherit her stridhanam holding a limited interest therein, and on her own death without issue it would revert to her father, the husband of the original donee. The plaintiff contends that there is in his caste a custom having the force of law which diverts the inheritance from the father to the family of the original donors of the stridhanam.

Now it is essential in a case where a custom is pleaded in derogation of Hindu law that that custom should be clearly defined and proved; so that given the facts of the case, there will be no vagueness or obscurity as to the application of the custom. The facts of the present case are the plaintiff's sister, Minakshi, was married to the defendant in 1891; her parents gave her the usual stridhanam; she died in 1908 leaving one child a daughter Visalakshi, who inherited her mother's stridhanam; she died in 1921 without issue. It may be noted also that at the time of her birth Visalakshi also received stridhanam presents from her maternal grandfather's family. Now the custom contended for in the plaint is that on the death of Visalakshi, both these stridhanams, the one given to her and the one given to her mother, belong to the plaintiff's family "according to law and justice and according to the custom of the caste of both parties." The plaintiff asserts that the capital sum of both stridhanams has been left intact and has been accumulating interest; so that what was originally a sum of about Rs. 4,000 has now swelled to over Rs. 50,000 and the original claim was for that sum. If we confine ourselves to what is involved in the present appeal, which relates only to the stridhanam conferred on Minakshi, the amount originally stood at Rs. 1,672 and has now swollen to Rs. 28,616 and it is that sum which the plaintiff now claims. The plaint was not clear as to whether custom demanded that each stridhanam should be kept intact from the moment of donation until reverter. It was claimed, however, in this case that both have been kept so intact and therefore were available.

It is of course settled law that the evidence of a custom pleaded to have the force of law must prove it to be continuous, uniform and specific. We have to examine the evidence to see if it satisfies that test.

It will be convenient here to dispose of a contention of the plaintiff that he could establish a custom by evidence of what he calls an analogous custom. He contends, for example, that the recognized custom by which the stridhanam of a woman dying issueless reverts to her family is analogous to the one now pleaded. He contends again that a custom, to which some of his witnesses speak, by which the stridhanam of a woman dying leaving a son who himself dies without issue reverts to her family, is an analogous custom. And he pleads that such analogous customs give by considerations of common sense and parity of reasoning, a probability in favour of the custom alleged in the plaint. Such a contention seems to us inadmissible. Common sense and reasoning have nothing whatever to do with custom. As stated in Arthur v. Bokenham (1), quoted at p. 326 of Pradyote Kumar Tagore v. Gopikrishna Mandal (2), it cannot be said that a custom is founded on reason:

> "for no reason, even the highest whatsoever, would make a custom or law, and therefore you cannot enlarge such custom by any parity of reasoning, since reason has no part in the making of such custom."

Customs may be similar or contradictory, probable or improbable, and the existence of one custom is no evidence for the existence of another. The only proof of custom is the evidence of that custom and no other evidence that given certain data certain results follow with the force of law. It therefore appears to us that no evidence of analogous custom is relevant in proof of the plaint custom. This rules out the evidence of P. Ws. 4 and 6 for the plaintiff.

For the rest, P. W. 1's evidence is very vague. The only instance of the plaint custom to which he speaks is one which occurred two months before he gave his evidence, in the house of M. M. P. L. Palaniappa Chetti of Nemathanpatti. Now no one from that house has been examined. According to the witness also the stridhanam was repaid in that case by a hundi, but no hundi has been filed nor any accounts produced. P.W. 2 instances a case in his own family in which on the advice of his elders he returned his wife's stridhanam and paid it by a hundi "1½ years ago," that is just about the time when the present plaint was filed. That hundi is not filed. But what is more important P.W. 2 does not say that the reverter was in response to his feeling that it was a matter of caste law. He says himself that he did not know what the caste rule was. None of those who advised him is examined. It may be noted that the custom he speaks of is not exactly that alleged in the plaint since he does not speak of any reverter of stridhanam paid to his daughter. P.W. 3 only speaks of the plaint case and says that according to Chetti custom, the stridhanam, it is not clear if he is speaking only of Minakshi's stridhanam and not of Visalakshi's also, "belong" to the parents of the girl. He speaks of a correspondence about the matter but no letters are filed. P.W. 5 says vaguely that if a woman dies "leaving a son or daughter who also dies subsequently," that is, in every case, since every one dies, it will again revert to the parents of the woman. He does not say what happens when the woman's issue dies issueless. A witness who makes such a statement is entitled to no weight. His knowledge is shown in cross-examination to be mere hearsay.

Thus the evidence gives us one definite instance and one vague instance of a very modern date and neither of them prior to the date of the suit. Obviously this is inadequate to discharge the onus which lies on the plaintiff to prove a custom, uniform definite and specific and having the force of law: see the observations of the Privy Council in Chandika Baksh v. Munna Kunwar (3) at p. 281. None of the plaintiff's witnesses in fact deposes that the allèged custom has among them the force of law or that the obligation to return the stridhanam is of the nature of a legal obligation. Most of them seem to agree that the stridhanam need not be kept intact although caste etiquette does usually keep it intact. It is difficult to gather from their evidence what custom lays down about that, and here undoubtedly the custom is to the last degree vague and indefinite. No case has been cited as settled by a caste panchayat, and, if the custom had been in vogue, there must have been cases of this kind. The evidence therefore appears to us wholly insufficient to justify this Court in putting on one side the ordinary rule of inheritance under Hindu law. The alleged custom is not proved by cogent evidence or by well authenticated and ancient instances, nor is it in all respects specific and definite.

The plaintiff in argument sought to support his weak case by quoting the evidence of two of the defendant's witnesses, D.Ws. 2 and 3. D.W. 2, when the plaint custom was put to him in general terms, said that the property "will go" to the donor's family. In cross examination he said he did not know personally of the custom. Here again is lacking the essential element, namely, the conviction that the stridhanam will go as a matter of obedience to custom having the force of law. D.W. 3's evidence is much vague and he speaks merely of a demand and not even of a payment. We do not think that this evidence is sufficient to fill the gap in plaintiff's evidence.

It seems clear that there is a custom having the force of law that, if the daughter of the family dies issueless, the stridhanam will revert to her parents, but there is at present no clear custom having the force of law, by which such reverter occurs when the daughter has issue and dies leaving issue. There is no certain custom in such a case governing the destiny of the stridhanam, and that destiny is apparently being decided by mutual arrangement sometimes one way, sometimes another. This is the evidence of a witness examined on commission for the defendant Ex. 2 (a) and it appears to us to represent the probable state of affairs.

It is argued for the plaintiff that granted a custom that where the woman dies issueless the inheritance would go to her parents, Hindu law would avail to send that inheritance in the same track when she has a daughter who dies issueless because under Hindu law that daughter will not be a full owner. But obviously such an argument is untenable. The plaintiff cannot appeal to Hindu law to support a custom which has its foundation in the derogation of Hindu law. The manner of inheritance must be wholly either one way or the other, either according to custom or according to Hindu law. This contention of the plaintiff has no support in the evidence of any witnesses; nor does any witness distinguish the manner and the reason of the reverter in the case of Minakshi's stridhanam and in the case of Visalakshi's stridhanam, or suggest that Visalakshi held hers by custom merely as a limited owner; nor is the contention even found in the plaint itself.

The conclusion therefore we come to on the evidence is the opposite of that come to by the learned trial Judge. We should have been more reluctant to differ from him if he had given any reasons for his conclusion, but his judgment is merely a setting out of the evidence and the argument on both sides with a leaning, it appears to us, on the whole against the plaintiff's case, and then one sentence in para. 18 that on a careful consideration of the evidence, he has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff is entitled to recover. For that conclusion, he gives no reason except that Minakshi's and Visalakshi's amounts are kept distinct in the accounts, but this seems to us no reason at all, since, as they were donated at different times and no doubt invested at different times, it is natural that they should find separate entiry in the family accounts.

We therefore, on our conclusion, reverse the decree of the learned trial Judge and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in both Courts.

Judgment.—The question is, does the case fall within S. 35, Provincial Insolvency Act ? The insolvent applied under that section for the annulment of his adjudication. The section runs thus :

"Where, in the opinion of the Court a debtor ought not to have been adjudged insolvent, or where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the debts of the insolvent have been paid in full, the Court shall, on the application of the debtor, or of any other person interested, by order in writing, annul the adjudication."

It is admitted by his counsel that the debts of the insolvent have not been paid in full, but it is stated that all his creditors gave him a complete and full discharge. That is not enough, for what the section contemplates is payment of the debts in full. This is the effect of the numerous decisions on the point. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras —Petitioner.

S. M. Perianna Pillai—Respondent.

O. P. No. 77 of 1929 Decided on 23rd October 1929 on a reference by Income-tax Commissioner, Madras.

*(a) Income-tax Act (1922), Ss. 23 (4), 23 (2), 63 and 22 (4)—Assessee asking adjournment by post or telegram —Adjournment granted—Letter intimating adjournment is not notice under S. 23 (2) or requisition under S. 63—On default on adjourned date assessment can be made under S. 23 (4).

Where an assessee applies for an adjournment by post or by a telegram of an enquiry in respect of which he has been required by notice under S. 23 (2) to produce evidence and the Income-tax Officer grants an adjournment, the letter (or the telegram where it is a telegram) intimating the fact of the adjournment to the assessee is neither a notice under S. 23 (2) nor a requisition within the meaning of S. 63. It is merely an act of consideration and supererogation, the omission of which will not entail any legal consequence and therefore, an assessment under S. 23 (4) in default of assessee's appearance on the adjourned date cannot be objected to : 2 Indian Tax Cases 3, Dist. [P 114, C 2, 115, C 1]

 (b) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 23 (3)—Income-tax Officer has power to adjourn proceedings—General power of adjournment discussed—Adjournment.

The power of an officer entrusted with an enquiry to adjourn the proceedings, as occasion requires, is so necessary, convenient and universally conceded that unless it is expressly withheld by statute or rule having the force of law, it must be taken to vest in him. An Income-tax Officer has, therefore, the power of adjournment in an enquiry under S. 23 (3). [P 114 C 1]

(c) Civil P. C. O. 17, R. 1—Adjourned date need not be intimated to an absent party.

It is not the practice much less a rule of procedure even in a Court of justice that an adjourned date is intimated to an absent party. No doubt if a party chooses to apply in person or by representative at the Court or office he can learn what orders have been passed but he cannot insist upon a telegram or a letter by post any more than he can insist upon a letter by special messenger : (1915) *A. T. R. Venkatrama Sastri, N. S. Vaidyanadha Aiyar and M. Subbaraya Aiyar—for Assessee.

M. Patanjali Sastri — for Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras.

Curgenven, J.—In this case the Commissioner of Income-tax refers the following question for the decision of this Court :

"Where an assessee applies for adjournment by post or by telegram of an enquiry in respect of which he has been required by a notice under S. 23 (2) to produce evidence and the Income-tax Officer grants an adjournment, is the letter (or the telegram where it is a telegram) intimating the fact of the adjournment to the assessee either a notice under S. 23 (2), or a requisition within the meaning of S. 63 of the Act ?"

To understand precisely the nature of this question, it is necessary to look at the circumstances out of which it arose.

The assessee made his return on 19th June 1928, and on 22nd September a notice under Ss. 23 (2) and 22 (4) was issued to him requiring him to produce his accounts on 4th October. On 3rd October he sent a telegram pleading a private engagement and asking for an adjournment for two weeks. If this has been granted in full it would have entailed a postponement of the hearing until 18th October. The Income-tax Officer did not grant it in full, but he did adjourn the case until the 12th. This he intimated to the assessee by means of a postcard despatched on the 4th. The assessee did not appear or cause the production of his accounts on the 12th, and since he had thereby failed to comply with the terms of the notice the Income-tax Officer, under S. 23 (4), made the assessment to the best of his judgment.

The argument addressed to us upon these facts by Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri may be set forth as it stands in the Commissioner's letter of reference:

(1) That the postcard communicating the grant of the adjournment should itself be taken to be the notice under S. 23 (2) ; the fact that the original notice was under S. 22 (4) as well as under S. 23 (2) may for the moment be ignored as default in compliance with notice under either entails assessment under S. 23 (4),

(2) That it should therefore have been served on the petitioner by registered post, and

(3) That as the postcard was not sent by registered post there was no valid service of notice to justify an assessment under S. 23 (4).

It might reasonably have been inferred, from the language of the question, that the power of the Income-tax Officer to grant an adjournment was to be presumed ; but in fact this line of reasoning is founded upon a denial that he has, at least in circumstances such as the present, any such power. Not having it, it is said that his only course, when he desires to intimate to an assessee a change of date of hearing, is to issue a second notice in terms of the first (save as regards date), in accordance with the theory that the first notice becomes null and void so soon as the original date of hearing is past. Accordingly unless the post card in the present case can be regarded as a notice under S. 23 (2), which it clearly is not, the assessee received no such notice as he was obliged to comply with. It is sought to qualify the rigidity of this doctrine by the application of the theory of waiver. If the assessee allows his case to be adjourned to an agreed date, he cannot afterwards be heard to contend that he received no valid notice for that date.

I can discover no sufficient ground for denying to an Income-tax Officer the power of adjournment, independently of the doctrine of waiver. S. 23 (3) appears to contemplate it when it says :

"On the day specified in the notice issued under sub-S. (2), or as soon afterwards as may be."

and I can find no justification for restricting the latter words to any particular stage of the inquiry. It may be that the mode of expression used in S. 23 (3) is not so fully proof against criticism as the language, for instance, of S. 31 (1) relating to appeals, where it is said that the Assistant Commissioner "may from time to time adjourn the hearing." But if the Income-tax Officer, as is suggested, has no option but to hear the case "on the day specified in the notice" failure to do so rendering the notice inoperative, the words "as soon after as may be" are irreconcilable with the intention of the Act.

Apart from the presence of these words, I think that the power of an officer entrusted with an enquiry to adjourn his proceedings, as occasion requires, is so necessary, convenient and universally conceded that unless it is expressly withheld by statute or rule having the force of law it must be taken to vest in him. It is not possible to regard a question of this kind apart from consideration of practical expediency in its relation to the transaction of public business ; and it seems scarcely credible that the legislature, which may be supposed to have kept such considerations in view, would have intended to place this constraint upon an executive officer in the disposal of his work.

Accepting then that a hearing under S. 23 (3) may be adjourned, it follows that no second notice under S. 23 (2) for the adjourned date was required by law; and this in effect answers the first part of the question. Mr. Venkatarama Sastri, based his case entirely upon this position, but the question put to us also inquires whether the letter or telegram replying to the application for adjournment is a requisition within the meaning of S. 63 of the Act. Under S. 63 (1).

"A notice or requisition under this Act may be served on the person therein named either by post or, as if it were a summons issued by a a Court, under the Code of Civil Procedure 1908."

Under S. 27, General Clauses Act, if such a document is sent by post, it must be registered. The question is whether in the circumstances stated, an unregistered communication will suffice.

So far as the express terms of the Income-tax Act go, there is no provision either for the manner in which an application for an adjournment should be made, or for the manner in which it should be replied to. It cannot therefore be said that any reply sent is a "notice or requisition under the Act" in the sense that the notice prescribed by S. 23 (2) is a "notice under the Act," i.e., such as the Act requires to be served upon an assessee. Accordingly, no statutory obligation lay upon the Income-tax Officer to issue any reply. He could have proceeded, it is not denied, to dispose of the case on 4th October under S. 23 (4). If he decided to put off disposing of it until the 12th it was open to him to do so. But even so, I cannot discover that the assessee had any legal right to a communication apprising him of the fact. It is not the practice, much less a rule of procedure, even in a Court of justice that an adjournment date is so intimated to an absent party. No doubt if a party chooses to apply, in person or by representative, at the Court or office he can learn what orders have been passed. But he cannot insist upon a telegram or a letter by post, any more than he can insist upon a letter by special messenger. Accordingly I think that the postcard sent to the assessee in this case was not dictated by the terms of the statute but was merely an act of consideration and supererogation, the omission of which would have entailed no legal consequence. Upon this view it cannot be held that it amounted to a "requisition under the Act."

I reach this conclusion with the less hesitation because I cannot avoid the apprehension that if it were necessary to hold that the reply to a postal application for an adjournment must be by registered post a quite natural consequence would be a refusal on the part of Income-tax Officers to entertain any such applications, to the detriment rather of the assessee than of the officer. Something has been said in the course of the arguments about the requirements of natural justice, as applied to the proceedings of public officers and upon this topic the observations of Lord Haldane, L. C., and of Lord Shaw of Dunferline in (1915) A. C. 120 are not inapposite. I quote from the latter's judgment:

"The words "natural justice" occur in arguments and sometimes in judicial pronouncements in such cases. My Lords, when a central administration board deals with an appeal from a local authority it must do its best to act justly, and to reach just end by just means. If a statute prescribes the means it must employ them. If it is left without express guidance it must still act honestly and by honest means. In regard to these certain ways and methods of judicial procedure may very likely be imitated; and lawyer-like methods may find especial favour from lawyers. But that the judiciary should presume to impose its own methods on administrative and executive officers is a usurpation. And the assumption that the methods of natural justice are ex necessitate those of Courts of justice is wholly unfounded."

Where an executive officer, or a department of Government supplements the procedure laid down by statute, the principles formulated in this quotation afford a test whether the supplementary procedure is in accordance with natural justice and will not be interfered with. I think that the procedure in the present case answers to this test.

I would answer both the branches of the question put to us in the negative. The petitioner will pay the Commissioner's costs. Advocates' fee Rs. 250.

Walsh, J.—This is a question referred by the Income-tax Commissioner under the following circumstances:

The assessee submitted on 19th June 1928 a return of his income. On 22nd September 1928 the Income-tax Officer served on him a notice under S. 23 (2) and 22 (4) of the Act calling upon him to produce on 4th October 1928 certain accounts and the evidence he wished to rely on in support of his return. On 3rd October 1928 the assessee sent the following telegram to the Income-tax Officer, "Tomorrow my family Puja at Palni. Praying adjournment for two weeks." The Income-tax Officer gave an adjournment till 12th October 1928, sending the intimation by ordinary post. The assessee did not appear on 12th October 1928 and the Income-tax Officer made the assessment to the best of his judgment under S. 23 (4). The assessee then moved the Income-tax Officer under S. 27 of the Act to cancel the assessment. He alleged that he returned with his family to his house only on 16th October 1928 when he found the post-card there intimating the adjournment to 12th October 1928. In the course of the enquiry it was admitted that the assessee had not left any address at the office, nor made any arrangements to acquaint himself with any orders that the Income-tax Officer might pass on his telegram for adjournment. The post-card had been admittedly delivered at the assessee's usual address and in good time to acquaint him with the adjournment. The Income-tax Officer held that the assessee had placed himself out of communication by his own default and declined to reopen the assessment. An appeal against this decision to the Assistant Commissioner proved unsuccessful. The assessee then argued before the Commissioner:

(1) that the post-card communicating the grant of adjournment should itself be taken to be a notice under S. 23 (2);

(2) that it should therefore he served on the assessee by registered post;

(3) that as the post card was not sent by registered post there was no valid service of the notice to justify an assessment under S. 23 (4).

The Commissioner has accordingly referred the following question to the High Court:

" Where an assessee applies for adjournment by post or by telegram of an enquiry is respect of which he has been required by a notice under S. 23 (2) to produce evidence, and the Income-tax Officer grants an adjournment, is the letter (or the telegram where it is a telegram) intimating the fact of the adjournment to the assessee either a notice under S. 23-(2), or a requisition within the meaning of the Act."

S. 63 (1) reads:

"A notice or requisition under the Act may be served on the person therein named either by post or as if it were a summons issued by a Court under the Code of the Civil Procedure 1908."

It is not denied that if this was a notice or a requisition under the Act it must be sent by registered post and if it were at the same time a notice under S. 23 (2) and not so sent, the Income-tax Officer could not in default of the assessee's appearance proceed to make an assessment to the best of his judgment under S. 23 (4). The second question as propounded becomes unnecessary if the fact is answered in the negative. It is clear that a notice under S. 23 (2) is necessarily also a requisition since the party is either required to attend in person or to produce his books or, as the notice form shows, to do both.

If a notice or requisition is issued under any other section, then though it may be necessary under the terms of S. 63 to send it by registered post, the failure to do so would not affect the power of the Income-tax Officer to act under S. 23 (4). I take it therefore, specially reading it with the arguments of the assessee set out by the Commissioner as the basis of his question, that the question before us really is this:

"Where an assessee applies for adjournment by post or telegram of an enquiry in respect of which he has been required by a notice under S. 23 (2) to produce evidence and the Income-tax Officer grants an adjournment, is the letter (or the telegram where it is a telegram) intimating the fact of the adjournment to the assessee either a notice or a requisition under S. 23 (2)?"

If it is held to be so, it will of course attract the terms of S. 63 (1) and if it is not so, while it might still attract the terms of S. 63 (1), it would be no ground for objecting to an assessment under S. 23 (4) in default of the assessee's appearance on the adjourned date, that the terms of S. 63 had not been complied with. The argument of the learned pleader is briefly this: If on the day appointed for the enquiry the assessee is absent or fails to comply with all the terms of the notice issued under S. 23 (2), the Income-tax Officer must at once proceed to assess him under S. 23 (4), or if he does not to so, but intimates to him a fresh date of hearing he must issue a fresh notice under S. 23 (2). In fact he would do so far as to deny the Income-tax Officer any inherent power of adjournment in cases where the assessee fails to appear even though the assessee should have asked for such adjournment himself (unless he complies with the date asked for by the assessee) and would read that part of S. 23 which runs:

"On the day spscified in the notice issued under Sub-S. 2' or as soon afterwards as may be, the Income-tax Officer, after hearing such evidence as such person may produce ..... shall by an order in writing assess the total income of the assessee, "as if the words ran": 'On the day specified in the notice issued under sub-S. (2) or, provided the assessee has appeared in compliance with the terms of the notice as soon afterwards as may be, etc."

Now it would require very strong reasons to read into a section words like these which are not there and which deny to the Income-tax Officer a very ordinary and necessary power of granting adjournment even though the assessee may not have appeared or complied with the notice under S. 2. To support this contention he argues that in S. 23 (4) there is no allusion to any adjourned date. Apart from that being a very slight ground to read into S. 23 (3) words which are not there, it has been pointed out for the Crown that S. 23 (4) read with S. 22 (2) shows clearly that the penalty of an assessment under S. 23 (4) (which for the sake of convenience, though not quite accurately, may be called a random assessment) need not necessarily be imposed the moment the default is committed. One of the defaults entailing a random assessment under S. 23 (4) is failure to make a return under sub-S. 1, S. 22, but sub-S. 3, S. 22 provides that if the assessee having failed to submit a return or having found an omission or error in his return furnishes a return or a revised return as the case may be at any time before the assessment is made, any return so made shall be deemed to be a return made in due time under this section. Hence though S. 23 (4) does not mention any adjourned date, S. 23 (2) lays down that there is a locus penitentiae right up to the time when the actual assessment is made. No argument therefore can be drawn from the wording of S. 23 (4) to support the introduction of such words under S. 23 (3) as would deprive the Income-tax Officer of the power of granting an adjournment in case the assessee had not complied with the terms of the order under S. 23 (2). The argument in the circumstances of the present case implies a further fallacy. The Income-tax Officer having granted an adjournment there was no default by the assessee on 4th October 1928, when he did not appear. The Income-tax Officer could not, therefore, on any fair or judicial principle of procedure have visited him with the penalty of an assessment under S. 23 (4) for his non-appearance on that date. If that is so, where was the point at which the Income-tax Officer had to start proceedings all over again under S. 23 (2)? Obviously this occasion could not, on the argument, have arisen till the assessee absented himself on 12th October 1928 but the basis of the learned advocate's argument is that the notice intimating the adjournment to 12th October was the fresh notice under S. 23 (2) which required registration. It may be thought that to deny the Income-tax Officer a power of adjournment in cases where the assessee is absent and even though the letter asks for it, is going further than is necessary to prove the assessee's contention in this reference, but I think the learned advocate is quite correct in arguing for this extreme position and that it is really essential to his plea, for otherwise the obvious answer that there is no necessity at all for the Income-tax Officer to send any reply to a letter or telegram asking for adjournment is almost fatal to his case. It has not and cannot be contended that any such duty of reply is cast on the Income-tax Officer nor can it be denied that if he has a power of adjournment he may, whether to suit his own convenience or that of the assessee, simply write on the file "adjourned to such and such a date," or post it on the board (if such a board is kept). Such an endorsement on the file or notice on the board he is not bound to communicate to the assessee if the latter is absent. It is for the assessee to bestir himself aud make enquiries or to look on the notice board or elsewhere. If this is so, and it cannot, I consider, be controverted, then the Income-tax Officer is neither bound to proceed under S. 23 (4) on the original date of hearing, nor to begin matters all over again by fresh notice under S. 23(2) so that really the two arguments that he has no power of adjournment if the assessee does not appear and the corrollary that he must either act at once under S. 23 (4) or begin with a fresh notice under S. 23 (2) are absolutely essential to establish the contention that a notice of adjournment is a notice under S. 23 (2). I consider that the assessee has failed to make out either of these preliminary contentions. In my view and for the determination of the case it is not material to decide whether a notice or a requisition, if it is not one under S. 23 (2), has to be registered. By the terms of S. 63 if the notice is one under the Act it clearly must be registered, but if it is not a notice under S. 23 (2) the failure to do so will not make an assessment under S. 23 (4) invalid. That is why that part of the reference question which asks whether the letter in this case is a requisition under S. 63 has no bearing on the matter before us if the answer to the first question be in the negative. It raises a question with which we are not concerned. If I had to decide it I should say that it is not a notice under the Act at all. Again on the abstract and academic question whether a notice of adjournment made on the request of the assessee is a mere notice, or is also a requisition (which question really does not arise in this case) I do not feel bound to give an answer, once it is found that it is not a notice or requisition under S. 23 (2). If I had to express an opinion I should say that it must necessarily be a notice (by which I take it is meant an intimation which brings something to somebody's notice). I doubt that it is a requisition because a party is supposed by the original summons or notice to go on appearing till his case is finished, whether this is explicitly so stated in the original summons or not. Any other construction would mean that the assessee would have complied with the original summons in this case if he had merely gone to the office on the day in question, flung his books down before the Income-tax Officer and walked off. The words "attend at my office" must surely mean more than this and must mean:

"attend for as long as I shall require you on that day and also attend in the same way on subsequent dates to which the case may be adjourned."

But in fact nothing turns here on whether the post-card was a notice or a requisition or a notice plus a requisition. If it was any of these things and was issued under S. 23 (2), then the assessee's contention is correct. If it was not issued under S. 23 (2), it does not affect the question of the right of the officer in case of default to proceed under S. 23 (4). Again I do not feel myself bound to deal with a case where an assessee attends on the due date and finds that the Income-tax Officer is not sitting and has fixed no date of adjournment. Such conduct by the Income-tax Officer would unless unavoidable, be a clear dereliction of his duties. I am rather inclined to think that if there were such a dereliction or if by "force majeure," say a sudden accident to the Income-tax Officer which incapacitated him from giving directions, or his sudden death, the enquiry were left in the air on the day fixed for it, it might very well be that proceedings would have to begin all over again. The Act does not expressly provide for any such break in the enquiry. A question of this sort may be decided when and if it arises. It is not before us to decide.

Although the contention in the present case is purely one of law, it is quite clear that if the assessee's argument is accepted that every notice of an adjourned date, even if made at the petitioner's request (if it is not the date required by the petitioner) necessitates a fresh registered notice under S. 23 (2), the result will simply be in practice that all such adjournments will be refused and the assessment will be decided under S. 23 (4) forthwith. That will work as a great hardship to assessees. The grant of an adjournment is a concession. It was argued that it is no concession if the date asked for by the assessee is not granted. I dissent entirely from this view. The request for an adjournment in these cases implies prima facie a request that the right to make an assessment under S. 23 (4) shall not be exercised. The mere granting of this is a great concession. Then the petitioner's wishes as regards the adjourned date are met partly though not in full. Let us suppose a telegram or letter for adjournment received as in this case either on the day before the hearing or on the date of hearing. The Income-tax Officer is not able to adjourn the enquiry for as long as the assessee wishes. He can grant an adjournment to the next day or the day after, but a registered letter, even if posted at once, cannot reach the assessee in time. In such cases on the contention raised he must refuse even the shorter adjournment which he was prepared to grant, or else start proceedings all over again.

It is also quite clear if the petitioner's contention is correct that the registered notice of adjournment must not only intimate the adjourned date but an entirely fresh list of the other documents or evidence required (admittedly joint notices under S. 22 (4) and 23 (2) are legal and the notice in this case is such.) If the Income-tax Officer does not go to all this trouble it will not be a valid notice. The facts in the present case make this clear. The assessee must and does contend that even if he had got and read the post-card in time to attend the hearing on the 12th he would not have been bound to attend it as the notice was not registered. So that even knowledge gained from a notice to him by the Court itself would not make the notice a valid one. It follows therefore that a mere reference in a fresh registered notice to the evidence required in a previous notice can and will be equally impugned as not constituting a valid notice of what evidence the assessee is required to produce. Ex hypothesi an entirely fresh proceeding under S. 23 (2) has been started and the terms of S. 23 (2) must be complied with fully and literally. This will certainly not be an inducement to the Income-tax Officer to spend trouble, time and money in granting requests by post or wire for adjournments which they are admittedly not bound to notice or answer at all. A decision in 2 Indian Tax Cases p. 3 has been referred to by the learned advocate for the assessee. I do not think it has any bearing on this case. It was held there that if the Income-tax Officer during an enquiry under S. 23 (2) required more evidence he can call for it and it might be advisable to do so by a fresh notice under S. 23 (2).

Now it is clear that such notice would be only one supplementary to the one already sent and it need not contain the particulars already given in the previous notice. To hold that a supplementary notice can be sent under sub-S. (2) when the Income-tax Officer requires fresh evidence in a very different proposition from holding that a notice, which the Income-tax Officer need not send at all, intimating an adjournment made on a letter or telegram by the assessee asking for it, is a fresh notice or even a supplementary notice under S. 23 (2). I would answer the question (in the form in which I understand it is really intended to be put) thus : That where an assessee applies for adjournment by post or telegram of an enquiry in respect of which he has been required by a notice under S. 23 (2) to produce evidence and the Income-tax Officer grants an adjournment the letter (or the telegram where it is a telegram) intimating the fact of the adjournment to the assessee is neither a notice nor a requisition under S. 23 (2) and does not affect the power of the Income-tax Officer to assess under S. 23 (4) if the assessee fails to appear on the date of adjournment or commits any of the other defaults rendering him liable to be assessed uuder that section.

If an answer has to be given to the second part of the question referred to us, I would answer it also in the negative.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J. — I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my learned brothers. I agree with them that the answer should be in the negative and have nothing useful to add. The respondent will pay Rs. 250 vakil's fee to Commissioner.

No general rule can be laid down in cases where a money-lending business takes property in satisfaction of the debts due and sells them. But where, as a matter of fact, in a money-lending business, profits are generally got by taking lands in satisfaction of the debts due and selling them for profits later on, such profits must no doubt be considered as derived from such business, and cannot escape taxation by saying that the profits have nothing to do with the business of the firm which was merely money-lending. Judgment.—The point referred to us for decision is whether there was any evidence before the Commissioner of Income-tax on which he could find that the $ 30,000 remitted from Ipoh to Madras during the year of assessment was remitted not in 'discharge of the debt owed by the Ipoh branch to the assessee but as the latters' share of the profits and (2) whether the sum of $ 48,460 $ 793, $ 1,225, $ 1,806 and $ 604 amounting in all to $ 52,888 can be held to be income derived from business and not merely accretions of capital?

The facts are shortly these: There was a firm in Madras and a firm in Ipoh carrying on money-lending business. The partners were the same. During the course of dealings moneys were due by the Ipoh firm to the Madras firm. The Ipoh firm was making profits in the accounting year 1925-26 the year of assessment being 1926-27. In the accounting year sums were remitted out of the Ipoh profits to this Madras firm, which in the Madras accounts were appropriated to wipe off the debt due to the Madras firm. The partner in the Madras firm who was also a partner of the Ipoh firm wrote a letter to the agent of the Ipoh firm on 26th March 1926 the material portions of which run as follows:

"As the debt due by us (Ipoh) to Madras has mostly been discharged it will not be convenient to send moneys to Madras and debit it. You may, subject to the exigencies of the business there ascertain the income for the year ending Panguni 30th Krodhana 12th April 1926 and agreeable thereto debit the headquarters in the sum of $ 30,000 on Sena's account and in $ 30,000 on R. M's. account and to credit Madras therewith."

According to this letter a credit entry was made in the Ipoh accounts but not in the Madras accounts in the year of accounting. The assessee has been taxed on this $ 30,000 on the ground that it comes under S. 4, Cl. 2, Income-tax Act. S. 4, Cl. 2 runs as follows:

"Profits and gains of business accruing or arising without British) India to a person resident in British India shall if they are received in or brought into British India be deemed to have accrued or arisen in British India and to be profits and gains of the year in which they are so received or brought) notwithstanding the fact that they did not so accrue or arise in that year provided that they are so received or brought in within three years of the end of the year in which they accrued or arose."

There is an explanation which is not necessary to consider for the purpose of this case. The effect of S. 4, Cl. 2, is that so far as the firm outside British India is concerned even though there may be a partner in British India he is not liable to pay income-tax on profits except in so far as any portion of the profits are brought into British India within the year of accounting.

What happened in this case was that moneys were sent from Ipoh to Madras and these were credited in the Madras firm's books. The net result was that the amount which Ipoh owed to Madras was wiped out leaving a balance. There is no suggestion anywhere in the records that when these moneys were sent to the Madras firm they were credited in the Madras firm's books as profits received by each partner individually. Prima facie the Ipoh firm owed the Madras firm large sums of money and receipts were credited in the Madras partnership account. The asseesee admits that the Madras firm will be taxable. In fact the assessee does not deny that this amount will be taxable as profits remitted to the firm and that it ought to be included in the next year's accounts. The Madras firm will be taxable irrespective of any drawings of the partners and that will be the ordinary state of affairs in the case of firms which are assessable under the Act.

Next as regards the applicant in the present case it is sought to make him liable for a portion of the money remitted to the Madras firm and the only ground on which he can be so taxed would be on the evidence of the letter referred to above. It is not suggested that any moneys actually came into Madras in pursuance of that letter during the year of taxation. The Income-tax Officer did not treat this letter as showing that any amount was received by the petitioner from Ipoh. It is used as evidence that the petitioner must have received the profits earned outside British India and they were debited in the firm's books. It is nobody's case that the entries in the firm's books were a mere blind for the purpose of enabling one partner to draw out the profits earned outside British India and thereby escape taxation. There is no question of any fraud suggested in any of the orders of the Income-tax Officers. What is said is that this letter evidences a receipt of $ 30,000 by the assessee.

We do not think that that letter shows anything of the sort. That letter was written asking the Ipoh agent to look into the accounts, ascertain the income for the year and debit the headquarters in the sum of $ 30,000 on Sena's account and $ 30,000 in R. M.'s account and to credit Madras therewith. This does not show that the entire profits for the year were ascertained and that the $ 30,000 represented the profits remitted to the partner during the year of account. Where a partner draws moneys in the course of his business that will be taken into consideration at the end of the year and if there are any overdrawings by one partner they will be debited to the account of that partner or set off against his profits and because a partner draws some moneys during the year of account it cannot be said at once that that represents his share of the profits. S. 4 (2) is for the purpose of ascertaining the profits of a partner got from business carried on outside British India and when such profits come into British India that will be taken into consideration in assessing him. If a firm receives such profits from another firm it is the firm that should be taxed.

Further there is no evidence in this case that this letter showed either by itself or coupled with the other facts that any money remitted 'to the Madras firm during the cousre of that year were really remittances made to the assessee, and that it was sent to the Madras firm for the purpose of making the assessee escape liability to taxation. The reference is :

"Is there any evidence on which we can find that the $ 30,000 remitted from Ipoh to Madras during the year of assessment was remitted not in discharge of the debt owed by the Ipoh branch to the assessee but the latter's share of the profits."

When the remittances were made they were all credited and debited in the firm's accounts and were for the discharge of the debt owed by the Ipoh firm and under these circumstances we do not see any legal evidence to make the assessee liable for any drawing which he has made and which has been put down as in discharge of the debt owed by the Ipoh firm. In these circumstances we answer the first question in the negative.

Then as regards the second question, moneys realised by the sale of certain immovable properties, the finding of the Income tax Officer is that these transactions took place as a matter of fact in the course of the business, that the properties were taken over with the intention of selling them and that the profits derived from the transactions as a whole including the sales was as much a profit of the firm's business as that derived from its other money-lending transactions. The firm got these properties in discharge of debts due to it, resold the properties at a profit and the Income-tax authorities consider this as a profit derived from its business.

It is argued by Mr. K. S. Krishnaswami Iyengar, that the firm's business was only money-lending and no profit realized by the sale of the properties got in satisfaction of the debts due to the firm can be said to be profit made in the course of the firm's business and so it is not liable to be taxed. Reference is made to 5 Tax Cases 426. We do not think that any general rule can be laid down in these cases. One has to see what is the course of dealing and though the business is labelled as money-lending business, if as a matter of fact the profits were generally got by taking lands in satisfaction of debts due and selling them for profits later on, such profits must no doubt be considered as derived from such business and cannot escape taxation by saying that the profits have nothing to do with the business of the firm which was merely money-lending. The finding of the income-tax authorities is that the profits represented the profits of the business and are not, as was contended, accretions of the capital. Further this case is analogous to that of a pawn-broker who lends out moneys on articles received as pledges which he sells in satisfaction of the amount due to him and realizes profits. It cannot be said that the profits realised from such sales do not amount to profits derived in the course of the business.

In these circumstances we cannot say that the profits realized from the sale of the properties got by the firm in satisfaction of debts due to it were not got in the course of its business and that they were accretions of the capital. These were really profits which accrued in the course of the business and are thus taxable. The petitioner is entitled to costs which we fix at Rs. 250 on each of the petitions. The advance paid by him of Rs. 100 will be refunded.

first two businesses — Rubber plantations sold at profit—Assessee getting deduction as business loss on the loss incurred on the first two items—Income-tax authorities assessing on the profit made in sale of rubber plantations—Assessment held to be correct.

The assessee was a money lender and in course of his business lent money to one S. S. failed in business and discharged his debt to the assessee and transferred certain properties to him consisting of moneys due on simple money debts, moneys due on mortgaged items and also some rubber plantations. As regards moneys due on simple money debts the assessee recovered a smaller sum than the amount for which they were transferred and got a reduction of income-tax on this deficit. As regards the mortgaged items also he was not able to recover the amounts for which they were mortgaged and got a deduction for that deficit. As regards the rubber estate it was sold at a profit. The Income-tax authorities treated this profit as made in the course of the business and assessed the assessee to income-tax thereon.

Held : having regard to all the facts there was ample evidence for coming to the conclusion that this profit must be treated as part of the business profit and the income-tax authorities were right in assessing the assessee for the same : *A. R. Kesava Aiyangar—for Assessee.

M. Patanjali Sastri — for Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras.

Judgment.—In this case the facts are shortly these. The petitioner carried on business in money lending in Madras. In the course of business, one P L. N. K. Subramaniam Chetti owed him about Rs. 50,000. Subramaniam Chetti failed and to discharge his debt he transferred certain properties to the petitioner for 26,000 dollars. The items transferred consisted of moneys due on simple money debts, moneys due on mortgage items and also rubber plantations. As regards moneys due on simple money debts the petitioner recovered a smaller sum than the amount for which they were transferred and he wrote off Rs. 5,733 in the accounts and claimed that this was a business loss and got a reduction of income-tax. As regards the mortgage items, while a certain portion of the mortgaged property was recovered, he was not able to recover the amount for which they were assigned and he also claimed it as a business loss and got a deduction. As regards the rubber estate it was sold at a profit and the question is whether that profit is taxable as part of the profits made by him in the business.

The contention of the petitioner is that this was an isolated transaction, that it cannot be said to form part of his business, that any profits on resale was not profit made in the course of business and that therefore it is not taxable. The Income-tax Commissioner's view was that having regard to all the facts of the case, it should be treated as a profit made in the course of business. The questions referred to us are :

"(a) whether the Assistant Commissioner is right in holding that the present case is outside the principle of the decision in Board of Revenue v. Arunachalam Chettiar (1) and (b) whether on the facts of this case the assessment of the sum of Rs. 48,739 is legal?"

The decision in Board of Revenue v. Arunachellam Chettiar (1), was that it is a question of fact in each case whether certain stray transactions of a merchant are really part of his business so that the profits arising therefrom can be taxed as profits arising from his business. It was held there on the facts that profits that accrued to a banker and money-lender from certain stray speculative purchases and sales of dollars in the Straits Settlements were taxable as profits arising from his business and were not exempt from taxation as arising from occupation of a casual nature within the meaning of S. 3 (2) (viii), Income-tax Act of 1918. The facts which we have set out show that these rubber plantations were got by the petitioner in order to liquidate a loan made by him in the course of his money-lending business. So far as the items which went to liquidate this debt are concerned, they consisted, as already stated, of some simple money debts, mortgage items and this item of property and they were all clubbed together in an account called 'Thundu Kanakku." This account was part of the business account and only formed a separate ledger heading there. In dealing with this transaction of the re-sale of the rubber plantations we must take into consideration what he did in respect of all the three items which were taken together to discharge the debt. It does not appear that there was any separate treatment as regards this item. They were all brought into Thundu Kanakku ; as moneys were realized they were credited to the general account as moneys realized in the course of the liquidation of the debt ; and they were brought in the business account. When there was a loss in two of the tranactions the loss was claimed to be a deduction out of the business accounts. So that, as regards the other two items, it is clear that they were treated as loss arising from the business and as a business transaction. There was nothing, so far as we can see, in the accounts which distinguished this item from the other two items which were got by the petitioner. On the contrary we find that the expenses of the rubber estate were debited in the business accounts, the income therefrom was also credited in the business accounts and the profits, the excess of income over the expense, was shown as business profit made outside British India in the return. So far as the contention that this was an isolated transaction is concerned, there is nothing in the authorities to show that the profits of such a single transaction cannot be treated as part of the business profits. On the contrary, there are cases where profits of a single transaction have been treated as part of the business profits. We may refer to the case in 7 Tax Cases 125, where the principles governing such cases have been enunciated. In that case, a company which was doing business as selling agents for colliery tompanies and also as commission agents, for purchase of trucks, purchased certain trucks for themselves and made a profit out of it. The question arose whether this was a profit made in the course of the business. Sankey, J., deals with the question raised and he puts the matter clearly as follows :

" In my view there is no question of law really in issue here. The law seems to me to be perfectly well :settled, and the only question one has to determine is which side of the line this transaction falls on. Is it, as Mr. Latter contends, in the nature of capital profit on the sale of an investment ? Or is it, as the Attorney General contends, a profit made in the operation of the appellant company's business. Now that is very largely, as I think, a question of fact again."

Then, the learned Judge refers to certain circumstances and gives reasons for holding that it is part of the business. The learned Judge observes :

" I do not think it is possible to say that the mere fact that it was an isolated transaction at once takes it out of the category of chargeable property. I think in most cases an isolated transaction does not fall to be chargeable, but I think you have to consider the transaction and you cannot lay it down as a matter of law without regard to the circumstances that in this case the £ 2,500 is not chargeable."

This is also the effect of the decision in 11 Tax Cases 297 where also it was an isolated transaction, and this is also the principle laid down in 2 Tax Cases 8 where a cotton merchant happend to liquidate the affairs of another cotton merchant who failed and made a large profits as commission and it was held that it was profit made in the course of business. The question is not in this case whether the petitioner intended to sell it at a profit but, whether, having regard to all the facts and the way in which he treated this property and the other two items which were got by him in discharge of the debt and having regard to all the attendant facts, it can be said that this was part of the business.

We cannot say in this case there was no evidence before the Commissioner of Income-tax, having regard to all the facts set out, for coming to the conclusion that this must be treated as part of the business profits and, as there was evidence to justify his conclusion, it is difficult for us to hold that he was wrong in making the assessment. We therefore answer the reference by stating that the Commissioner was right in assessing the petitioner in the manner he had done. The petitioner will pay Rs. 250 the costs of the Commissioner.

 Income-tax Act (1922), S. 10—Firm purchasing lands and selling them after six years at profit — Income-tax Officer cannot tax profits, under business, unless there is legal evidence.

Ordinarily profit arising out of an isolated transaction outside the scope of the business does not fall to be chargeable as a business profit. Where therefore firm a purchases property and sells it at profit after six or seven years, the Income-tax Officer cannot treat the difference in prices as a business profit and cannot tax them in the absence of legal evidence that it is profit out of business: Beynon & Co. Ltd. v. Ogg. 7 Tax Cases 125, Rel. on. [P 124 C 1]

K. Rajah Iyer and V. Ramaswami Iyer—for Assessee.

M. Patanajali Sastri — for Respondent.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—The question referred to us is, whether there is any evidence to justify the finding that the purchase and sale of lands formed part of any business which the assessee was carrying on. The Income-tax Officer in this case proceeds on what he says is a well known fact that in the course of their business abroad and as a part of it Nattukottai Chettis purchase land and other properties when they are cheap and hold them until such time as they are able to sell them at a good price and that during the period these properties are in their possession the income derived, if any, on the one hand and the expense of maintenance, if any, on the other, are included in their business accounts. In the present case, there is no evidence afforded by the books that the income derived and the expense iucurred were included and made part of the firm's business accounts. All that appears is that these Chettis purchased one item of property in 1919 and another item of property in 1924 and that these were sold in 1926-27. On this fact and on this general presumption which the Income-tax Officer thinks fit to draw in these cases he has treated the difference in prices as a business profit.

There is no evidence about what was done with the income. The books are not before the Income-tax Officer and there is nothing to show that the income and expenses were, as a matter of fact, brought into the partnership accounts. There is nothing to show that the profits were made by the operation of the petitioner's money lending business and were not in the nature of capital profits on the sale of au investment. As pointed out by Sankey, J. in Beynon & Co. Ltd. v. Ogg, (1) ordinarily profit arising out of an isolated transaction outside the scope of the business does not fall to be chargeable as a business profit. On these facts we are not prepared to say that there is legal evidence on which the assessee can be assessed on the ground that it is part of the profits of the business carried on. The petitioner will be entitled to his costs, Rs. 250.

Curgenven, J.—The question which the Commissioner refers to us is:

"Whether where an assessee owns a number of businesses A, B, C and D, and the profits and gains of business A are insufficient to cover the full depreciation admissible under S. 10 (2) (vi) of the Act on the machinery, plant, etc., used for the purpose of that business, the excess depreciation can be set off against the profits and gains of the other businesses B, C and D"?

The assessee is an unregistered firm carrying on the business of (1) grocery and rice, (2) money lending, (3) Soda factory, (4) rice-mill, (5) foreign liquor shops, and (6) motor service, The profits of the last named, the motor service, for the year to which the assessment relates, amounted only to Rs. 253, whereas the firm claimed an allowance of Rs. 10,542 on account of depreciation. Under S. 10 (2) (vi) of the Act, in computing the profits or gains of a business allowance may be made, within certain prescribed limits, in respect of depreciation of buildings, machinery, etc., and the question we have to answer is whether, taking this case as an example of the general proposition addressed to us, the allowance may be set against not only the small profit of Rs. 253 earned by the motor service but against the profits earned by the other five businesses.

Section 10, which deals with the assessment of a business to tax, provides that the profits or gains shall be computed after making allowances in respect of charges classified into nine divisions, examples of which are rent, cost of repairs, interest on borrowed capital, etc. Admittedly in respect of each of these charges except depreciation it is open to the assessee to include the whole sum which it represents in his balance sheet, with the result, it may be, that a minus balance or loss on the business is shown. Then, if he has more than one business, or even more than one head of income, as described in S. 6, he is entitled under S. 24, to set off the loss in the business against any profits or gains received under another head. In other words, if the charge is any one of those named in S. 10, other than depreciation, the question which the Commissioner refers to us must, upon the plain terms of the Act, be answered in the affirmative. It is said, however, that allowance for depreciation stands upon a different footing from the other allowances, and, as an indication of this, our attention is directed to proviso (b) under Cl. (vi), S. 10 (2). It lays down that :

"Where full effect cannot be given to any such allowance in any year owing to there being no profits or gains chargeable for that year, or owing to the profits or gains chargeable being less than the allowance, the allowance or part of the allowance to which effect has not been given, as the case may be, shall be added to the amount of the allowance for depreciation for the following year and deemed to be part of that allowance, or, if there is no such allowance for that year, be deemed to be the allowance for that year, and so on for succeeding years."

Taking the words "profits or gains chargeable for that year" to refer only to the profits or gains of the business in which the depreciation occurs, it is contended that this proviso allows only one way of treating the charge; that so much of it as cannot be neutralised by profits must not figure as an actual loss, but must be carried forward into the next year's account. But neither from the language used, nor from any general considerations arising from the nature of the charge are we satisfied that this construction is correct. But for the proviso, depreciation stands upon the same footing, and should, so far as any intention to the contrary appears, be dealt with in the same way, as the other charges enumerated in the section ; and it is a well known principle of construction: see (1897) Appeal Cases 647 that a proviso should not by mere implication withdraw any part of what the main provision has given. We do not think therefore that upon the terms of the section an assessee is precluded from adding the whole charge for depreciation to his other business charges, even though the result is to show a loss, and then claiming under S 24, to set off the loss against profit from some other source. Nor have we been shown that there is anything in the nature of this allowance for depreciation to render such a course inadmissible. The learned advocate for the Crown argues that it is not a business expense or loss, but rather a sum set apart to make good a loss of capital. There is an observation in (1911) 1 Ch. 92 that depreciation is a business loss. That, however, was not an income-tax case, and no doubt there may be a business loss of capital as well as of profits. We do not propose to pursue this line of inquiry further, as we have heard nothing in any sense conclusive upon the point. But it may be observed that a close analogy exists between money spent upon repairs to buildings, machinery, etc., and money set apart in respect of depreciation of such things, and that so far as we can discover there is no reason to treat differently the allowances in respect of these two classes of expenditure.

We have dealt with the question on the footing that the words "business" and "any business" occurring in S. 10 (1) relate only to the business in which the depreciation occurred,—in this case the motor service. If, however, we construe "any business" as meaning all the businesses put together, which was the construction put upon it in Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Arunachelam Chettiar (1), then in proviso (b) "profits or gains" will mean the aggregate profits or gains of all the businesses together, and we need look no further for an answer to the question proposed to us.

This construction has been adopted in a case recently decided by the Lahore High Court (A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 556), where the same question arose in a slightly more extreme form and was decided in the same manner.

Our answer to the question referred to us is in the affirmative. The respondent will receive the costs of this application. Vakil's fee Rs. 250. Deposit to be returned.

Original Petn. No. 168 of 1928, Decided on 14th October 1929.

Income-tax Act (1922), S. 34, proviso—Rate sought to be raised—Determination of correct taxable income afresh is not necessary.

In a case where the rate is sought to be raised under S. 34 of the Act, an Income-tax Officer is not bound to determine afresh the correct taxable income of the assessee. [P 127 C 1]

R. Kesava Iyengar—for Assessee.

M. Patanjali Sastri—for Respondent.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—The question we are asked to answer is: When an Income-tax Officer takes action under S. 34, Income-tax Act, for the purpose of raising the rate of tax on the ground that the rate originally fixed was too low, is not the Income-tax Officer bound to re-assess the income, that is, to determine afresh the correct taxable income of the assessee? S. 34 refers to income escaping assessment and it provides that in such cases it may either be that the income has escaped assessment or has been assessed at too low a rate—the Income-tax Officer may serve on the person liable to pay tax on such income, profits or gains, or, in the case of a company, on the principal officer thereof, a notice containing all or any of the requirements which may be included under sub-S. (2), S. 22 and may proceed to assess or re-assess such income, profits or gains and that the provisions of this Act shall, as far as possible, apply accordingly as if the notice were a notice issued under that subsection. Then there is a proviso that the tax shall be charged at the rate at which it would have been charged had the income, profits or gains not escaped assessment or full assessment as the case may be. It is argued for the petitioner that under S. 34, where the rate at which the tax is levied is sought to be raised, the Income-tax Officer is bound to begin proceedings again as regards assessment and in fact proceed as if there is an enquiry in respect of not only of the portion which has escaped assessment but of all the other items also; and reference is made to Ss. 14 and 16. It is argued that, when there are various heads under which a person returns his income, if in respect of one of those heads, owing to an omission or under-estimation, he has been taxed at a certain rate which is subsequently found to be incorrect and notice is given to him under S. 34, the Income-tax Officer is not to confine himself to that portion which has escaped assessment but he is to begin again as if the notice sent was a first notice sent to the assessee to return his income. We do not think that S. 34 requires any such thing to be done. S. 34 refers to a specific case, namely, the case where an income chargeable to income-tax has escaped or has been assessed at too low a rate. It may escape assessment leaving the rate unchanged, in which case it is only the amount of the assessment that will have to be raised owing to the rise in the taxable income, or it may escape assessment in such a way that, if rectified, it would take the income beyond a certain rate ; for example, it may give the figure to be over Rs. 40,000 in which case it will be assessed at 0-1-6 instead of 0-1-0 and the rate will therefore be higher. Where the rate is in question the enquiry need not, under S. 34, go beyond the facts on which the raising of the rate depends. When the assessee is given notice to show cause why the tax should not be raised because of an item having escaped assessment he is entitled to show that, as a matter of fact, there has been no omission and that the original rate is correct. We do not think that S. 34 requires the whole thing to be re-opened and every item under which income-tax is charged to be considered afresh and a fresh assessment levied. In one sense, of course, he must fix the taxable income to enable him to fix the rate, but he is not bound to re-open the items which are not in question or which have become final and start proceedings again. We think he is only bound to confine himself to the particular item which has been omitted.

Our answer will therefore be that, in a case where the rate is sought to be raised under S. 34, Income-tax Act, an Income-tax Officer is not bound to determine afresh the correct taxable income of the assessee. The petitioner will pay Rs. 250 the costs allowable.

A combined notice under Ss. 23 (2) and 22 (4) is a valid notice, and on a non-compliance of the terms of such a notice, an assessment under S. 23 (4) could be justified : A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 587 (S. B.); A. I. R. 1928 All. 283; A. I. R. 1929 Rang. 38 (F.B.) and 2 Tax Cas 324, Rel. on. [P 127 C 2]

In respect of an assessee who has submitted a return of his income under S. 22 (2), a notice issued under S. 22 (4) is valid so as to justify an assessment under S. 23 (4) in the event of non-compliance of the terms of the notice : 52 Mad. 194, Rel. on. [P 127 C 2]

M. Patanjali Sastri—for Petitioner.

K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer, V. Rajagopala Iyer and T. V. Ramiah—for Assessee.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J. — The points referred to us for decision are, (1) whether a combined notice under Ss. 23 (2) and 22 (4) is a valid notice, and whether on a non-compliance of the terms of such a notice, an assessment under S. 23 (4) could be justified and (2) whether in respect of an assessee who has submitted a return of his income under S. 22 (2), a notice issued under S. 22 (4) is valid so as to justify an assessment under S. 23 (4) in the event of non-compliance of the terms of the notice ?

As regards the first point we think it is covered by authority. That a combined notice may be sent has been held in In re, Harmukhrai Dulichand (1), In the matter of Chandra Sen Jaini (2), Commr. of Income-tax, Burma v. R. M. P. Chettyar Firm (3) and Ram Kissendas Bagri v. Commr. of Income-tax, Bengal (4).

The second question has, we think, been practically answered in Ramaswami Chettiar v. Commr. of Income-tax (5) at p. 202 (of 52 Mad.). If a combined notice can be issued, there is nothing to prevent the Income-tax Officer from sending a notice, as he has done, in Form B, requiring the production of accounts which he wants to be produced and are specified on the back of his notice and also requiring the person to appear personally. Now, in cases where a person appears but does not produce the accounts he is asked to produce, we think the penalty under S. 23 (4) can be applied. It is not necessary that another notice should be sent under S. 23 (2) because under S. 23 (4) any one of the defaults is sufficient to attract the provision that the Income-tax Officer can assess on the best of his information. The argument of Mr. Krishnaswami

(1) A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 587=56 Cal. 39 (S.B.).
(2) A. I. R. 1928 All. 283=50 All. 589.
(3) A. I. R. 1929 Rang. 38=7 Rang. 26 (F.B.).
(4) 2 Ind. Tax. Cas. 324.
(5) A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 60=52 Mad. 194 (F.B.).

Aiyar, as we take it, is, where a return has been submitted and even in cases where the Income-tax Officer acts under S. 22 (4) and wants the production of accounts, he must still issue a notice under S. 23 (2) and act after issuing that notice. That is reading into S. 23 .(4) what is not there. An Income-tax Officer is not bound to make up his mind the moment he receives a return as to whether he accepts it or not: it is open to him before he deals with the question to call for the production of accounts and, as the accounts have to be proved by somebody, to call the assessee to appear in person. If the assessee appears in person but does not produce the accounts there is no reason to say that the penalty under S. 23 (4) is not attracted simply because another notice has not been sent under S. 23 (2) asking him to attend office and produce or cause to be produced any records which he may rely on in support of his return. This would presuppose that the Income-tax Officer must work up his mind at once one way or the other and then act and that he cannot suspend that judgment until he calls for the person assessed to substantiate his return or calls for the accounts to substantiate his evidence.

We think both these questions have to be answered against the petitioner that a combined notice is valid and that an assessee can be assessed under S. 23 (4) in the event of non-compliance with the terms of the notice requiring the production of accounts, which the Officer in law entitled to call upon him to produce. The petitioner will pay the costs of the reference, Rs. 250.

"Common gaming house" means a place of public resort where a number of persons are invited to congregate for the purpose of gaming: A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 729, Rel. on.; 15 Hals. 584, Foll. [P 128 C 2]

Order.—Petitioner 1 has been convicted under Ss. 6 and 7, Towns Nuisance Act, Madras Act 3 of 1889, of keeping a common gaming house and the remaining petitioners under S. 7 of gaming therein. The expression "common gaming house" has not been defined in the Act; and although a definition of the term occurs in S. 3, City Police Act, I think that following two decisions of this Court one unreported and the other reported as Chinniah, In re (1) the meaning to be attached is substantially that contained in 15 Hals. 584, namely a place of public resort where a number of persons are invited to congregate for the purpose of gaming. As regards the evidence of the prosecution witness P. W. 3, upon whose information the Sub-Inspector took action, states with reference to the place in question that he had seen the accused and others also always gaming with cards, betting money and gambling, that accused 1 was collecting Rangu Kasu (which is some kind of levy) for all such plays, that gaming went on there day and night and that whenever he passed by when going to work he saw the accused 1 and others gambling. Evidence to the same effect was given by P. W. 6, and the Sub-Inspector himself (P. W. 1) stated that he had information that accused 1 was keeping a common gaming house and that gambling was going on there. He made a raid with the result that all the accused were found inside the compound gambling with cards and money. As soon as they saw him they attempted to run away. I do not think that any other inference is possible on this evidence than that which has been drawn by the lower Courts, namely that accused 1 was keeping the gaming house and the remaining accused were actually caught when gambling there. In these circumstances I can find no reason to interfere with the conviction. I dismiss the petition.

The suit being a representative suit, it is necessary to see that the persons who come forward are persons who have an interest in the temple and persons who can be safely entrusted with the conduct of the suit. It is also for the benefit of the institution and of the trustees because it affords a safeguard against impecunious improper persons coming as plaintiffs and involving the trust in litigation and expenses and it is also a safeguard that the persons are substantial persons from whom if the suit fails the costs can be recovered and not merely men of straw : 21 Bom. 257 and 38 Mad. 1192, Rel. on. [P 131 C 1]

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit filed under S. 92, Civil P. C., by two plaintiffs who obtained the sanction of the Collector. The Collector's sanction which is filed as Ex. A in the case runs as follows :

" Permission under S. 92, Civil P. C., is granted to the three persons named below to bring a scheme suit in respect of the affairs of the temple of Sree Varadarajaswami Varu of Pedapullivaru village, Repalle Taluk, which are reported to be mismanaged by the present trustees :

(1) Kavata Venkata Subramanyam
(2) Davuluri Pichayya
(3) Kosaraju Reddayya. Time six months.

The Tahsildar, Repalle, will please report the result at the end of the period."

This sanction was obtained without notice to the defendants but this makes no difference as regards the validity of the sanction. Having got the sanction, two out of the three persons namely, Pichayya and Reddayya filed the suit. Though the sanction was only given to bring a scheme suit, the prayers in the plaint were: (1) for a scheme to be framed for the general management of the temple ;

(2) for the removal of defendants 1 to 10 ;

(3) for the appointment of new trustees

(4) for an order vesting the temple properties in the trustees appointed by the Court ;

(5) for the appointment of a receiver and other reliefs.

Obviously, except the first prayer, all the other prayers are outside the scope of the sanction. No relief could have been granted with reference to them : see Srinivasa v. Venkata (1).

Venkatasubramaniam who was the first of the three persons to whom sanction was given did not join as a plaintiff and he was impleaded as defendant 11. It is alleged in para. 12 of the plaint that defendant 11 was added as a pro forma defendant as he is not at present available to join as plaintiff. An application is filed before us to transfer him as an appellant. In the affidavit by Venkatasubramaniam all that is stated is that after the sanction was obtained he was obliged to leave Pedapullivaru on private business and could not co-operate with the other two persons in filing the suit and that as he was not available even on the last day of limitation the suit had to be filed by the other two persons. He says that he allowed the suit to go ex parte as he was willing that it should be prosecuted. The counter affidavit filed denies the fact that Venkatasubramaniam was not in Pedapullivaru on the date the suit was filed and states that the real reason was that the present appellants and Venkatasubramaniam applied for sanction to file scheme suits both in regard to the temple in question and a Siva temple in Peddapullivaru and that Venkatasubramaniam was interested in the Siva temple, that after obtaining the sanction the appellants refused to file a scheme suit in regard to the Siva temple, for the archakas of the temple were their friends and belonged to their faction and that as the present appellants refused to join him in filing the suit with regard to Siva temple, Venkatasubramaniam declined to join the appellants in filing the present suit.

Although the defendants took the objection in the lower Court that the suit was bad because only two of the three persons to whom sanction was given filed the suit and although issues were raised covering that contention, no application was made either by Venkatasubramaniam or by the other two plaintiffs to transpose Venkatasubramaniam as a plaintiff in the lower Court.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. He found on the facts that no misconduct was proved against the defendants (archakas) and he held that the suit as laid was bad as two alone out of the three persons to whom sanction was given could not file the suit. In para. 10 of his judgment the learned Subordinate Judge says :

"The plaintiff's witnesses themselves have admitted that the defendants have been doing the Nityanaivedya, Deeparathana, Tirunakshatralu, and Pakshotsava or Ekadasi Utsavams. They won't admit that the Masotsava and Sukravarlu sevas have been done. But these witnesses of the plaintiffs are either partisans of the plaintiffs or are relations of the plaintiffs and most of them have come forward without summons. There is ample evidence on the side of the defendants, which I believe to be true, that the Sukravara sevalu and the Mavotsvam or the seva on Sravana Nakshatra day in each month also have been done regularly by defendants 1 to 10 in addition to other sevas not referred to in Ex. 1 (original trust deed). I, therefore, find that defendants 1 to 10 have been doing regularly all the services and sevas referred to in Ex. 1."

He finds that the defendants are not liable to be removed even assuming that Ex. 1 creates a trust in favour of the deity.

So far as plaintiff 1 is concerned, it is clear from his evidence that he has instituted this suit because of his enmity with the defendants and although in para. 8 of the plaint various charges of misconduct have been made, his evidence shows that some at least of the main charges are false. He admits that he and all the defendants have not been on speaking terms for the last 16 years, that during this period he never asked the archakas why they were not properly doing the necessary things for the temple, that for the last 16 years the archakas have not been inviting the karnam and the other village officials for the festivals, that defendant 1 complained against him for making excess collections as the assistant karnam of the village and that he lost his branch postmastership on account of complaints made by the defendants. Plaintiff 2 did not venture to give evidence although he alleged several acts of misconduct in the plaint.

We are not satisfied that the non-joinder of Venkatasubramaniam as a plaintiff was due to his absence from the village. If his affidavit is true, he left the village after the sanction was obtained on private business and could not co-operate with the other two persons in filing the suit in the lower Court. He says that he was absent even on the last day when the suit had to be filed because the sanction enured only for six months. If this affidavit is true, beyond obtaining the sanction, he took no part in the preparation or the filing of the plaint. This fact would be material in dealing with the other question as to whether the suit is properly framed. The probabilities point to the reason given ay the archakas in the counter affidavit being a true one. We do not think that sufficient reasons have been made out for transposing defendant 11 as a plaintiff even assuming that such a transposition would cure the original defect in the institution of the suit. We can find little bona fides in the matter. Although the sanction was only for filing a scheme suit, various charges of misconduct were made in the plaint with a view to support the prayer for the removal of the archakas for which no sanction was given and these charges have been found to be false. Even on plaintiff 1's own evidence some of the charges could not be sustained. Enmity with the defendants and not a bona fide desire to safeguard the interests of the temple seems to be the main motive for the suit. However, if the plaintiffs can have a good cause of action, motive would be immaterial but we refer to this only as a ground for not exercising our discretion in the matter.

As regards the maintainability of the suit we think that the suit by some only of the persons to whom sanction was given under S. 92 would not lie. The object of requiring sanction or permission before such suits are instituted under S. 92 is to safeguard not only the rights of the public but also the rights of the institution and the trustees. The suit being a representative suit, it is necessary to see that the persons who come forward are persons who have an interest in the temple and persons who can be safely entrusted with the conduct of the suit. Even though the whole public are technically parties, still the plaintiffs who file the suit have the conduct of the suit and very large powers in the shaping and the conduct of the suit. As a matter of general experience, the public leave it to the plaintiffs to conduct all the proceedings and to take the various steps necessary for its successful prosecution. It is also for the benefit of the institution and of the trustees because it affords a safeguard against impecunious improper persons coming as plaintiffs and involving the trust in litigation and expenses and it is also a safeguard that the persons are substantial persons from whom if the suit fails the costs can be recovered and not merely men of straw. If two out of three or more persons to whom sanction was given can file a suit, it may be that the substantial persons having got the order take no further part leaving the trustees and the institution remediless as regards the recovery of costs. The authority giving the sanction must consider the various aspects before giving the sanction and one important consideration should be as regards the status and position of those who come forward to represent the community. We may in this connexion state that it would be more desirable, before giving the sanction that notice should be given to the institution or the trustees although it is not obligatory.

In Sayad Hussein Miyan v. Collector of Kaira, (2), Jardin and Ranade, JJ., observed .

"Turning to India it is obvious that the requirement of sanction protects trust funds and the trustees also from vexatious suits, as so great an officer as the Advocate General will not sanction suits without enquiry about the motives, the merits, the expense, and such bars as limitation."

In Venkatesh Mallia v. Ramaya Hegade (3), Sankaran Nair and Spencer, JJ., observed :

"such sanctions for instituting suits against trustees have to be construed strictly without enlarging their scope, the object of requiring sanction being to protect managers from vexatious suits * * * * cases may occur in which it might be inadvisable to grant sanction to a particular individual either on account of his character, personal motives, or his solvency, and yet if he joined with some one whose very name would be a guarantee against the suit being improperly conducted, a Court would be justified in granting a joint sanction where it would have refused leave to the single applicant."

Having regard to these considerations we think that where permission or sanction is given by name to more than two persons, that power should be exercised by them all.

So far as the authorities go, they support this view. The question directly arose for consideration in M. B. Narayanan v. V. Perumallacharyalu (4) where Sir John Wallis, C. J., and Seshagiri Ayyar, J., held that where sanction is given under S. 92, Civil P. C., to more than two persons, two of them alone cannot sue. It appears from the facts of that case that four individuals obtained the sanction of the Collector under S. 92, Civil P. C., and that two of them alone brought the suit alleging that the other two have been gained over by the defendants and they refused to join in the suit. The contention was that sanction having been given by the Collector to four persons, two of them alone cannot sue without obtaining fresh sanction. The learned Judges after referring to the terms of S. 92 observed :

"we think the language used shows that the persons authorized to sue are all the persons to whom the consent has been given and not any

(2) [1897] 21 Bom. 257.
(3) [1915] 38 Mad. 1192=26 I. C. 202=27 M. L. J. 241.
(4) [1915] 29 M. L. J. 231=31 I. C. 236.

two of them. On the opposite contention, there might be competition between the various persons authorized as to who should sue. Besides, the provision for giving consent to two or more persons shows that the legislature considered that in some cases it might not be desirable for only two to sue. In this connexion it is worth mentioning that Romilly's Act, upon which this section was founded, enabled any two persons interested to apply, and that here the legislature has empowered any two or more persons with the consent of the Advocate General."

A similar question arose as regards the Religious Endowments Act where also sanction was necessary. In Venkatesha Mallia v. Ramaya Hegade (3) it was held that where sanction to sue is given to two persons under S. 18, Religious Endowments Act, one of them cannot sue alone and that the sanction granted under S. 18 was a condition precedent to the exercise of the right of suit. S. 14 of the Act empowers any person or persons interested in the institution to sue in cases of breaches of trust, etc. S. 18 requires previous leave to be obtained from Court. It appears from the report of the cases that when the suit came on for trial before the Judge who gave the sanction, though no issue was raised, a preliminary objection was taken that the suit was bad for the non-joinder of the other sanction-holder and the Judge upheld the contention.

Reference has been made by the learned Advocate General to cases of suits by trustees; but those cases have no application as in such cases it is the trust which has the right of action and is the plaintiff and it is sufficient if all the trustees are present before the Court as plaintiffs or defendants. We may mention that even in the cases of trusts where the act which gives rise to the cause of action is an act which has to be done by all the trustees together or in consultation with each other by putting an end to a lease, it has been held that one or more trustees cannot by simply joining the other trustees give rise to a valid cause of action where the other trustees have not been consulted before the suit was filed. Similarly cases where it has been held that there is no abatement where one of two plaintiffs who obtain sanction dies or cases where it has been held that you can transpose parties after the suit is filed or allow new persons to come on as additional plaintiffs would have no application to cases like the present where the question is whether the suit has been rightly instituted. It is only after a suit has been rightly instituted, the public become constructive parties to the suit. If the suit is not properly instituted, there is no question of the Court treating the suit as one which is properly instituted and then remedy any defects by the addition of parties.

We are of opinion that the suit was not properly instituted and should be dismissed on that ground.

In the view we take of the law on this question it is not necessary for us to consider the other question as to whether there is a trust in favour of the temple, the archakas being only trustees, or whether there is a gift to the archakas subject only to their performing the services mentioned in Ex. 1 and any surplus income can be appropriated by them for their own use.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs of defendants 1 to 10. In the Memorandum of Objections we allow Rs. 250 as vakil's fees in the lower Court.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 1357 of 1927, Decided on 4th October 1929, against judgment and decree of Sub-Judge, Tanjore, in Small Cause Suit No. 293 of 1926.

 (a) Legal Practitioners Act, S. 28 — Agreement void ab initio as contravening S. 28—Client deriving benefit from pleader's labour—Client is bound to compensate advantage gained under Contract Act, S. 65.

 (b) Legal Practitioners Act, S. 28—S. 28 is not intended to make right of pleader to recover fees conditional upon agreement fulfiling requirements of S. 28.

Section 28 gives the Court a control over agreements between pleaders and their clients with respect to fees and costs and is not intended to make the right of the pleader to recover his fees etc. conditional upon the agreement fulfilling the requirements of the section. A sanction for this view is to be found in S. 29 which enables the Court to order an agreement otherwise in order "to be cancelled if the agreement is not proved to be fair and reasonable, and the costs, fees, charges, and disbursements in respect of the business done to be ascertained in the same manner as if no such agreement had been made." Madhavan Nair, J.—The defendant is the petitioner. This Civil Revision Petition arises out of a suit instituted by plaintiff 1 for the recovery of Rs. 500 as vakil's fees due to him in respect of his appearance as pleader on behalf of the defendant's deceased husband, the Zamindar of Nagaram, in Summary Suit No. 559 of 1923, on the file of the Revenue Divisional Officer, Pattukotta. Plaintiff 1 died subsequent to the filing of the suit and his undivided sons were added as his legal representatives, plaintiffs 2 and 3. The case of the plaintiffs is that plaintiff 1 the deceased vakil Appasami Iyer, appeared in the above suit for 28 hearings and the late Zamindar of Nagaram agreed to pay him at a certain rate per diem, and that, even if the Court thinks that the agreement is not valid, the sum claimed should be paid on the basis of quantum meruit. The defendant pleaded that the contract set up by the plaintiffs is not true or valid, and that, even if plaintiff 1 is entitled to any remuneration, the sum claimed was excessive. The two main issues in the case were: (1) whether there was a specific contract as alleged in the plaint and (2) whether the plaintiffs can claim compensation on the principle of quantum meruit. On these issues the learned Subordinate Judge found in favour of the plaintiffs and gave them a decree for a sum of Rs. 390 according to the rate mentioned in the agreement.

In this Civil Revision Petition the only point urged before us is that, having regard to S. 28, Legal Practitioners Act, the agreement entered into between the petitioner's husband and plaintiff 1 is not valid and binding and therefore plaintiff 1 is not entitled to recover any sum as remuneration for his services. This argument is admittedly opposed to the decision in Subba Pillai v. Ramasami Iyer (1) which will be referred to presently. As the learned Chief Justice before whom the case came up for disposal doubted the correctness of that decision he has referred to a Bench with the following note:

"This case must be referred to a Bench. Sitting as a single Judge here I have no power to refuse to follow Subba Pillai v. Ramasami Iyer (1) although I take the liberty of saying that I think that it amounts to an absolute departure from the plain words of the section of the Statute. But that must be said if it is to be said with effect by a Bench and not by a single Judge.

Section 28, Legal Practitioners Act, is in these terms:

"No agreement entered into by any pleader . . . . with any person retaining or employing him respecting the amount and manner of payment for the whole or any part of any past or future services, fees, charges or disbursements in respect of business done by such pleader . . . . shall be valid unless it is made in writing signed by such person and is within fifteen days from the day on which it is executed, filed in the District Court or in some Court in which some portion of the business in respect of which it has been executed has been or is to be done.

It is argued that the contract in this case, being an oral one, contravenes the provisions of this section and is void and so the decree of the lower Court should be set aside. In support of this argument reliance is placed on the decision in Kamakshya Narayan Singh v. Kalyan Singh (2) and Sarat Chander v. Chandra Kanta (3), both of which support the petitioner's contention: but the trend of the decisions of this Court is to the effect that, even if the agreement is opposed to the provisions of S. 28, Legal Practitioners Act and is invalid the pleader is still entitled to recover remuneration for his services; either in full as under the agreement or a reasonable portion thereof. The leading decision on the question is the one in Subba Pillai v. Ramasami Iyer (1), which refers to Rama v. Kunji (4) and Krishnaswami v. Kesava (5). two earlier decisions of this Court. In Rama v. Kunji (4), remuneration for services was decreed to a pleader in the absence of an agreement under S. 70, Contract Act. In Krishnaswami v. Kesava (5), the plaintiff based his claim for fee on a promissory note which was not filed in Court in that suit and it was held that though the promissory note was invalid under S. 28, Legal Practitioners Act, as it was not filed in any Court within fifteen days of its execution as required by that section, yet the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount to which he was found to be entitled for his labour. A similar view was taken in Anantayya v. Padmayya (6). In Sundararajachariar v. Pattanathuswami Thevar (7), and Narasimhachariar v. Sinnavan (8), this Court held that S. 28 of the Act is no bar to a decree being passed for such reasonable remuneration as may be found due on the principle of quantum meruit. The question has been discussed at some length with reference to principle in Subba Pillai v. Ramasami Iyer (1), which was also a case where a claim for fees was made by a pleader based upon a promissory note which had not been filed in Court as required by S. 28, Legal Practitioners Act and was in consequence invalid. It was held in that case that though the contract was void, the pleader was still entitled to recover the outfees advanced by him. In holding so the learned Judges stated that the Legal Practitioners Act does not enact that no claim by a pleader for professional services rendered or for recovery of out-fees advanced shall be sustainable unless an agreement made in writing for the same has been entered into with the client and filed in Court, but only that an agreement, if any, in respect thereto, shall be void unless the same has been reduced to writing and filed in Court. This decision has been followed in Natesa Mooppan v. Ramchandra Iyer (9). The learned Judges in Subba Pillai v. Ramasami Iyer (1) seem to base their decision on the policy of Ss. 28, 29 and 30, Legal Practitioners Act, corresponding to Ss. 4, 9 and 6 English Attorney and Solicitors Act, 33 and 34, Vich. Ch. 28. The policy underlying those sections and their conclusion based upon that policy is thus stated by the learned Judges:

"The policy of Ss. 28, 29 and 30, Legal Practitioners Act, corresponding to Ss. 4, 9 and 6, English Attorney and Solicitors Act, 33 and 34, Vic. Ch. 28 is that whenever an agreement is entered into between a pleader and his client respecting his remuneration or payment for outfees, such agreement should be reduced to writing and not only so but also filed in Court and that when a suit is brought upon such agreement, the Court should have the power if, in its opinion, the agreement is not fair and reasonable to reduce the amount payable thereunder or order it to be cancelled, and in the latter case to award such amount only as would have been decreed in the absence of any agreement between the pleader and his client. S. 30, however, provides that a pleader shall not be entitled to claim anything beyond the terms of such agreement, except in respect of services, fees, charges, disbursements, expressly excepted from the agreement. It seems therefore clear that though an agreement entered into will be invalid unless reduced to writing and filed in Court, yet the pleader is not disentitled in absence of any agreement, to claim reasonable remuneration in respect of professional services or the repayment of out-fees advanced by him."

It is argued that this view amounts to an absolute departure from the plain words of S. 28 of the Statute and that as pointed out by their Lordships, then, the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief. I am not inclined to accept this contention, in all its entirety but I agree with it to this extent, that I am prepared to say, with due respect to the learned Judges, that the reasoning on which their conclusion is based does not appear to me to be sound. Having held that the suit contract was void, i. e., unenforceable owing to the provisions of S. 28 of the Act, the learned Judges held that the pleader was entitled to recover the amount mentioned in the agreement, apparently acting on the policy underlying Ss. 28 to 30 of the Act, which they thought justified them in dealing with the case as if it was one in which there was "an absence of an agreement," i. e., in which no agreement was pleaded by the parties. It is open to question whether the policy underlying Ss. 28 to 30 of the Act is intended to enable the Court to deal with the case in this manner, when the agreement which is the basis of the suit is void under S. 28. These sections refer specifically to "such agreements" i. e., agreements valid under S. 28 and provide that in enforcing such agreements Courts may modify or cancel them and that such agreements shall exclude further claims of the pleader etc. I find it difficult to extract from these sections any policy of the legislature which would justify the Court ignoring the provisions of S. 28 when the plaintiff relies on an "agreement" as the basis of his claim. Thus far, I agree with the contentions of the appellant; but having regard to the uniform course of decisions in this Court, I think it must be held that it is too late to give effect to the arguments now urged and to decline to give the plaintiffs any relief in respect of plaintiff 1's claim especially so, as I am prepared to hold that, though the contract is void, the respondent as in Subba Pillai v. Ramasami Iyer (1) is entitled to succeed having regard to the provisions of S. 65, Contract Act, which deals with the obligation of a person to restore any advantage received by him under an agreement which is "discovered to be void" or to make compensation for it. The section runs as follows:

"if an oral agreement or a written agreement not filed in Court, being invalid under S. 28, Legal Practititioners Act, and therefore unenforceable, is void:" Vide S. 2, Cl. (g), Contract Act.

"When an agreement is discovered to be void . . . . any person who had received any advantage under such agreement or contract is bound to restore it, or to make compensation for it, to the person from whom he received it."

The expresssion "discovered to be void" in this section has caused some difficulty in its application. In Sibkisor Ghose v. Manik Chandra (10), Mukerjee, J. pointed out that

"an agreement which is opposed to S. 28, Legal Practitioners Act, being ab initio void cannot be said to be an agreement discovered to be void within the meaning of S. 65.',

Since then it has been held by the Privy Council that an agreement "discovered to be void" would include an agreement ab initio void. In Harnath Kunwar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (11) their Lordships held that an agreement "discovered to be void" within the meaning of this section:

"is one discovered to be not enforceable by law, and, on the language of the section would include an agreement that was void in that sense from its inception as distinct from a contract that becomes void.

This decision has been approved by the Privy Council in Ananda Mohan Roy v. Gour Mohan Mullick (12) in which their Lordships held that the time at which an agreement is dis covered to be void within the meaning of S. 65, Contract Act, is in the absence of special circumstances the date of the agreement. In the case before us, the agreement in question was manifestly void from its inception as it contravened the provisions of S. 28, Legal Practitioners Act, and as such an agreement can be described to be one "discovered to be void" within the meaning of S. 65, Contract Act as explained by the Privy Council. The defendant's husband was bound to make compensation to plaintiff 1 for the advantage which he has received under the contract. It has not been argued before us that the sum awarded to the respondents by the lower Court is excessive or disproportionate to the services rendered by plaintiff 1. The decree awarding the plaintiff Rs. 390 can be thus justified under S. 65, Contract Act.

I would uphold the decision of the lower Court and dismiss this Civil Revision Petition with costs.

Cornish, J.—I agree. The agreement made between the pleader and his client as to the pleader's remuneration was a verbal agreement, and, therefore, a compliance with the requirements of S. 28, Legal Practitioners Act was impossible. That, however, according to the construction put upon the section by the rulings of this Court: see Rama v. Kunji (4), Krishnaswami v. Kesava (5), Anantayya v. Padmayya (6) and Subba Pillai v. Ramasami Iyer (1) does not preclude the pleader from recovering the amount which he could properly claim for work done and disbursements made by him on behalf of the client in pursuance of the agreement. The above mentioned decisions make no distinction between a verbal agreement, which is incapable of being filed in accordance with the requirements of S. 28 and an agreement in writing which is invalid because it has not been filed. The view taken by this Court is that the purpose of S. 28 is to give the Court a control over agreements between pleaders and their clients with respect to fees and costs and is not intended to make the right of the pleader to recover his fees etc., conditional upon the agreement fulfilling the requirements of the section. A sanction for this view is to be found in S. 29 which enables the Court to order an agreement, otherwise in order "to be cancelled if the agreement is not proved to be fair and reasonable, and the costs, fees, charges, and disbursements in respect of the business done to be ascertained in the same manner as if no such agreement had been made."

The Calcutta, Allahabad and Patna High Courts have placed a stricter interpretation upon S. 28, holding that the object of the section would be defeated by allowing exceptions to its requirements. But even assuming the stricter interpretation to be preferable it is certainly too late now to resist the current of authority of this Court.

(10) [1915] 21 C. L. J. 618=29 I. C. 453.
(11) A. I. R. 1922 P. C. 403=45 All. 179=26 C. C. 223=50 I. A. 69 (P. C.).
(12) A. I. R. 1923 P. C. 189=50 Cal. 929=50 I. A. 239 (P.C.).

There is no doubt that the relations of the parties are contractual notwithstanding that the agreement is invalid by virtue of S. 28. In the cases where the question has arisen, although it has been recognized that the pleader is entitled to recover, the precise footing upon which he can do so has been left in some uncertainty. In Rama v. Kunji (4) it seems to have been considered by the Court that the suit by the pleader being for work and labour done, might lie under S. 70, Contract Act. The question was further considered in Sibkisor Ghose v. Manik Chandra (10) and it was there pointed out that S. 70 could not apply to a claim based on contract. The learned Judges in that case expressed the further opinion that S. 65, Contract Act, would be unavailing in aid of a claim arising out of an agreement void by S. 28, Legal Practitioners Act, for the reason that the agreement being void ab initio could not be aptly described as an agreement which has been discovered to be, or has become void. All doubt upon this point has, however, been resolved by the ruling of the Judicial Committee in Karnath Kunawar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (11) where their Lordships laid it down that an agreement discovered to be void is one discovered to be not enforceable by law and on the language of S. 65 would include an agreement that was void in that sense from its inception as distinct from a contract that became void. And in Ananda Mohan Roy v. Gour Mohan Mullick (12) their Lordships emphasise this principle that an agreement is discovered to be void from the date of the agreement. The claim of the plaintiff respondent before us was, clearly maintainable.

Hindu Law—Debts—Trade — Some members of joint family carrying on with strangers partnership business of speculative nature for benefit of family—Money borrowed to carry on such business—Suit on promissory note—Minors of family held not bound by promissory note.

In all joint-families if a person who is not the father has the power of management the criterion by which the binding nature of debts should be decided is whether they were borrowed for the benefit of the family and would bind the minors. [P 138 C 2]

A, B and C, the deceased father of suing minors, were undivided brothers and formed members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law. A and the son of B who was the second executant of the promissory note in suit were the managing members. A and his deceased brother D had been carrying on a speculative trade for which the suit money was borrowed on behalf and for the benefit of the joit family including the minors along with their partners.

B.C. Seshachala Iyer—for Appellants.

K. S. Krishnaswamy Iyengar — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit filed by the plaintiff bank and the defendants for the recovery of Rs. 14,523-12-0 alleged to be due on a promissory note executed by defendants 1, 6 and 7 and one Venkatesa Chetti (deceased) son of defendant 2 for Rs. 10,000 payable with interest at Rs. 1-6-0 per cent per mensem. It is alleged that the defendants paid interest amounting to Rs. 262-8-0 and have not paid the balance. The plaintiff's case is that defendants 1 and 2 and one Ramakrishna Chetty, the deceased father of defendants 4 and 5 were undivided brothers and formed members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law, of which defendant 1 and the son of defendant 2 who was the second executant of the suit promissory note were the managing members and that defendant 1 and his deceased brother Venkatesa Chetti, had been carrying on a trade for which the suit money was borrowed on behalf and for the benefit of the joint family including defendants 2 to 5 along with their partners, and a decree is prayed for the amount on the ground that it has not been paid.

The appellants in this case are only defendants 4 and 5. They are minors. Their father died several years ago. The question is whether the promissory note executed by defendants 1, 6 and 7 and the son of defendant 2 is binding on the minors. The case for the minors is that the debt is not binding on them as defendant 1 and the deceased Venkatesa Chetti were not managing members of the family of defendants 1 to 5 but it was defendant 2 who was managing the family affairs, defendant 1 and Venkatesa Chetti have been carrying on the plaint-mentioned trade on their own account in partnership with strangers to the family, that the said trade was not an ancestral or family trade but a speculative one and that no ground is made out for charging these defendants with the liability. It is also stated that the interest is excessive and usurious.

The Subordinate Judge held that the family was undivided and the note was binding on the minors. He has given his reaaons in para. 9 of his judgment. It seems to us that he has not really met the various contentions urged and the evidence, oral and documentary.

The joint family referred to in the plaint consisted of Chinnasami Chetti, defendant 2 herein who was the eldest member, Narayanaswami Chetty, defendant 1 herein, and the last brother Ramakrishna Chetti (father of the appellants) who died some years ago. The family, according to the evidence, originally owned lands and then began to carry on a business in provisions. The accounts of the business have been filed as Ex. C. They show that the provisions business was carried on on a small scale, Ramakrishna Chetti, the father of the appellants, being interested in the business. That business according to the evidence was closed in 1912, and there was a settlement of accounts which is signed among others by Ramakrishna Chetti. Ramakrishna Chetti according to one witness died about two years after the close of the business, that is, about 1914 and one or two witnesses put it a little later 1915 or 1916. After the death of Ramakrishna Chetti we find that in 1917 two junior members of the family, which was still then trading in cloths and provisions on a small scale in Polur and an adjacent village, began to export groundnuts to England. The business, according to the plaintiff's own witness, P. W. 5 was carried on on a very large scale and they were sending goods to Marseilles and other places to the extent of seven or eight lakhs and the business was conducted entirely by borrowing money from the plaintiff bank. The evidence also is that the market was unsteady at the time. He says that the price of groundnuts was fluctuating every day and the business ended in a heavy loss.

It is clear from the evidence that whereas the family was before and during the lifetime of the father of the appellants carrying on a small provision business aud cloth busines in the village of Polur and its hamlets, in 1917, defendant 1 and his deceased brother's son Venkatesa Chetti who were the junior members of the family in partnership with others began this speculative business in groundnuts. It is not suggested that any portion of the family property was used for this business. According to the evidence it was carried on entirely out of borrowed capital. The promissory note was not executed by defendant 2 who was the eldest member but by defendants 1, 6 and 7 and by the son of defendant 2. The note does not purport to bind the minors nor does it state the purpose for which the loan was taken. On these facts the question is whether the minor appellants-defendants 4 and 5 are liable for the loss incurred in such business. In this case we are not concerned with the pious obligation of the son to pay off his father's debts in which case the question as to whether the trade was old or now does not arise: Atchuttam v. Ratnaji (1), Rajagopala Pillai v. Veeraperumal Pillai (2) and Venkatasmami

(1) A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 323=49 Mad. 211.
(2) A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 792.

Naicker v. Palaniswami Chettiar (3) are such cases, namely, cases of liabilty of the son, and the Court held that this liability was irrespective of the nature of the business started by the father. The present case we think is governed by the ruling of the Privy Council in Sanyasi Charan Mandal v. Krishnadhan Banerji (4) and by the decisions in Sanyasi Charan Mandal v. Asutosh Ghose (5), Tammi Reddi v. Gangi Reddi (6), Sadasiva Mudaliar v. Hajee Fakeer Mahomed (7) and D. Mclaren Morrison v. S. Verschoge (8). We do not think it makes much difference in considering the liability of a minor in respect of a new trade carried on not by his father but by another member of the family whether the family is governed by the Dayabhaga or the Mitakshara Law, as the principles which govern the decision in this case are not based on any difference between the Dayabhaga and the Mitakshara Law as to the power of a manager of a joint family where coparceners other than his own sons are concerned.

Reference has been made by the learned advocate for the respondents to Lakshmiah v. Official Assignee, Madras (9), and it is argued that the appellants would be liable for the reason that the trade was carried on by the adult members of the family and consequently that it should be presumed that it was a trade carried on for the benefit of the family. Some of the important elements which the learned Judge noted are lacking in the present case. In the Lakshmiah v. Official Assignee, Madras (9) case the family property was being used without any objection for the trade and all the members acquiesced in it, and it was held that under those circumstances the minors were liable. The learned Judges take care to state that each case must depend on its own facts. We think that case was more a decision on the particular facts than a decision which laid down any general rule, much less any general rule that would override the principles which govern the ratio decidendi of the cases which we have already cited. The only observation about that case I wish to make is that the fact that the family was a Dayabhaga family for the purpose of this question does not seem to make much difference. In all joint families if a person who is not the father has the power of management the criterion by which the binding nature of such debts should be decided is whether they were borrowed for the benefit of the family and would bind the minors. It cannot be said in the present case that carrying on of an entirely new speculative business with borrowed capital on a scale which was totally incommensurate with any of the family estates, for we find that the family was carrying on only a small business before, by the other members is an act which would bind the minors. One other feature in this case is that the eldest member is not shown to have executed the promissory note or taken any part in the groundnut business. It is argued that the adult members executed two mortgage deeds F Exs. and F-1 and that it should be presumed that all of them carried on this speculative business in gound-nuts. But Exs. F and F-1 were executed in 1920 when the business practically ended in loss and so they would not afford evidence as to the state of the dealings anterior. We are of opinion that this business which was started by two members of the family in partnership with strangers was not a business which was of such a nature as would bind the minor appellants. We allow the appeal and dismiss the suit against defendants 4 and 5 and their share in the family property with costs in this and the lower Court.

VENKATASUBBA RAO AND MADHAVAN NAIR, JJ.

Gouriambal Achi—Appellant.

v.

P. Al. V. V. R. Ramanathan Chettiar—Respondent.

Appeal No. 346 of 1927, Decided on 1st October 1929, against order of Dist. Court, West Tanjore, D/- 29th July 1927.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 34, R. 14—Mortgagee obtaining simple money decree—He cannot straightway ask to sell property in execution of money decree.

In execution of a money decree, the judgment-debtor's property cannot be sold without its being first attached. Even the contention of mortgagee that the mortgage in his favour can take effect as against the property acquired by the mortgagor subsequent to the money decree, does not enable the mortgagee to bring the property straightway to sale, when the decree he seeks to execute is an ordinary money decree. [P 140 C 1]

(b) Civil P, C., S. 73, Provisos (a) and (b)—Applicability.

Where the decree-holder and the mortgagee happen to be the same person and, the decree debt and the mortgage debt are not two distinct and different debts, S. 73. Provisos (a) and (b) are not applicable. [P 140 C 2, P 141 C 1]

 (c) Civil P. C., O. 34, R. 14—Satisfaction of simple money decree by attachment and sale--O. 34, R. 14, is no bar.

Where in a suit to enforce a mortgage it is decided that there is no mortgage at all and a simple money decree is passed in favour of the mortgagee, the decree, not being one for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage, might be satisfied in execution by attachment and sale, and O. 34, R. 14 is no bar. [P 141 C 2]

S. Panchapagesa Sastri and P. J. Kuppanna Rao—for Appellant.

N. S. Srinivasa Iyer—for Respondent.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—This case raises a point of some novelty. The respondent filed a suit to enforce a mortgage. He impleaded as defendants Gowriambal Achi, the present appellant, her son and grandson. I extract the following passage from the judgment in that suit in April 1924:

"It appears to me that as a suit to enforce a mortgage the suit must fail. Gowriambal Achi has no title to the property. The properties were left by will absolutely to Gowriambal's mother. It was recited that on the latter's death Gowriambal was to succeed to any of the properties which her mother had not alienated. Gowriambal's mother is still alive, and Gowriambal may never succeed to any of this property. I do not see how Gowriambal by her deed can create any charge on the property."

On this reasoning, Mr. Stodart, the District Judge, passed the following decree:

"I give the plaintiff a decree for the sum claimed Rs. 6,500, with simple interest at the contract rate, namely 12 per cent of Rs. 6,166, ... This is a simple money decree against defendant 1, Gowriambal alone. The suit as against defendants 2 and 3 is wholly dismissed." . .

We are not now called on to construe the will referred to in the passage above nor is it a part of the record before us. Nor are we at present concerned with the question whether the judgment is right or not; for the plaintiff submitted to it and it became final between the parties.

Subsequent to the passing of the decree, Gowriambal Achi's mother died and the plaintiff assumed (whether rightly or wrongly, it is needless to enquire) that she became absolutely entitled to the properties covered by the mortgage. In that view, he applied to execute the money decree passed in his favour by attachment and sale of those properties. The defendant (Gowriambal Achi) opposed the plaintiff's application, urging that it contravened the provisions of O. 34, R. 14, Civil P. C., and that the plaintiff's remedy was by way of a regular suit. This objection was overruled and the plaintiff was allowed to execute his decree. The order dated 10th November 1926, then made on Gowriambal Achi's petition requesting that the plaintiff's application might be rejected, may be reproduced:

"The decree is very clear. It was held that the mortgage was not enforceable, as the mortgagor, i. e., the judgment-debtor had no right to the property mortgaged. Only a simple money decree was passed. In execution of this simple money decree, the properties which were originally mortgaged and to which the judgment-debtor became entitled by inheritance subsequently are attached and are brought to sale. O, 34, R. 14, has no application. There is no mortgage subsisting and the claim did not arise out of the mortgage. Decree-holder need not file a fresh suit. Petition is dismissed with costs."

The plaintiff now conceiving that a higher right accrued to him and that he had been mistaken in applying for attachment, presented a petition to the Court stating that his execution petition was not pressed. Thereupon, the Judge recording that the petition was not pressed, made an order dismissing it. This happened on 15th January 1927.

The next step taken by the plaintiff is the one with which we are concerned. He presented execution petition No. 11 of 1927, on which the order under appeal was made. In Col. 7 of that petition, the plaintiff gives the reason for his abandoning his previous execution application:

"But the said execution petition did not correctly set out the charge which this decree-holder had obtained over the immovable properties mentioned hereunder after the death of judgment-debtor's (defendaut 1's) mother by virtue of S. 43, T. P. Act. So the petition was not continued."

He then prays in Col. 10 that the amount due to him under the money decree may " be realised by the sale of the judgment-debtor's immovable property." He adds a further prayer, which in truth is the same as the first, in different words:

" that the properties hereunder mentioned may be sold in satisfaction of the charge which the decree-holder has obtained over the properties since the judgment debtor became absolutely entitled."

Now, the basis of this application is the right which under S. 43, T. P. Act, the plaintiff conceived he obtained, by reason of the power to perform the contract, subsequently acquired by Gowriambal Achi. The learned Judge held that the execution could be granted in the form prayed for and made an order accordingly. It is this order that is attacked in this appeal.

The plaintiff's application was clearly misconceived. In execution of a money decree, the judgment-debtor's property cannot be sold without its being first attached. No doubt, the plaintiff's contention is that the mortgage in his favour can take effect as against the property acquired by the defendant subsequent to the decree. But this does not enable him to bring the property straightway to sale, when the decree he seeks to execute is an ordinary money decree. The order of the lower Court cannot, therefore, be sustained; nor, as I understand Mr. Sitarama Rao, the respondent's counsel, does he seriously contend that it is right.

He is, therefore, driven to present his case thus: He says in effect, treat my application as one for attachment but coupled with a prayer under S. 73 (1) (b), Civil P. C., I should be disposed to comply with this request if his application was legally competent. The reason for the present course he adopts is this. If the Court makes a bare order of attachment, the respondent thinks, in the circumstances it confers no benefit on him; and it is in that view he abandoned his previous execution application. The fact is, there are other creditors of the defendant who have either attached or threatened to attach these properties. That being so, the plaintiff's right, in the event of a sale taking place, is merely to share the proceeds rateably. The plaintiff, therefore, in order to obviate this result, has had to invoke the aid of S. 73 (1) (b), Civil P. C.

Clause 1, S. 73, lays down the conditions for rateable distribution. Then follow two provisos:

(a) Where any property is sold subject to a mortgage or charge, the mortgagee or incumbrancer shall not be entitled to share in any surplus arising from such sale;

(b) Where any property liable to be sold in execution of a decree, is subject to mortgage or charge, the Court may, with the consent of the mortgagee or incumbrancer, order that the property be sold free from the mortgage or charge, giving to the mortgagee or incumbrancer the same interest in the proceeds of the sale as he had in the property sold."

The plaintiff puts his case thus. The property he seeks to attach has become under S. 43, T. P. Act, subject to his mortgage. He agrees to its being sold free of that mortgage. In that event, his mortgage right becomes transferred to the sale proceeds which he can then draw out from Court. The argument is ingenious, but totally unsound. In my opinion, to a case like the present, these provisions do not apply at all.

It is first contended by Mr. Panchapagesa Sastri for Gowri Achi that these rules have not been enacted as independent or substantive provisions but only as provisos and unless, therefore, the case is one of rateable distribution under the main part of the section, these rules do not apply at all; in other words, when there are no rival decree-holders, a case cannot arise which calls into play the rules enacted in the provisos. I doubt if this contention is correct, though I express no decisive opinion on the point. Supposing there is a single decree-holder who attaches a property, why should a person holding a mortgage upon it not be entitled to the benefit of this proviso? By enacting 'the rule in the form of a proviso, is it intended to deprive such a person of this right? But, as I have said, I do not propose to pursue this enquiry.

The case now arises, however, in a different form. The provisos, of course, apply when there are several decree-holders; this is not disputed. It may be granted that they also apply when there is a single decree-holder and another person who is a mortgagee. I am also prepared to assume that 'they are applicable when the decree-holder and the mortgagee happen to be the same person, provided the decree debt and the mortgage debt are two distinct and different debts. But in this case whether you refer the debt to the decree or to the mortgage, it is the self same debt. To such a case, the rules in question cannot be reasonably applied. Can the application by the plaintiff be termed in any sense an execution application at all? To execute a decree is to carry that decree into effect for obtaining satisfaction of it. In this case, the plaintiff, under the guise of executing his decree, gets his mortgage satisfied. This is just a pretence of execution, for if along with the mortgage the decree also gets satisfied, the result is but fortuitous and incidental. A case of this kind is of rare occurrence. The case that most nearly resembles this, is that which comes within the mischief against which O. 34, R. 14 is directed. A mortgages his property to B to secure repayment of a sum of money. B sues A to recover that sum and obtains a personal decree against A. B then applies for attachment and sale of A's interest in the mortgaged property in execution of the money decree and the sale must be refused under this rule.

The above mentioned case is of the usual kind ; but owing to the peculiar facts before us, as I shall show presently, that rule does not here operate as a bar and the sale can be allowed. But when the two debts are identical, in other words, when there is a single debt, does it make sense to say, that the decree-holder can sell the property either subject to his mortgage or free of it ? Let us suppose that he sells the property subject to his mortgage and that it fetches, say a Rs. 1,000 at the sale. Can he touch a rupee of this money ? Obviously not, for the decree debt springs from the mortgage and the sale being admittedly subject to it, he has no right to proceed against any part of the money. Let us next suppose that he sells the property free of his mortgage and that it realises a sum which exceeds the mortgage amount. Has he any right to any part of the excess sum ? The answer is again in the negative. In short, the decree-holder diverts the execution proceedings from their true object and turns them to a wrong end. This, the Courts will not permit, and I am therefore clearly of the opinion that the second proviso of S. 73 does not apply.

The question then remains : can the plaintiff merely attach the property and bring it to sale ? As I have already pointed out, he made a previous application to that effect and it was granted. That is a decision between the parties and is binding upon them. Apart from that, O. 34, R. 14, does not stand in the plaintiff's way. In the suit, it has been decided that there is no mortgage at all and it therefore follows that the decree is not :

"for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage."

This decision, right or wrong, binds the parties and for the present purpose it must be conclusively taken that the claim is not one that arises under the mortgage. This point is conceded by Mr. Panchapagesa Sastri, and requires no further discussion. But the plaintiff, as I have already shown, is not satisfied with a bare order that he can attach and sell the property. But if he is so advised, he may apply to the lower Court for such an order and as the application cannot be opposed (as Mr. Panchapagesa Sastri concedes), that Court may grant it and direct attachment and sale in the usual course.

In the result. neither of the applications of the plaintiff (the one made to the lower Court or the one made to us), is competent and the appeal is allowed, but, in the circumstances, we make no order as to costs.

Before closing, I may add that in the view I have taken it is unnecessary to discuss whether S. 43, T. P. Act, applies to the facts or not. That is a point which must be left to be considered in any regular suit which the plaintiff may choose to file.

(a) Contract Act, S. 257—Good faith and utmost bona fides is required in dealing.

between working and sleeping partners when matters relating to accounts are concerned.

Partners who do not take an active part in the partnership are entitled to rely on the accounts produced by the working partners who are in charge of the same. Good faith is required in dealings between the partners, and when, as a result of the accounts produced by the working partners they induce the other partners to execute in their favour a promissory note in respect of the amounts so found to be due to the working partners according to the accounts produced by them, it is necessary for them to exercise the utmost bona fides in such matters. [P 143 C 2]

(b) Partnership—Fraud vitiates any agreement entered into on dissolution of partnership—Working partner producing false accounts and inducing sleeping partners to deliver promissory notes through fraud—Promissory note is vitiated by such fraud.

An agreement entered into on a dissolution will be set aside if it can be shown to have been based upon error or to have been tainted by fraud, whether in the shape of positive misrepresentation or of concealment of the truth. [P 144 C 2]

In a suit upon a promissory note it was found that the working partners of a firm prepared and produced accounts before the sleeping partners on the faith of which the latter took upon themselves the partnership business and sent off the working partners promising to pay them under a promissory note a sum of money after giving the former some cash and some logs of timber.

Held: that having regard to the fraud practised upon the sleeping partners as shown by the numerous instances of falsification of accounts by the working partners, the settlement was not binding upon the managing partners and that the promissory note was accordingly vitiated: 5 M.I.A. 372 (P.C.) and Law v. Law, (1905) 1 Ch. 140, Ref. [P 145 C 1]

Judgment.—The plaintiff as the endorsee of a promissory note, Ex.-C executed by defendants 1, 2 and 3 in favour of defendants 4 and 5 instituted the original suit against all the defendants to recover the amount due on the promissory note. The plea of defendants 1, 2 and 3 was that there was no consideration for the promissory note, that it was executed on account of fraud practised upon them by defendants 4 and 5 and that plaintiff was not a holder in due course as he knew the defect of the title of defendants 4 and 5 to the promissory note. Defendant 4 did not appear in the suit and defendant 5 supported the plaintiff. The trial Court came to the conclusion that there was no fraud and that the amount must be taken to have been due. It gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff against all the defendants for the amount due on the promissory note. Defendants 1, 2 and 3 preferred an appeal to the lower appellate Court. The learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the promissory note was executed by defendants 1, 2 and 3 as the result of fraud practised by defendants 4 and 5 and also that the plaintiff had knowledge of the defect of title of defendants 4 and 5 when he got endorsement of the note from them in his favour. On these findings he reversed the decision of the first Court and dismissed the suit against defendants 1 to 3. Hence this second appeal has been filed by the plaintiff against defendants 1, 2 and 3 only. We are not here concerned with the decree granted by the first Court against defendants 4 and 5 which has become final.

On behalf of the appellant the learned advocate raised two points before me. In order to appreciate the first contention raised it is necessary to state a few facts. There was a partnership in timber carried on by these defendants. Defendants 4 and 5 would seem to be working partners and defendant 1, 2 and 3 really the monied partners who provided the capital. There were misunderstandings between the partners with the result that they were anxious to have the partnership dissolved and the accounts taken. Two attempts were made for settlement, the first at a place called Chokli. Though no accounts were produced at the Chokli settlement it would appear that the parties were persuaded through the intervention of some arbitrator, to fix a particular amount as the amount due to some of the partners, and that after accepting the said settlement a release deed was executed by them in favour of the others. Immediately afterwards the said settlement was set aside by consent and the release deed was treated as cancelled. There were further negotiations and at Kasargod there was another settlement. Defendant 5 was the working partner in charge of the actual partnership transactions. He produced certain account books at the settlement at Kasargod and he also produced two balance sheets, Exs.-B and I. According to these it appeared that defendant 4 was found entitled to a sum of Rs. 341-8-0 and defendant 5 to a sum of Rs. 4,885-5-6. The amount due to defendant 4 namely, Rs. 341-8-0 was treated as not really due, having regard to the state of affairs of the partnership and in respect of the amount due to defendant 5 some amount was reduced from the Rs. 4,885-5-6, appearing in the books as due to him and from the amount arrived at a sum of Rs. 1,385-0-0 was deducted on account of defendant 4 and 5's share of the loss. Rs. 215-1-0 was paid in cash and 22 logs of timber worth Rs. 570-15-0 were also given. It is in respect of the balance of Rs. 2,714-0-0 which was found to be due to defendants 4 and 5 that this promissory note, Ex.-C was executed on 30th October 1920. The finding of the lower appellate Court was that defendant 5 who was in charge of the business had tampered with the accounts and the balance sheets, Exs.-B and I, which he produced before defendants 1, 2 and 3 and on the basis of which the parties settled accounts were all tainted by fraud.

The lower appellate Court has discussed this question of the fraud practised on defendants 1, 2 and 3 at the time of the settlement. A commissioner was appointed to go into the interpolations and alterations made in the accounts by the partners in charge of the business. It is unnecessary for me to go into the details of the mistakes and frauds which the lower appellate Court finds proved. To take one instance, in para. 15 of the lower appellate Court's judgment, in considering item 166 of the commissioner's report, it is observed that the entry as it stood at first related to a debit of Rs. 15 on 15th November 1919 in the firm's books. The figures were subsequently changed into Rs. 715. The sum is said to have been sent to one Kamevadi .Chappa for meeting expenses in connexion with the partnership. The alteration of the figures "15" into "715" clearly benefits the working partners to the extent of Rs. 700. This alteration of the figure "15" into "715" in respect of a debit on 15th November 1919 is carried out both in the ledger and also in the fair day book. But unfortunatly for defendants 4 and 5, the rough daybook contains only the original entry "15", so that the lower appellate Court had before it a case where accounts had been tampered with by partners who kept the accounts and who produced those accounts as the accounts properly representing the affairs of the partnership at the settlement made by them with the other partners, defendants 1, 2 and 3. No doubt certain explanations were offered with reference to these entries. The lower appellate Court in para. 15 observed that it was unable to accept the explanation. My attention was drawn by the learned advocate for the respondent to other similar entries also where figures "100" was changed into "300" and various similar changes were made; for example, Rs. 20 changed into Rs. 320 and 7 annas 7 pies changed into Rs. 100-7-9. Sitting in second appeal it is not necessary for me to multiply instances.

What has been found by the lower appellate Court therefore comes to this. Defendants 4 and 5 working partners in charge of the accounts represented to the other three capitalists partners, defendants 1, 2 and 3 that the accounts produced by defendants 4 and 5 before defendants 1, 2 and 3 represented the real state of the transaction of the partnership. Further they produced for the purpose of the settlement two abstract balance sheets, Exs. B and I which represented the result of the accounts, according to the altered state of the accounts. Now it goes without saying that partners who do not take an active part in the partnership are entitled to rely on the accounts produced by the working partners who were in charge of the same. Good faith is required in dealings between the partners, and when, as a result of the accounts produced by these working partners they induced the other partners to execute in their favour a promissory note in respect of the amounts so found to be due to these working partners according to the accounts produced by them, it is all the more necessary for them to exercise the utmost bona fides in such matters. The plea of defendants 1, 2 and 3 in the present case that the promissory note was executed by them owing to fraud practised by defendants 4 and 5 has been amply proved, and the materials on record warrant the finding of the lower appellate Court in their favour. It was, however, argued by the learned advocate for the appellant that the present case comes within the principle enunciated by the Privy Council in the case reported in M. Kellor v. Wallace (1). At p. 395 the principle is set out in the judgment delivered by the Right Hon'ble Pemberton Leigh. No doubt in cases where parties elect to proceed not on the basis of accounts but in spite of the same, if, for example, they say expressly or by necessary implication that whatever might be the state of accounts, the parties do not want to take the actual accounts but want to avoid the labour and trouble of going through the accounts, but voluntarily agree to have a particular amount fixed (really it is, in such cases, by way of compromise of their claims), then it is not open to one of them subsequently to say that if the accounts as subsequently gone into prove that the amount due by one party is much less than the amount which the parties mutually agreed that they are not bound by the agreement. That is it is no answer to say that the parties were not wiser in the first instance. It is open to parties to compromise matters in dispute, and questions relating to settlement of accounts are not an exception to this rule. That was the case which the Privy Council had to consider in the case reported in M. Kellor v. Wallace (1). I should just like to quote the passage on which great stress was laid by the learned advocate for the appellant in this case. At p. 395 it is stated:

"The law in cases of this kind I apprehend to be perfectly clear. Parties having accounts between them may meet and agree to settle those accounts by the ascertainment of the exact balance; and, if they mean to ascertain the exact balance, it may be necessary for that purpose, and probably is necessary in most cases, that voucher should be produced, and that all the information which is possessed on one side and the other should be furnished in the settlement of those accounts; and, if it afterwards turns out that there are errors in the account it is a sufficient ground for opening the account and for setting it right in a Court of Equity. If, on the other hand, persons meet and agree, not to ascertain the exact balance, but agree to take a gross sum as the balance, a sum which one is willing to pay and the other is content to receive as the result of those accounts, it is obvious that the production of vouchers is entirely out of the question and errors in the account or so also, for the very object of the parties is to avoid the necessity for producing those vouchers, upon the assumption that there are or may be errors in the account so settled; therefore it is either an account stated and settled, in the formal sense of that expression, or, it is the case of a settlement by compromise."

Having come to the conclusion that the case before me is not a case of the kind put forward by the learned advocate for the appellant based on the second aspect mentioned in the judgment of their Lordships it follows that I am unable to uphold his contention for another reason also. It should be noticed that the Privy Council in the case in M'Kellor v. Wallace (1) proceed further to state:

"In either case (that is, in either of the two cases contemplated by his Lordship in the previous sentences) it may be vitiated by fraud; in either case it is good for nothing if either from the collusion of the parties upon the circumstances under which the settlement take place, it is proved in a Court of equity that the transaction was not so fairly and so fully understood between the parties, either from the confusion in which it was involvedor from misrepresentations made on the one side or the other, as it ought to have been, and that injustice has been done to either side."

It being thus clear that fraud is a ground for interference in both cases, the question is whether fraud has been legally found in the present case. In Lindley on Partnership, Edn. 9, at p. 591 there is a paragraph relating to agreements made between partners at the time of dissolution and based on false and incorrect accounts. It is stated that:

"notwithstanding the inability of a retiring partner and of those claiming under him to avoid an agreement fairly come to between him and his copartners, the good faith and open dealing which one partner has a right to expect from another never require to be more scrupulously observed than when one of them is retiring upon terms agreed to upon the strength of representations as to the state of the partnership accounts; and an agreement entered into on a dissolution will be set aside if it can be shown to have been based upon error or to have been tainted by fraud, whether in the shape of positive misrepresentation or of concealment of the truth."

A case is mentioned where in circumstances similar to the present case, a plaintiff gave a note for the amount of the balance and afterwards discovering mistakes be filed a bill for a new account. The defendant of course pleaded "accounts stated." The Court decreed that the defendant should give a new account. It is not necessary to quote other cases to which my attention was drawn by the learned advocate for the respondents. The case of Law v. Law (2), was also referred to in support of the same proposition. Here not only were the accounts produced by defendants 4 and 5, but two balance sheets, Exs. B and I, were prepared by them and produced before defendants 1 to 3 on the faith of which defendants 1 to 3 took upon themselves the partnership business and sent off defendants 4 and 5, promising to pay them under this note a sum of money after giving them some cash and some logs of timber. Having regard to the fraud practised upon defendants 1 to 3 as shown by the numerous instances of falsification of accounts by defendants 4 and 5, I think the lower appellate Court was entitled to come to the conclusion that this settlement was not binding upon defendants 1 to 3 and that the promissory note was accordingly vitiated.

The next question that was argued on behalf of the appellant was that, in any event, not being a party to the promissory note in the first instance but only an endorsee from defendants 4 and 5 he was entitled to protection and that his suit should not have been dismissed, whatever remedies defendants 1 to 3 might have against defendants 4 and 5 in respect of any fraud practised upon them. The answer to that is that unless the plaintiff proves that he is a holder in due course within the meaning of S. 9, Negotiable Instruments Act, he could not have any higher or superior rights against defendants 1, 2 and 3 than defendants 4 and 5 themselves would have. In this case there is the finding arrived at by the lower appellate Court in para. 28 of its judgment on p. 10 that the plaintiff knew of these disputes and that he took the note with notice of the defect of title of defendants 4 and 5. That finding is enough to disentitle the plaintiff to the benefits of a holder in due course. There was also another matter mentioned to me which would equally disentitle the plaintiff to relief on this footing. As I mentioned already, the promissory note is dated 30th October 1920. It was endorsed in favour of the plaintiff by defendants 1 and 5 on 27th July 1921. In the plaint it is mentioned in para. 5 that the due dates were 31st December 1920 and 31st March 1921. I understand that it means that the amounts became payable on these respective dates. The plaintiff's endorsement is dated subsequent to the second of the dates mentioned in the plaint and, that being so, on that ground also the plaintiff could not be said to be a holder in due course.

The learned advocate for the appellant, however, argued that in the case of promissory-notes payable on demand there is no such thing as the date on which the amount became payable, because he argued that in the case of every promissory-note payable on demand the amount becomes payable on the execution of the promissory-note and that the words "after the same became payable" should not be taken to apply to such promissory-notes. I need not express any opinion in this case on this question, as I have held against the appellant on the other point already mentioned by me; but my attention was drawn to the cases reported in Communden Mohideen Sahib v. Oree Meerah Saib (3), Van Ingen v. Dhunna Lall (4) at p. 110, and Sankara Subban Pattar v. Mangalaseri Kunhu (5) at p. 35, where this Court observed that if, after the execution of an "on demand" promissory-note, the holder of the promissory-note made demands on the maker, then a subsequent indorsee from such holder could not be said to be a "holder in due course" within the meaning of S. 9. However, as I said, it is unnecessary for me to decide in this particular case this point, as I have found that the lower appellate Court was entitled to come to the finding that the plaintiff had notice before he took endorsement of the defect of title of defendants 4 and 5 to the promissory-note in question.

It, therefore, follows that both the contentions raised by the learned ad-

Appeal No. 349 of 1924, Decided on 26th March 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, Ramnad, in Original Suit No. 64 of 1922.

 (a) Evidence Act, S. 45—Expert opinion on foreign law, where it is elaborately laid down in a Code, need not be called for—Court should itself interpret such law.

An expert in foreign law is no doubt called to state what the law of a foreign country on a particular point is; but where the law is laid down in a particularly elaborate manner in any Code of the foreign country, the Court should interpret that Code as best as it can and it should not rely on any outside opinion however eminent as to the interpretation of that Code.  (b) Civil P. C., S. 13 (b)— Mortgagee bringing suit in Colombo Court—Mortgagor not appearing—Mortgagee on filing affidavit getting decree in suit — Law existing in Ceylon not followed—Mortgagee is not entitled to have decree under Civil P. C., S. 13 (b).

The mortgage brought a suit on his mortgage in the District Court of Colombo. From record it appeared that in that suit on the non-appearance of the mortgagor, the mortgagee's proctor filed an affidavit and the Court passed a decree nisi and a decree absolute under Ceylon Civil P. C., Ss. 85 and 86. But in doing so the Court did not strictly adhere to the provisions of Ceylon Civil P. C., S. 180, and Ceylon Evidence Act, S. 68; moreover, there was no judgment in the suit.

Held: that on a suit brought by the mortgagee in British Indian Court on the foreign judgment, the decision of the Colombo Court was not on merits so as to entitle mortgagee to have a judgment under Civil P. Odgers, J.—This appeal and appeal No. 47 of 1928 were originally heard by myself and Curgenven, J., but owing to the latter's illness before he left the Court last year we were unable to deliver our judgments. In the meantime an informal application was made to me which is now put in the form of petition that we should ask Mr. Brook Elliot, a member of the Ceylon Bar to either appear as an amicus curiae or as a witness to help us in the elucidation of the Ceylon procedure in this case as contained in the Ceylon Procedure Code. We have given very careful consideration to this request and we are indebted to Mr. Brook Elliot for so readily placing his services and knowledge at our disposal. But we consider that the only way in which Mr. Brook Elliot could be of any real assistance would be if he were asked his opinion as to the very question that we have to decide. An expert in foreign law is called as I understand it to state what the law of a foreign country on a particular point is; an advocate of the Scottish Bar is often called as a witness in the English Courts to explain the law of Scotland on any particular point that arises. But in this case we have the law laid down for us in a particularly elaborate manner in the Ceylon Civil Procedure Code and it appears to us that it is our duty to interpret that Code as best we can and that we are not entitled to rely on any outside opinion, however eminent, as to the interpretation of that Code.

This was a suit to enforce payment of Rs. 8,000 the balance due on foot of a certain mortgage and a foreign judgment obtained by the plaintiff in the District Court of Colombo. Defendant 1 had effected this mortgage to the plaintiff on the security of certain properties in Ceylon on 3rd April 1917. The suit in the Colombo District Court on the mortgage document was started on 10th November 1918 and on 12th May 1919 there was a preliminary decree followed on 4th July 1919 by a final decree and on 16th October 1919 the plaintiff purchased the properties in Court auction for Rs. 9,000 odd and in 1920 sold them by private sale for Rs. 33,000. After giving credit for this, the suit was brought for the balance of Rs. 8,000. On 18th October 1922 the present suit in the Indian Court was started and the learned Subordinate Judge found that the claim was barred by limitation as to the original cause of action as the document could not be held to be a registered document for the purpose of limitation. The learned Judge curiously enough did not give any finding as to the limitation with regard to the foreign judgment, and it is practically uncontested that the plaintiff has under Art. 117, Lim. Act, six years in which to bring his suit in British India on the foreign judgment. The authority of Venkata Gurunadha Ramaseshayya v. Tripura Sundari Cotton Press, Bezwada (1), precludes him from relying on the document registered outside British India. The only question in this appeal really is whether the foreign judgment was one based on the merits or not within S. 13-b, Civil P. C. The respondents' advocate faintly contended that there was no submission to the jurisdiction on the part of the defendant and no service on him, but the document which is the original plaint contains clear submission to the jurisdiction for it states:

"It shall be lawful for the said obligee or his aforewritten at once to sue for and recover payment of the said sum of Rs. 27,000."

It is obvious, I think, that the words "to sue for" must mean to sue in the Courts of the country where the obligation was entered into and the obligor is Nawanna Moona Roona Nagappa Chetti of Sea Street in Colombo and the obligee is also described as of the same address. In this case there was substituted service as provided for in the Ceylon Civil Procedure Code, Ss. 60 and 61. The latter makes substituted service as effective as if it had been made on the defendant personally. There is no reason to suppose that substituted service was not ordered and effected in this case with due regard to the procedure of the Ceylon Courts.

The record in the case is called the Journal and under S. 92, Ceylon Civil P. C., the Journal is to commence with the institution of the action and in it shall be minuted as they occur, all the events in the course of the action, i. e., the original application and every subsequent step, proceeding and order; each minute shall be signed and dated by the Judge, and the Journal so kept shall be the principal record of the action. This document is Ex. E, and it appears from that, that substituted service was effected on 5th May 1919 on the affidavit of the process server and the Fiscal's Report stating that notice was affixed to to the mortgage property. The difficulty is caused by the entry of 12th May and by some of the provisions of the Ceylon Civil Procedure Code to which reference will be made in a moment. On 12th May 1919 the Journal states:

"Mr. Kondaiya files affidavit and moves that decree nisi be ordered to issue for the 21st May 1919."

That motion was allowed by the District Judge and a decree nisi was issued on 17th May 1919. Finally substituted service of notice of the decree nisi was effected on 2nd July 1919, and the decree nisi was made absolute on 4th July. Execution by sale was ordered to issue on 11th August. The affidavit referred to under the entry of 12th May is stated to be the affidavit printed at p. 7 of the supplemental documents which is by the agent of the plaintiff sworn on 8th May 1919 and it sets out the facts and states that a sum of Rs. 30,000 and odd is due to the plaintiff. The question is whether such an affidavit was used in evidence so as to enable it to be said that ex parte decree was a decree on the merits and secondly whether such an affidavit is admissible under the Ceylon Civil Procedure Code or whether the Court is bound to pass judgment for the plaintiff in case the defendant does not appear though served. The chapter on default is Chap. 12. S. 85 provides that:

"if the defendant fails to appear on the day fixed for his appearance and answer, * * * * * and if the Court is satisfied by affidavit of the process server * * * * * and if on the occasion of such default of the defendant the plaintiff appears, then the Court shall proceed to hear the case ex parte and to pass a decree nisi in favour of plaintiff in the form No. 22 in Sch. 2 hereto."

This form is headed "Form of decree nisi in default of appearance of defendant," and it will be observed that the Court has apparently no option except to pass a decree nisi in the plaintiff's favour though it may proceed to hear the case ex parte. It is attempted to be said that the words "shall proceed to pass a decree nisi" really mean to hear the case and if it decides to pass a decree, to do so. But that is certainly not what the section says. The Civil Procedure Code further provides in S. 87 that no appeal shall lie against any decree nisi or absolute for default. But the Court may set aside the decree for good cause shown. Further S. 90 says that where there are more defendants than one the Court shall not be obliged to pass a decree for default against a defendant for failing to appear at a stage of the action provided that one defendant at least appears at that stage. This appears to make it quite clear that under S. 85 the Court is bound to pass a decree. When we come to Ch. 19 on the trial of cases S. 167 provides: "The evidence of the witnesses shall be given orally" and S. 179 :

"The Court may at any time for sufficient reason order that any particular fact or facts may be proved by affidavit," and S. 180 :

"In the event of such an order being made the Court may order the attendance of the declarant or deponent for viva voce cross-examination."

It does not seem clear how this affidavit at p. 17, if that is the one referred to in the Journal of the 12th May, was allowed to be used there being no order apparently under S. 179 for the substitution of affidavit evidence for viva voce. There is another difficulty in this case. Under Ceylon Ordinance 7 of 1840, S. 2, no mortgage can be a mortgage except when signed by the party making it in the presence of a notary public and two witnesses; and by S. 68, Ceylon Evidence Act, one attesting witness must be called. The admission of a party with regard to the execution of a mortgage will not do: see Hira Bibi v. Ram Hari Lal (2). This would seem to be another indication that the case did not proceed on the merits. It will be observed that the Ceylon procedure differs from our own in that an opportunity is afforded to the defendant who has not appeared after decree nisi to come forward and show cause why the decree should not be made absolute, instead of our procedure of moving to set aside the ex parte decree obtained by the plaintiff. One of the latest cases on the subject is Arunachalam Chettiar v. Muhammad Salihu (3). The authority as far as this Court is concerned is contained in the Full Bench case Mohamed Kassim & Co. v. Seeni Pakir (4) which was a case from Penang. There, there was no trial and no taking of evidence. The case was held to fall within the decision in Keymer v. Visvanatham Reddi (5), where the defendant refused to answer interrogatories and his defence was thereupon struck out and the defendant was placed in the same position as if he had not defended. In the King's Bench Division in England on a suit brought on this foreign judgment it was held not to have been on the merits of the case within S. 13 (b) Civil P. C. In the Full Bench case Krishnan J. one of the referring Judges with reference to Janoo Hassan v. Mahomed Ohuthu (6) which is overruled by the Full Bench observes as follows :

"That was a Ceylon case where also a similar rule prevails as in Penang entitling the Court to give a decree without any trial when the defendants being served do not appear; though the Ceylon rule gives power to the Judge to take evidence if he thinks fit, there is nothing to show that in the particular case any evidence was taken."

It is further to be observed that S. 13, Civil P. C., speaks of a foreign judgment. In the Journal there does not seem to be any trace of a judgment whatever but only a decree. In the absence of any indication that this affidavit was used and considered by the District Judge and as to how and under what authority it was allowed to be filed and having regard to the provisions of law with regard to the proof of a mortgage document it seems to me impossible to say that this decree in Ceylon was obtained on the merits. Mr. Justice Krishnan says that the Ceylon Code is 'identical with the rules of the Penang Court and he adds that the procedure in the District Court of Colombo is that where no defence is entered and affidavit of service filed judgment follows as a matter of course. In that case there was nothing to show that any evidence was recorded or the Court went into the merits though the defendants were ex parte. I am therefore inclined to think that in this case the judgment of which there is none was not on the merits and that the appeal should be dismissed with costs two sets for defendant 1 and for defendants 2 and 3 jointly.

Wallace, J.—The main point raised in this case is almost precisely the same as that in appeal No. 47 of 1928, namely, whether a decision of the District Court, Colombo, in a regular suit in which all that appears from the record is that on the defendant's non-appearance, the plaintiff's proctor filed an affidavit and the Court passed a decree nisi and then a decree absolute under Ss. 85 and 86, Ceylon Civil Procedure Code was a decision on the merits which would entitle the plaintiff to judgment on the forgein judgment under S. 13 (b), Civil P. C. In my judgment in appeal No. 47 of 1928, I have given reasons for holding that such a decision is not on the merits, and I need not repeat them here.

In the present case, the decree obtained by the plaintiff in the District Court of Colombo was an ex parte decree on the mortgage. He brought the property to sale in execution in Colombo and realised part of the decree amount and he is now suing on the foreign judgment to recover the balance in the Subordinate Judge's Court of Ramnad. The discussion of the point under S. 13 (b) by the trial Court is hardly adequate, but the matter has been fully argued before us here, and, as I held in appeal No. 47 of 1928, my conclusion is that the decision was not on the merits. On this point, the appeal must fail.

It is unnecessary therefore to go into the other points such as whether the District Court, Colombo, had jurisdiction to pass the decree, it being alleged that the defendant was not a resident at the time within its jurisdiction and was not served at all and had no knowledge whatever of the suit or the decree and that the manner in which process was taken ont was a fraud upon the District Court and whether the decree therefore offends against the principles of natural justice. The appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs (2 sets) as decided by my learned brother.

The plaintiff brought O. S. No. 116 of 1924 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sivaganga. On 16th December 1924 , an ex parte decree was passed in the suit on a foreign judgment of the District Court of Colombo against defendants 1 and 13 in the suit. On 13th March 1926, defendant 13 applied to set aside the ex parte decree and succeeded. Defendant 2 is now the contesting defendant before us. The learned Judge on this application held that defendant 2 only became aware of the decree on 16th February 1926 and that his application was therefore within time. We were at first inclined to go into the facts to see if the learned Judge's order could be sustained on this point but in this case the most important question that arises is as to whether this is a decision on the merits. On 30th May 1917 the suit was filed. We have the Journal under S. 105, Ceylon Civil Procedure Code, printed. It is contended that because an affidavit is apparently put in, the decision is one on the merits although the defendant was ex parte. The suit was against 14 defendants of whom only defendants 1 and 13 were ex parte. On 7th July 1921 Mr. Kondayya moved for an ex parte trial as against defendants 1 and 13. This was allowed and the trial fixed to 15th July. On 19th September 1921 Mr. Kondayya filed an affidavit and moved that decree nisi be entered. Decree nisi was issued on 11th November 1921. The affidavit was filed on 15th Sepember 1921, and sets out the fact that certain promissory notes and a cheque were dishonoured and that the defendants are jointly and severally liable in the sum of Rs. 9,500 and odd. The Journal states that on 19th September the day fixed for the hearing the plaintiff appeared and that defendants 1 and 13 did not appear though they were duly served as by the affidavit of the process server appears. Reference must be shortly made to the provisions of the Ceylon Procedure Code. The Chapter relating to default of appearance is Chap. 12. S. 85 says :

"If the defendant fails to appear on the day fixed for his appearance and answer, or if he fails to appear on the day fixed, for the subsequent filing of his answer, or for filing of the replication, or on the day fixed for the hearing of the action, and if the Court is satisfied by affidavit of the proces server stating the facts and circumstances of the service or otherwise, that the defendant has been dnly served with summons, or has received due notice of the day fixed for subsequent filing of answer, or of replication, or of the day fixed for the hearing of the action, as the case may be, or if the defendant shall fail to file his answer on the day fixed therefor, and if on the occasion of such default of the defendant the plaintiff appears, then the Court shall proceed to hear the case ex parte and to pass a decree nisi in favour of plaintiff in the form No. 22 in the Sch. 2 hereto or to the like effect, and shall thereupon issue to the defendant a notice of such decree. Such notice shall be served personally unless the Court, for sufficient reasons to be assigned by it, direct some other mode of service."

Reference may also be made to the words of S. 87 :

"No appeal shall lie against any decree nisi or absolute for default."

Section 90 says :

"In the case of an action where there are more defendants than one, the Court shall not be obliged to pass a decree for default against a defendant for failing to appear at a stage of the action provided that one defendant at least appears at that stage against whom the action must proceed."

It is alleged that the affidavit printed at p. 3 of the appellant's documents was used at the hearing ex parte and that constitutes a decree on the merits. We have no judgment in the case and the only affidavit referred to in the order quoted above is that of the process server. Under S. 85 it would seem that the Court has no option but to give a decree for the plaintiff, the defaulting defendant being left to his remedy of moving to set aside the decree nisi if he can. Chap. 12 makes no reference to affidavit evidence which is only by S. 179 to be allowed by the Court for sufficient reason. The affidavit relied on does not appear in the Journal and it is not explained under what provision of law it has been used. It may be that it is the practice of the Colombo Courts to use affidavits of this kind before ordering the issue of the decree nisi but in the absence of any evidence on the point it seems to me that the affidavit in question cannot be relied upon to make this a decree on the merits. There is no judgment whatever.

Another possible explanation is that this suit though begun as a regular suit and we know that all the defendants but two originally appeared and filed answers was after the dismissal of the suit against them converted into a summary suit and it will be remembered that in summary suits an affidavit is required.

Another question raised in this appeal has been already referred to, viz., whether these defendants had notice of this particular decree. Defendant 2 states that he was not served with any summons and was only aware of the decree passed against him on 16th February 1926. This becomes important in considering whether he was within time in making his application to set aside the ex parte decree. He further says he was employed in Colombo for the last two years and came to Tondi, the village in question, on 28th January 1926. The agent of the plaintiff on the other hand says that this defendant came to the village of Tondi a few days prior to 28th January 1926. The Court amins came to Tondi on the eve of his marriage, the defendant remaining in concealment. A resident of Tondi, Madar Shaik Ali, says that the marriage of this defendant was celebrated secretly because even at the end of January he was aware of the warrants out for his arrest. There is a conflict of evidence about this matter and it is evident that the amins found themselves in a hostile atmosphere in this village and wired to the Subordinate Judge to know what they were to do as the defendant was absconding inside the house. They asked for police bandobust from Tiruvadani as the outpost of Tondi did not seem to be available or willing to help them. It is of course the law that the defendant must know exactly what decree and for what amount is being executed against him and while it is quite likely that he knew that the amins were in the village to execute this particular decree it is possible that as he was a man in involved circumstances he was not sure what particular decree it was that was sought to be executed. This question really becomes of no importance in the view that I have taken that this decree is not one on the merits.

This is admittedly a decree for default and not a decree on the merits, c. f., Ss. 703 and 708, Ceylon Civil P. C. Therefore it may be argued with reason that an affidavit is not a distinguishing mark of a regular hearing on the merits and that exactly the same materials are placed before the Court in a case of this kind as in the summary procedure. There is also the fact that there is no judgment but merely a decree in this matter which supports the view that it is not a decree on the merits. In this view I am of opinion that this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

While this judgment was under consideration we have been referred to two reported Ceylon decisions. The first is Vol. 6 of the Notes of Cases by Mr. K. Balasingham and is at p. 17 of that Volume. The learned Judges there held that at an ex parte hearing it was necessary for plaintiff to give such evidence of the material averments as would enable the Court to pass a decree. The Judges held there had been no hearing at all as all the plaintiff said was:

> "I have actually sustained the damages claimed and nearly half the claim was for pain of mind and body. It was also doubtful if such damages could be recovered."

The other case is reported in 3 N. L. R. (Ceylon) p. 34 and was a case of 1897. It holds that the plaintiff must make out a prima facie case and that the Judge is not bound to pass a decree till he is satisfied. He may grant an adjournment to enable plaintiff to repair the defects in his evidence and which may seem a strange proceeding to us here. The Judges refer to the old practice of allowing the defaulter defendant to appear and examine plaintiff in order to make the Court dissatisfied with the plaintiff's case. This is no longer allowed but the Court must still be satisfied that plaintiff has a case. This is reasonable. Suppose A sued B for the price of a coat and claimed Rs. 10,000. The case is ex parte. It may well be that the Court would not be satisfied without proof of the truth of the plaintiff's claim. i. e. that the coat is worth so much. I am not satisfied that this would make it a decree on the merits. The Ceylon case cited seems peculiar as there seems to have been a judgment. We have none here and in my opinion this case has nothing on the present.

Wallace, J.—This appeal is against the decision of the lower Court dismissing as against defendant 2 the plaintiff's suit, and the plaintiff appeals. The suit is based on a foreign judgment, namely, the decree in O. S. No. 47816 of 1917 on the file of the District Court, Colombo. It was a decree based on certain promissory notes and hundis. The plaintiff has sued upon this decree in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sivaganga to recover the sum of Rs. 15,000 now said to be due under it.

The first and, to my mind, the most important contention is whether that foreign judgment satisfies the requirements of S. 13 (b), Civil P. C.; that is, is it a judgment given on the merits of the case? The Subordinate Judge has held that it was not and on full consideration I agree with him.

The Journal, which is the diary in the suit O. S. 47816 of 1917 maintained in the District Court, Colombo, is exhibited and discloses the following facts. The present respondent was one of the several defendants there, he being No. 13. All the defendants to the suit were served and several appeared on 12th August 1918, the date fixed for the trial, but this defendant did not. The District Court proceeded to try the case against those served, reserving the right to proceed against those absent, a procedure permitted by the Ceylon Civil Procedure Code. The trial against those present was held up till a connected case was disposed of in November 1919 and was finally dismissed on 27th May 1921 owing to the plaintiff having taken no steps. On 7th July 1921 the plaintiff appeared to ask for the case to be proceeded ex parte against those defendants who did not appear including the present respondent. After two adjournments, the case was taken up on 19th September 1921, and the entry in the Journal (the meaning and the implication of which we have to consider), is:

"Mr. C. T. Kondayya (that is, the plaintiff's proctor or vakil) filed affidavit and moves that decree nisi be entered in terms of the prayer of the plaint against defendants 1 and 13" and the Court entered decree nisi, and on 11th November 1921, notice of the decree nisi having been affixed to the defendant's residence and no appearance made, a decree absolute was passed. It is on that decree absolute that the present suit is based.

The question is whether the entry of 19th September 1921 imports that the case was heard and judgment given on the merits. The procedure followed is, it is conceded, that laid down for the trial of regular suits, by Chap. 12, Ceylon Civil P. C.; S. 85 is the section particularly applicable. On the non-appearance of the defendant, the Court shall, if the plaintiff appears, "proceed to hear the case ex parte and pass a decree nisi." Does the phrase "shall proceed to hear the case ex parte" necessarily mean that the case was decided on the merits? I am unable to hold so. Hearing a case is merely attending to a case, taking it up for further proceedings. Dates are fixed for the "hearing of an action" after the pleadings have been put in: see Ss. 84 and 85:

"Hearing appears to me nothing more than taking the case up for trial. Even a decree nisi cannot be passed until the case is taken up for hearing and heard. That it does not necessarily imply the taking of evidence is indicated by the mandatory character of the section" "the Court shall pass a decree nisi."

That the passing of a decree for default is mandatory is clear from S. 90, which enacts that if all the defendants in a case do not fail to appear but some do appear, then the decree for default is not immediately obligatory on the Court. The present case is obviously governed by S. 90. The decree for default against those defendants who had not appeared was postponed until the trial of the case against those defendants who had appeared was closed. The reasonable interpretation of S. 85 is that the passing of the decree nisi is not a decision on the merits of the case but is a penalty for default of appearance.

It is argued that the fact that the plaintiff's proctor is said to have filed an affidavit, which is said to be the affidavit printed on p. 3 of the documents before us and appears to be a reduplication of the plaint, implies that the Court called for evidence and accepted the affidavit as evidence on which to base its decree. We are asked to infer from the fact that the affidavit was presented, that the Court called for it and used it as evidence, but the provisions of the Ceylon Code lend no support to this proposition. the general section relating to proof by affidavit is S. 179, which says that the Court may, for sufficient reasons, order that any particular fact be proved by affidavit. S. 437 clearly implies that except in an action of summary procedure, affidavits which are to be evidence in a case must be called for by the Court on specific order. We are not shown anything here to indicate that the Court did so order evidence to be given by affidavit. There is nothing to show that the Court called for this affidavit or used it as evidence. There is in fact—and it is a strong point against the plaintiff—no judgment or statement of reasons for the decree, nothing to show that the Court directed any attention to the merits of the case. When the Court has taken evidence and decides on evidence, it must write a judgment: see S. 184 and 187.

There are other indications that a decree nisi passed under S. 85 and a decree absolute which follows under S. 86 are not decrees passed on the merits. For example Ss. 86 and 87, speak of each of these decrees as decrees for default. Presumably this is of a deliberate purpose. No appeal against either is allowed (see S. 87) and if the decision was on the merits, one would naturally expect an appeal to be allowed. Again S. 87 provides for these decrees being set aside by motion, but what the Court has then to consider is not the merits of the controversy in the suit but the merits and demerits of the defendant's failure to appear. So in the present case, the decree nisi was evidently passed not on the affidavit but on the defendant's failure to appear. It is clear that the procedure in Chap. 12 does not anywhere contemplate a decision upon the merits of the matter in issue in the suit. The form of the decree nisi No. 22 affords no hint that the merits of the matters in issue in the suit have been considered. It is a decree purely because of the default of appearance.

The plaintiff has based an argument on the wording of the summons issued to the defendant in a regular suit procedure as contrasted with that issued in an action of summary procedure on a liquid claim. These are forms 16 and 19 respectively, found at the end of the Ceylon Civil Procedure Code. Form 16 says that in default of appearance:

"the action will be proceeded with and heard and determined in your absence."

Form 19 says that in default of appearance, plaintiff will be entitled to obtain a decree. But these forms must be read with conformity with the Code itself and there is no reason why we should read more into the words "hear and determine" than give the case a hearing and bring it to an end.

I am satisfied for the above reasons that there was in the District Court, Colombo, no decision on the merits. The point is not without authority in this Court. A very similar case is reported in Arunachalam Chettiar v. Muhammad Salihu (1), when Kumaraswami Sastri and Curgenven, JJ., held that the decision was not on the merits, following the Full Bench judgment of this Court in Muhammad Kassim & Co. v. Seeni Pakir (2) and the Privy Council ruling in Keymer v. Visvanatham Reddi (3).

As the suit fails on this point, it is unnecessary to go into the other points raised by the plaintiffs, namely, whether he is entitled to plead here that the lower Court was in error in setting aside the ex parte decree which he had obtained against the respondent and whether the respondent's application to set aside that ex parte decree was out of time.

I may just briefly note here that an application was made to us by the appellant to examine, for the purpose of elucidating the procedure in the District Court of Colombo, a learned barrister of this Court who has practised there, but I really do not see how an examination of this gentleman would assist us to decide the present case. Even if he were able to say that in certain cases the District Court did adopt a procedure which involves a decision on the merits, it is incredible that he will be able to say that it was the inveterate habit of that Court to decide all such cases on the merits and and that there could not be any exception to that practice, that in fact the District Court of Colombo and every District Judge in it invariably, as a matter of uniform rule, recorded decisions on the merits in all cases under S. 85. If the appellant had wished to to produce before us information which would enable us to decide in a clearer fashion what the exact procedure in the District Court of Colombo was and what the meaning of the particular sections of the Civil Procedure Code cited before us is as laid down by the Supreme Court of Ceylon, it would not have been difficult for him to produce before us reported rulings of the Supreme Court on the points at issue in the case but no attempt has been mede to do this, when the case was argued at the Bar.

Since that argument appellant has by letter called our attention to two reported cases of the Supreme Court of Colombo. It is not neceseary for us to post the case for further argument on these, as they do not seem to me to arise from his point. From the case reported in Balaginsham's Notes of Cases, Vol. 6. p. 17, it appears that there must be an ex parte hearing of the plaintiff's case before a decree nisi can be passed. It was held that there has been no such hearing and the decree nisi was therefore vacated. From the case reported in 3 New Law Reports 34, it appears that though a defendant appears at the ex-parte hearing, he cannot plead because he is in default. In both cases, it is clear that the hearing is not a trial on the merits of the matters in controversy. As is stated clearly in the latter case the defendant's objections to plaintff's case "could not be tried until pleaded by the by the defendant who was wilfully in default."

The decision therefore remains a decision for default of appearance and not on the merits, and it is clear, as I have pointed out, from S. 87, that defendant may, at any later stage, for good reasons shown, have the decree for default set aside and the case tried on the merits. In other words, the decree nisi and the decree absolute under Ss. 85 and 86 are not decisions on the merits. I would therefore decline to interfere and dismiss the appeal with costs.

PHILLIPS AND REILLY, JJ.

B. Iswarayya—Appellant.

v.

(Swarnam) Iswarayya—Respondent.

Appeal No. 169 of 1927, Misc. Appeal No. 312 of 1927 and Appeal No. 201 of 1927, Decided on 15th February 1929, from decree of Dist. Judge, East Tanjore, D/- 8th March 1927, in Original Petn. No. 44 of 1926.

(a) Divorce Act, S. 7—Meaning of words "principles and rules."

The words "principles and rules" in S. 7 mean principles and rules of law of evidence, of interpretation, of practice, and of procedure but not statutory provisions nor statutory rules. The principles and rules to be applied are by the words of the section made subject to the provisions of the Act; they can never run counter to the Act. [P 155 C 1]

(b) Divorce Act, S. 37—Court has power to enhance alimony ordered to be paid to wife judicially separated.

Section 37 as it stands, gives power to the Court to enhance the alimony which a husband has been ordered under the section to pay to a wife judicially separated from him. [P 157 C 1]

(c) Divorce Act, Ss. 3 (5) and 42 — Children not minors cannot be provided.

There is no power under the Act to make any provision for children who are no longer minors under the Act. [P 157 C 1]

(d) Civil P. C., S. 35 — Successful appellant's conduct not creditable and straight forward ordered to bear his costs.

Costs ordered to be borne by the suceessful appellant because his conduct in the case did not appear to have been at all creditable or straightforward. [P 158 C 1]

T. V. Muthukrishna Ayyar and N. Muthuswami Ayyar—for Appellant.

K. V. Ramchandra Ayyar and M. A. T. Coelho—for Respondent.

Reilly, J.—In 1921 the respondent in A. S. No. 169 of 1927 obtained a decree under the Indian Divorce Act of judicial separation from her husband, the appellant. The husband was then ordered to pay Rs. 120 a month to the wife for her own maintenance and Rs. 30 a month to her for the maintenance of each of their four children. In O. P. No. 44 of 1926 on the District Judge's file the wife prayed that the amount to be paid for her maintenance by the husband should be increased to Rs. 260 a month, and in O. P. No. 43 of 1926 the children applied for an increase of the maintenance allowances to be paid by their father for them to Rs. 300 a month in all. The District Judge disposed of both petitions in one judgment. He found that the children were no longer minors under the Indian Divorce Act and that therefore their father could not be ordered to pay maintenance allowances for them under S. 42 of the Act. But he made an order raising the alimony to be paid to the wife to Rs. 310 a month, including in his calculation amounts required for the maintenance and education of the children and Rs. 160 a month for the wife herself. The husband appeals in

A. S. No. 169 of 1927 against the District Judge's order so far as it relates to the wife herself and in A. S. No. 201 of 1927 so far as it relates to the children.

Mr. Muthukrishna Ayyar for the husband contends first, that the alimony for the wife having been originally fixed under S. 37 of the Act at Rs. 120 a month the District Judge had no power to raise its amount. S. 37 does not in express words provide any power to increase the alimony of a wife once fixed. Mr. Mocket for the wife replies that since 1907 that power has been provided in England by the statutes which govern the Probate and Divorce Division of the High Court in such matters and from 1866 to 1907 it was provided by the statutory rules and regulations of the Court for divorce and matrimonial causes: and that power can be exercised by the Court in India because, S. 7, Divorce Act, provides that High Courts and District Courts shall act and give relief on principles and rules which in the opinion of the said Courts are as nearly as may be conformable to the principles and rules on which the Court for divorce and matrimonial causes in England for the time being acts and gives relief. Mr. Mocket's extreme contention that "rules" in S. 7, Divorce Act, means the Statutory Rules in force for the time being in England is in my opinion clearly untenable. If statutory rules in force in England were meant, there would be no question of the Court in this country acting on rules which in their opinion were as nearly as may be conformable to those rules. The provision would have been either that the statutory rules in force in England were to be observed in this country or that the rules to be made under S. 62, Divorce Act, were to be as nearly as may be conformable to the statutory rules in force in England. In my opinion the words "principles and rules in S. 7, Divorce Act, mean principles and rules of law, of evidence, of interpretation of practice, and of procedure but not statutory provisions, nor statutory rules. The principles and rules to be applied are by the words of the section made subject to the provisions of the Act; they can never run counter to the Act. Mr. Mocket suggests that they may fill up gaps left in the Act. But I am inclined to agree with Mr. Muthukrishna Ayyar that they can neither cut down the provisions of the Act nor supply any form of relief not provided by the Act. However, I do not think it necessary to discuss that question in any detail on this occasion as the present case appears to me to turn on other considerations. Mr. Muthukrishna Ayyar in the course of his argument has also compared the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act with the statutes and the statutory rules in force in England from time to time since 1857. Such a comparison is interesting. But in my opinion it is neither useful nor permissible for the purpose of interpreting the Indian Act unless the provisions of that Act which are in question are of doubtful meaning. If the provisions of the Indian Act are plain, we have no need, and in my opinion we have no right to look outside the Act for its interpretation.

The question here is whether the amount of alimony which the husband has been ordered to pay monthly can be raised by the Court after it has once been fixed. The words of S. 37, Divorce Act are "in every case" that is on any decree of judicial separation obtained by the wife:

> "the Court may make an order on the husband for payment to the wife of such monthly or weekly sum for her maintenance and support as the Court may think reasonable."

There is a proviso to that part of the section which I will discuss later. But in itself, as that provision stands, and leaving out of consideration any interpretation, judicial or otherwise, which has been put on similar provisions elsewhere, does it mean that an order for payment by the husband once made can never be varied, that the amount to be paid can never be raised by the Court? Does it mean that one order only can be made in the wife's favour? The Court is to fix the sum which it thinks reasonable. What is reasonable today may be unreasonable a few years hence. Where the husband has property on which a gross sum or an annual income can be secured to the wife, the earlier part of the section provides for that being done. The part of the section with which we are dealing appears to apply to other cases, where the husband has no such property, or no sufficient property, but is earning or receiving an income out of which he can properly be ordered to make payments to the wife. Such an income in very many cases will be variable. A husband who depends on his own earnings may be earning nothing at the time when his wife obtains a decree of judicial separation against him. A year later he may have obtained a good appointment and be earning a large income. If the Court's power is restricted to the time when the decree is made, in such a case it would not be reasonable to make any order for payment to the wife at all. Does this part of the section mean that in such a case the wife can never get an order for payment of alimony? If it is suggested that the Court can make an order for payment after the decree but not necessarily at the time of the decree and then its power is exhausted, the result is hardly more reasonable. A husband may at the time when the first order is made be earning a very small income, out of which he cannot make any payment sufficient for the maintenance of his wife, but later on he may be earning thousands a month. Does the section tie the hands of the Court so as to prevent an order for the payment of proper alimony to the wife when it is obvious that the husband can well afford it? When a Court is given power to make a continuing order reasonable in the circumstances, by what principles of interpretation can we say that that implies power to make only one order applicable to one set of circumstances, which can never be varied, however gravely the circumstances may vary? And, when we remember the particular kind of circumstanees to which this part of the section applies, that is, cases in which a proper provision cannot be made for the wife out of the property of the husband but can be made out of his income, I see nothing in the words used to drive us to the conclusion, unreasonable in itself and not necessarily implied in the words, that the Court can do no more than make once and for all a single order in favour of the wife and then its power is spent.

Mr. Muthukrishna Ayyar has sought to support his interpretation of the section to that effect by comparing it with S. 42, which deals with orders regarding the minor children of parents judicially separated and provides explicitly that such orders may be made "from time to time." He would have us regard it as of importance by contrast that there are no such words in the part of S. 37 which I have been discussing. But S. 42 deals with orders with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of the children or for placing them under the protection of the Court. It is obvious that in such matters frequent orders differing from time to time, may be required in the interests of the children as they grow up, and the conduct or occupation of the parent to whom the custody of the children has been given may often make a variation of the original or subsequent oider necessary in that matter. The fact that the legislature has been careful to state explicitly that varying orders in respect of the children may be made from time to time, as is obviously desirable in their interests, is in my opinion no sufficient ground for supposing that having provided in S. 37 that the Court may order the husband to make such monthly payments to the wife as it thinks reasonable, the legislature intended to make that order invariable. Without provision for variation from time to time it might perhaps be thought that an order for the custody of the children was final. When alimony is to be fixed according to what is reasonable in the circumstances, no such finality is implied.

What at first sight may be thought a stronger argument in support of Mr. Muthukrishna Ayyar's contention is that S. 37 contains an explicit proviso for the reduction of the alimony which the husband has been ordered to pay but no proviso for its enhancement. Mr. Muthukrishna Ayyar argues that the very fact that a proviso has been introduced only for the reduction of alimony once fixed implies that enhahcement was never contemplated by the legislature; if alimony once fixed could be varied according to circumstances under the section without the proviso, the proviso regarding reduction would be superfluous. On examination that argument does not appear to me to be sound. When an order for the periodical payment of alimony has been made against a husband, it is of the nature of a decree, and, if he is to be allowed in certain circumstances to get it reversed or modified, it might be thought that explicit provision must be made for that in some way, and it is not made in the section apart from the proviso. But when the wife applies for additional alimony she does not want the original order touched in effect ; she wants a further decree for additional alimony. The proviso might be thought necessary if the Court was to have power to unmake the order made ; no proviso is necessary to give power to make an additional order. My conclusion therefore is that S. 37, Divorce Act as it stands gives power to the Court to enhance the alimony which a husband has been ordered under the section to pay to a wife judicially separated from him. Returning for a moment to Mr. Muthukrishna Ayyar's comparative examination of the English statutes and statutory rules on the one side and the Divorce Act on the other, I may point out that under the English Act of 1857 the Court had power when pronouncing a decree for dissolution of marriage to fix an amount of alimony for the wife—either a gross sum or an annual sum—but nothing was said in the Act about power to increase the sum ; nevertheless R. 92 of the Rules and Regulations made under that Act prescribes procedure for a wife applying for the increase of alimony so fixed, which could not properly have been done unless power to increase the alimony fixed had been held to be implied in the power given by the Act to fix it.

The husband is on much firmer ground in his appeal against the District Judge's order so far as it makes provision for the children. The Act makes provision only in respect of minor children ; and under the Act the sons of native fathers are no longer minors when they reach 16 years of age and the daughters when they reach 13. It is admitted that none of the children concerned in this case was a minor within the meaning of the Act when O. P. No. 43 of 1926 was presented to the District Court. But the District Judge has tried to provide for them by adding the cost of their maintenance and education temporarily to the alimony of the wife, which he has raised for that explicit purpose. That is not to apply but to circumvent the provisions of the Act. In my opinion there is no power under the Act to make any provision for these children who are no longer minors under the Act. The learned District Judge says in his judgment that it was conceded that " the wife who is entrusted with their custody and education is entitled to claim from the husband, the cost of their maintenance and education."

I do not understand exactly what that means. The " entrustment " of the children to the wife appears to have been made under an order for their custody which is no longer in force. The legality of providing for the children in that way is contested by the husband in A. S. No. 201 of 1927, and Mr. Mocket has not suggested before us that any such ' concession ' was really made by the husband before the District Judge. In my opinion A. S. No. 201 of 1927 must be allowed and no provision can be made for the children directly or indirectly.

The wife claimed in O. P. No. 44 of 1926, Rs. 260 a month for her own maintenance. The learned District Judge, though taking into consideration the expenses of the children made an order for the payment to the wife of Rs. 310 a month, calculated that what was needed by her at Rs. 160 a month. In my opinion he might well have fixed her alimony at Rs. 260 a month. The husband at the date of the petition was receiving a salary of Rs. 800 a month. As District Medical Officer there is no doubt that he has opportunities of adding considerably to that income by private practice. He did not go into the witness-box ; nor did he explain to the Court clearly what his income was. It is indeed not at all creditable that an officer in his position should not have been open with the Court and should have left the amount of his income to speculation. It will, I think, be quite safe to estimate his income at something over Rs. 1,000 a month. Out of that it is in my opinion reasonable that he should pay Rs. 260 a month to his wife in alimony. Though she has not put in any appeal or memorandum of objections against the District Judge's order, the reason of that appears to have been that in one sense the alimony fixed by the Judge was more than she had claimed. In the circumstances, I think we may properly make an order under R. 33, O. 41, Civil P. C., that the husband do pay alimony to the wife at the rate of Rs. 260 a month. The learned District Judge has made his order take effect from the date of the wife's petition, viz., 18th March 1926.

The husband objects to that ; but I see no sufficient reason why it should not be done, and I would make our order have effect from that date.

As to costs I would order the husband to pay the wife's costs in A. S. No. 169 of 1927. And, although A. S. No. 201 of 1927 must be allowed in his favour, I would order to pay the respondent's costs throughout, both because his conduct in the case does not appear to me to have been at all creditable or straightforward and because, though he has objected successfully to the District Judge's order, he did not bring to the notice of the learned Judge, either when his judgment was pronounced or afterwards, the fact that he had not made the supposed concession upon which the judgment partly proceeds.

C. M. A. 312 of 1927.—This appeal relates to an application (E. A. 253 of 1926) to record satisfaction in the matter of payments for two of the children concerned in A. S. 201 of 1927. The order of the District Judge must be set aside and the application remanded to him for fresh disposal. In this appeal each party will bear his own costs.

Phillips, J.—I agree with the orders proposed and will only add one word about S. 3 (5) and 42, of the Act. It seems to me most improper that a Court of matrimonial jurisdiction should not have power to pass orders as to the custody and maintenance of unmarried girls above the age of 13, or of boys over 16. Since 1869 great strides have been made in education and it cannot now be said that education always ceases in the case of girls at 13 and in the case of boys at 16 nor are they usually in a position to fend for themselves at that age. In my opinion the definition of minor children in S. 3 (5) requires amendment and would invite the attention of the legislature to the same.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 663 of 1926, Decided on 30th October 1929.

After decree has once been made in a suit, the suit cannot be dismissed unless the decree is reversed in appeal. And if a trial Court, having fixed a date for further proceedings under directions of appellate Court modifying the preliminary decree, dismisses the suit on that date, under O. 9, R. 9, such a dismissal is wrong and a revision lies over it : A.I.R. 1924 P.C., 198 and 32 All. 319, Rel. on.

R. Narasimha Chariar and K. Muthuswami Chetti—for Respondents.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The main question in the Civil Revision Petition is: is a suit liable to be dismissed for default after the passing of the preliminary decree? The plaintiff filed this suit for partition and in 1923 obtained a decree directing certain items to be partitioned. From this judgment, she filed an appeal and the appellate Court varied the decree in her favour, by directing partition of some additional items. When the case went back to the trial Court, it fixed a date for the appearance of parties. Neither the plaintiff nor the defendant having appeared on the day fixed, the Court made an order on 9th May 1925 dismissing the suit for default. It is this order that is impeached in the revision petition before us. On the merits, there can be no question that this order cannot be supported. As pointed out by the Privy Council:

"After a decree has once been made in a suit, the suit cannot be dismissed unless the decree is reversed on appeal, The parties have on the making of the decree, acquired rights or incurred liabilities which are fixed unless or until the decree is varied or set aside: (Lakshminarain v. Balamukund) (1), at p. 446 of 47 M. L. J.

A similar view was taken by the Allahabad High Court in an earlier case. Masumunnissa v. Latifan (2).

But then a preliminary objection is raised that this revision petition does not lie. The argument may be thus stated. The plaintiff applied to the lower Court for the restoration of the suit under O. 9, R. 9, Civil P. C.

(1) A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 198=4 Pat. 61=51 I.A. 321 (P.C.).

(2) [1910] 32 All. 319=5 I.C. 872=7 A.L.J. 196.

That application was dismissed by an order dated 16th March 1926. The respondent contends that an appeal lies from the last mentioned order under O. 43, R. 1 (c) and that the High Court ought not to exercise its revisional powers when the party aggrieved has a remedy by way of appeal The answer is simple. The order dismissing the suit cannot be treated as one made under the provisions of O. 9, Civil P. C. That is the effect of the decision of the Privy Council to which we have referred. It follows necessarily that although the plaintiff's application to restore the suit purports to have been made under O. 9, it is not in fact governed by the provisions of that chapter at all. It must be deemed to be an application under S. 151 for the exercise of the Court's inherent powers. The preliminary objection thus fails.

In the result, we allow the Civil Revision Petition and set aside the order of the lower Court dated 9th May 1925. The District Munsif will restore the case to his file and allow the plaintiff to take further proceedings in the suit.

In the circumstances, we direct each party to bear his costs.

Divorce Act Ss. 56 and 37—Leave granted by High Court on condition that petitioner should deposit fixed amount in Court—Divorce Act S. 7.

Where the points involved were whether the High Court is justified in reading S. 37 as entitling the Court to order enhancement in alimony granted for maintenance to a wife judicially separated, and whether the High Court has power under O. 41, R. 33 of the Civil P. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar and Muthuswami Ayyar—for Petitioner.

M. A. T. Coelho and C. M. J. Ernest—for Respondent.

Jackson, J.—This is an application under S. 56, Divorce Act, 4 of 1869 for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the order and decree of this Court in B. Iswarayya v. Iswarayya (1) fixing the alimony to be paid by the petitioner to respondent his divorced wife at Rs. 260 a month.

The amount originally fixed by the District Judge was Rs. 120 and this was confirmed on appeal. Then the respondent petitioned the District Judge for an increase and he fixed the amount at Rs. 160 plus Rs. 150 for the children. This Court found that nothing need be paid to the children who were no longer minors under the Act but increased the alimony of the mother to Rs. 260.

The petitioner contends that there is no provision in the Act for increasing the amount of alimony once it is fixed and this Court is not justified in reading S. 37 as entitling the Court to make such orders as regards maintenance as may from time to time be reasonable. He also contends that inasmuch as the respondent did not appeal against the order of the District Judge fixing her alimony at Rs. 160 this Court in raising the amount to Rs. 260 exceeded the power given to an appellate Court under O. 41, R. 33, Civil P. C. I consider that neither of these points is so clear as to justify us in finding that this is not a fit case for appeal nor can they be said to be unsubstantial for they materially affect the law of divorce and the law of procedure.

But in giving leave to appeal I think it necessary to order that the petitioner pay the costs of the respondent in the proceedings before the Privy Council. Under S. 7, Act 4 of 1869, this Court is bound to act and give relief on principles and rules which conform to those obtaining in England and I have no doubt that in a similar case arising in England O. 91, Part 8 of the Annual Practice would be applied and the wife would be given her costs. In the circumstances we give leave to appeal on condition of petitioner depositing Rs. 3,000 within 3 weeks of the re opening of the Court next July which sum may be drawn by respondent.

Reilly, J.—In C. M. P. 1935 of 1929 the husband prays for a certificate that this is a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council under S. 56, Divorce Act. The two questions which the husband wishes to raise in appeal, viz.: (1) whether the amount of alimony which a husband has been ordered to pay monthly under S. 37 of the Act can be raised by the Court when it has once been fixed and (2) whether R. 33, O. 41, Civil P C., gives power in special circumstances to make such an order as was made in this case are questions of general importance. But does that make it a fit case for appeal under S. 56, Divorce Act? Even if it were enough to make the case a fit one under S. 109 (c), Civil P. C., it would not necessarily be enough under S. 56, Divorce Act. Considering the nature of the cases which can be taken before His Majesty in Council under S. 56 of the Act it would often be a very great hardship if a wife could be subjected to such an appeal, when it was clear that she had no means sufficient to contest it merely because it raised a question of general importance. In this case it is alleged by the wife, and is not disputed before us, that she cannot afford to appear before the Privy Council and contest the proposed appeal. But, as suggested by Mr. Coelho for the wife, the Act provides machinery by the aid of which an appeal can be prosecuted without injustice against a wife who has no means of her own to contest it. Under S. 7 we are to act on principles and rules as nearly as may be conformable to the principles and rules on which the Court for divorce and matrimonial causes in England acts. "Principles and rules" in that section include in my opinion "principles and rules of procedure." As a matter of procedure in England the husband can be required to advance to his wife the expenses of contesting an appeal which he wishes to prosecute against her. That procedure I think we are entitled to adopt here before declaring that the case is a fit one for appeal and so enabling the husband to prosecute his proposed appeal before the Privy Council. In my opinion this would not be a fit case for appeal within the meaning of S. 56 of the Act, if the husband did not advance to the wife the expenses of contesting the appeal: if he did so, it would be a fit case. I would therefore require the husband to deposit in this Court within 3 weeks after the Court reopens after the long vacation Rs. 3.000 for the wife's expenses in contesting the appeal. If he makes the deposit in time, I would declare the case a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council and allow the wife to draw Rs. 3,000; if he fails to make the deposit, I would dismiss his application.

The intention of the parties must be looked into, and that when once there is a debt with the security of land for its repayment, then the arrangement is a mortgage by whatever name it is called.

A sum of Rs. 2,200 was advanced to the borrower, who agreed to pay an equal sum as interest thereon. The lender was put in possession of certain lands belonging to the borrower and as between the parties, the annual profits were estimated to be Rs. 240. The lender was required annually to pay Rs. 100 for the revenue and village expenses, appropriate Rs. 80 towards the mortgage debt and pay the balance of Rs. 60 to the debtor. It was further provided that after the debt was discharged in 55 years in the manner set forth, the creditor was to surrender possession of the land to the borrower, and that if the lender failed to pay Rs. 60, he should be bound to relinquish a part of the land in proportion to that sum. S. Varadachariar, P. Somasundaram and N. Rama Rao— for Respondents.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—This is a Letters Patent appeal from the judgment of Devadoss, J., and raises an important question, in regard to the effect of a certain transaction evidenced by two documents dated 2nd May 1865. The two deeds may be treated as practically one and the purport of the arrangement is shortly this. A sum of Rs. 2,200 is advanced to the borrower, who agrees to pay an equal sum as interest thereon. The lender is put in possession of certain lands belonging to the borrower and as between the parties, the annual profits are estimated to be Rs. 240. The lender is required annually to pay Rs. 100 for the revenue and village expenses, appropriate Rs. 80 towards the mortgage debt and pay the balance of Rs. 60 to the debtor. It is further provided that after the debt is discharged in 55 years in the manner set forth, the creditor is to surrender possession of the land to the borrower. The only remaining material clause is, that if the lender fails to pay Rs. 60 he shall be bound to relinquish a part of the land in proportion to that sum. It is evident that the term was fixed as 55 years, because at the rate of Rs. 80 it would take that period to discharge the total sum of Rs. 4,400. The right, title and interest of the borrower in the lands in question were sold in Court auction and the plaintiff having become the purchaser, the sale in his favour was confirmed on 1st March 1882. It is not denied that since then, the annual payment of Rs. 60 was never made to him. I may observe, that it is alleged on behalf of the defence that notwithstanding the Court sale, the lender continued to pay Rs. 60 to the original debtor. But this is not material, as it is admitted that the lender had notice of the Court sale and the alleged payments may be therefore ignored. The plaintiff has treated the transaction as a mortgage and has filed the suit, from which this appeal arises as one for redemption. The suit was filed in 1914. It was contended that it was premature as the term of 55 years would expire only in 1920. The District Munsif in whose Court it was filed disposed of the suit in 1919. The appeal to the Subordinate Judge was decided in 1921. On the expiry of the term, that is, in 1920, the defendant gave up possession of the land to the plaintiff. The question, therefore, whether the suit was premature or not, is not of much importance, in so far as the action relates to the possession of the property.

The same point, however, arises in another form, when did the debt become discharged ? for, not only does the plaintiff contend, that his right to redeem accrued when the debt was paid off, irrespective of the period fixed, but he further urges that the defendant became liable from that moment to account for the profits from the lands. He contends, in short, that the debt became discharged long before the expiry of 55 years, the period fixed. He maintains that the defendant, who, contrary to the terms of the arrangement, retained in his hands the sum of Rs. 60 was bound to apply that sum in reduction of the mortgage debt. If that was done, the debt would, of course, have been discharged long before 1920. The question to decide is : was the defendant so bound ?

The point to be first decided is, is the transaction a lease or a mortgage ? for, on this will depend, whether the plaintiff's contention can prevail or not.

"The only guiding rule that can be extracted from the cases on the subject is, that the intention of the parties must be looked into, and that when once you get a debt with the security of land for its repayment, then the arrangement is a mortgage by whatever name it is called. Ghose on Mortgages, 5th Edn. Vol. 1, Page.102."

Let us now examine the terms of this arrangement. The deed calls the advance a loan and provides for interest upon it. It refers to the discharge of the debt and prescribes a method by which it may be gradually paid off. The obvious intention of the deed is, to treat the property as security for the amount advanced together with interest upon it. In the face of these provisions, can the sum advanced be regarded as a premium or bonus paid for the use of the land? Generally, where a lessee pays a premium to his lessor, the intention is not that it shall be repayable. Every recital in the deed in question shows, that the parties intended that the money was to be repaid and that the land was to be treated as security for repayment. The fixing of a term is clearly not inconsistent with the transaction being a mortgage. Mr. Lakshmanna, for the defence, relies on the fact that the deed is described as a 'cowle' and that the word means a lease. Assuming that he is right, we must still look at the substance of the transaction and not be guided merely by the word, which the parties chose to use, in describing the instrument. But, as a matter of fact, the treatises to which we have been referred show, that the word 'cowle' has a much wider signification and may mean "a contract" or "an agreement." There is then the further fact, that the deed stipulates that in the event of the creditor failing to pay Rs. 60 the debtor may insist upon possession being given, of a share of the land in proportion to that sum. Is it conceivable that if the parties intended the arrangement to be a lease, they would have provided that the lessee was in a certain event to deliver up a part of the property?

This leads me to the main question in the appeal. In the case of a mortgage with a period fixed, where the mode of repayment is prescribed, can the debt never and in no circumstances become discharged, before the expiry of that period? Mr. Lakshmanna has strongly contended that, in such a case, the clause fixing the term is an essential part of the contract and that the mortgagor must wait till the period comes to an end. Mr. Varadachari, for the plaintiff, concedes that in a case of this kind, it is not open to the mortgagor, to redeem the mortgage before the close of the period by tendering the amount. But, what he strongly urges is this, notwithstanding the period if the mortgagee gets into his hands, from the usufruct of the property, a sum of money belonging to the mortgagor, it is the bounden duty of the former to apply that sum in reduction of the mortgage debt. According to Mr. Lakshmanna, the true principle is, that the mortgagee while remaining liable for the sums received by him, is not bound to apply them in discharge of the mortgage debt; in other words, taking the present case, the debt could be discharged only in the manner provided in the deed and it could not be treated as paid off before the expiry of the full 55 years. The defendant's liability, Mr. Lakshmanna says, is merely to separately account for the sums retained in his hands contrary to the terms. In my opinion, the sounder and the more equitable rule is that for which Mr. Varadachari contends.

Section 62, T. P. Act, runs thus :

> In the case of a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagor has a right to recover possession of the property ;
>
> (a) Where the mortgagee is authorized to pay himself the mortgage money from rents and profits of the property, when such money is paid;
> (b) where the mortgagee is authorized to pay himself from such rents and profits, the interest of the principal money, when the term (if any), prescribed for the payment of the mortgage money has expired and the mortgagor pays or tenders to the mortgagee the principal money or deposits it in Court as hereinafter provided.

The present case is covered by Cl. (a). The words used are: "when such money is paid." They mean in the context "when such money is paid from the rents and profits." The question to decide then is, when did the mortgage money become paid off? The clause in question does not say that a different rule is to be applied, when by the contract a term of years is fixed. On the contrary, it seems to embody the principle, that in no case can the mortgagee retain possession, after the debt itself is discharged from the usufruct. It is true that where a period is fixed as a material part of the contract, the mortgagor cannot be at liberty by any act of his own, to get rid of the stipulation, that is to say, he cannot, at his will, curtail the period, by tendering the money before the prescribed date. The case cited by Mr. Lakshmanna such as Setrucharla Ramachandra v. V. Suria-narayanaraju Bhahadur (1) and Aga Muhammad Ali v. C. Venkatappiah (2) decide no more than this. What the law will prevent is if the mortgagor, before the prescribed period, seeks to discharge the debt in a manner not contemplated by the contract, that course he will not be permitted to adopt. But the question here arises in an entirely different form. A portion (Rs. 60) was by agreement of parties excluded from the usufruct for a specific purpose. If the purpose failed or the term was not carried out, what was the result? The part excluded reverted without any further act or agreement and became again profits. The mortgagee would then be liable to apply it in reduction of the debt. S. 76 (h) enacts that the mortgagee shall apply the usufruct, first in reduction of the interest, then of the principal. This, he is bound to do under the law; so that, if a part of the profits initially excluded was not applied as directed, it became usufruct as a matter of course and without a special contract to that effect.

The proper way then of viewing the question is: has the part excluded, in the events that have happened, regained its character of rents and profits? If so the mortgagee has no option but to appropriate it to the mortgage debt. Jaijitraj v. Gobind Tewari (3) is a very instructive case on the point and gives effect to the principle as I have stated it. Brijkumar Lal v. Magli Sahai (4) also supports the view I have taken. I cannot follow Mr. Lakshmanna's contention that S. 77, T. P. Act, supports him. In the first place, that section refers to a case, where there is a contract, that the receipts from the property shall be taken in lieu of the interest and "defined portions of the principal." I doubt if the section applies to the present case at all. Mr. Lakshmanna says that out of the sum of Rs. 80 mentioned in the deed, we must allocate Rs. 40 to the principal and Rs. 40 to the interest. Granting we do so, how does that satisfy the term regarding "defined portions of the principal?" The relation is not constant; the ratios Rs. 40:2,000 and 40:1960 and 40:80 are not the same. In other words, the principal gets gradually reduced, whereas Rs. 40 is a constant figure. But assuming that this is not a sound objection, how does S. 77 avail the defendant? All that it enacts is, that the rule of appropriation mentioned in S. 76 (h) shall not in certain cases hold good. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the plaintiff's contention must prevail, namely, that the sum of Rs. 60 should be debited against the mortgage debt and the account taken accordingly. It is obvious that in that event, the debt became wiped out long before 1920, that is, before the expiry of the period fixed.

That it is the correct principle will become apparent if an analogous case be considered. Let us suppose that the revenue on this land had been remitted by the zamindar and the sum representing that revenue had annually been left in the hands of the defendant. Can it be successfully maintained that it is not a part of the usufruct, which the mortgagee was bound to adjust, against the mortgage debt? Clearly not. The same principle applies to the facts of the case.

Next, does the existence of the special clause namely, that if the mortgagee fails to pay Rs. 60 he shall be bound to relinquish a proportionate part of the land, make any difference? In my opinion, it does not. The mortgagor was given an option and it was open to him not to avail himself of that term. Had the plaintiff elected to take advantage of this clause, he would have obtained possession of a part of the land and no further question would arise. Similarly, it was open to the mortgagor to have sued for the sum of Rs. 60 and the defendant could not in that event have pleaded that he applied the sum to reduce the mortgage debt. This, however, did not happen in this case and the mortgagor not having exercised his option in that way, it is open to him now, to ask that the same shall be adjusted against the mortgage debt.

Lastly, in regard to this part of the case, Mr. Lakshmanna contended that what the plaintiff purchased at the Court auction did not include the mortgagor's right to the annual payment of Rs. 60. This is an unfounded contention and does not require serious notice.

I now turn to a contention relating to the revenue. It was urged for the plaintiff, that the mortgagee failed to pay the beriz or revenue for nine years from Faslis 1295 to 1303 and that the amount allocated in the deed for that purpose, should also be calculated against the mortgage debt. This is a question of fact, but neither the District Munsif nor the Subordinate Judge has given a finding on the point. Under S. 103, Civil P. C., we have ourselves examined the evidence and find it difficult to uphold the contention of the plaintiff. He alleges that the zamindar sued him as the defendant made default, that three suits were filed, that one was dismissed, two were decreed and that he thereupon paid the sums mentioned in the two decrees. Not only has he failed to produce the decrees, but it is admitted that they were passed for much larger amounts than the revenue payable for the lands in question. He asks us to assume without evidence first, that the defendaut made default and secondly, that the suits filed were in respect of the cist which the latter was bound to pay. We cannot on the material before us record a finding in his favour. There was not a single demand made on the defendant for the return of the money. If the plaintiff paid what the defendant was bound to pay, why did he not send a demand for the amount from fasli 1303 (1893) to 1915, the date of the suit? We must hold that the plaintiff has not made out this part of the case. Then remains the question, on what footing is the account to be rendered by the defendant? I have held that he was bound to adjust the sum of Rs. 60 retained in his hands from 1883 against the mortgage debt. In finding out when the mortgage debt became discharged, interest shall be calculated on each sum of Rs. 60 as it became payable, at 2 per cent per annum (that is slightly in excess of the contract rate, namely, 1-9/11 per cent.) After the mortgage debt is on this calculation found to be fully paid off, the defendant shall be liable annually for Rs. 140 (Rs. 240 less Rs. 100 payable for revenue etc.) with 6 per cent per annum to the year 1913. In the last mentioned year, the plaintiff called on the defendant to render an account; and from then, to the date of the delivery of possession (1920 or 1921), the defendant is liable to account on the basis of the actual profits received and not estimated rent, with 6 per cent per annum. These are my directions in regard to the taking of accounts. In this connexion, I may observe that Mr. Varadachariar has contended, that from the very date the debt has become paid off, he is entitled to hold the defendant accountable for actual profits received. I do not agree with this contention. Although the mortgage debt has become extinguished, the possession of the defendant cannot be said to be wrongful, till he refused to surrender the land after demand was made. What has actually happened was not what at the outset was in the contemplation of the parties; but so long as the defendant's possession is not wrongful, I fail to see why the parties should not be held to be bound by the terms of the contract. The arrangement, as I have held, is a mortgage and not a lease, but it does not follow from that, that the defendant is liable to pay during the prescribed period of 55 years, more than the estimated profits of the land. It was hinted in the course of the argument, that if an account was taken on the basis of actual profits, the figure might amount to some tens of thousands of rupees. I do not think, that either in law or in equity, that can be the measure of the defendant's liability, when it is borne in mind that his act was not wrongful. It must be further remembered that the original arrangement involves that the mortgagee shall get no higher interest than 1 9/11 per cent per annum an absurdly low rate. Having regard to all the circumstances, the most just and proper order seems to be what I have made.

The decree we pass is a preliminary decree. I direct the lower Court to pass the final decree in the light of the observations and directions contained in this judgment.

Each party shall bear his costs of this Letters Patent Appeal.

Reilly, J.—We have heard very long arguments in this case; but it appears to me that the main question for decision is a comparatively simple one. The terms of the documents, Ex. A and B, have been explained in the judgment just delivered by my learned brother. It is not disputed that the Rs. 60 a year which the defendants had to pay to the mortgagor, has not been paid to the plaintiff since he purchased the mortgagor's interest in Court auction. Since this litigation started, possession has been given by the defendants to the plaintiff, and we are told that that was done in 1920 or 1921. The main question before us therefore is whether the Rs. 60 a year, which the defendants and their predecessors had to pay to the original mortgagor, should be adjusted as it fell due against the mortgage debt or must be recovered from the defendant by the plaintiff otherwise than in connexion with the mortgage transactions.

Those transactions have been discussed during the main part of the argument before us as if they were mortgages, and I will deal with them first on that footing. The two mortgages represented by Exs. A and B may be conveniently treated as one and the plaintiff be referred to as the mortgagor. I think it will be useful to look at the matter in the first instance as if there were no term of years mentioned in the mortgage documents, as if there was nothing said about 55 years or about possession being surrendered at the end of the year Ananda or the year Siddarti. The transaction would then be a usufructuary mortgage for Rs. 4,400 which was to be paid off by Rs. 80 a year out of the usufruct being applied to the reduction of that amount of Rs. 4,400, which represented both the principal and the interest, and Rs. 60 out of the ususfruct was to be paid by the mortgagee to the mortgagor for his own purposes. If that were the agreement into which the parties entered and from the year 1882 the Rs. 60 was not paid to the mortgagor, what would be the position? Mr. Lakshmanna for the contesting defendants maintains that, although the mortgagee in those circumstances might have kept the Rs. 60 in his own hands instead of paying it over to the mortgagor, if the mortgagor wanted to recover the Rs. 60 for any year, he must do so quite apart from the mortgage transaction. But on what principle could a mortgagee in possession be heard to say that he had in his hands money belonging to the mortgagor, which he had received in his capacity as mortgagee out of the income of the mortgaged property in his possession but that he refused to adjust that against the mortgage debt and that he would hold it until the mortgagor sue him for it in some proceedings unconnected with the mortgages. I do not think it is necessary in this connexion to drag in the idea that in those circumstances the mortgagee would be trustee for the mortgagor in respect of the mortgagor's money which he kept in his hands, though no doubt he would be so. It is enough, I think, to remember that the essence of a mortgage transaction is that the mortgage is security for the mortgage debt. When the mortgagee has obtained payment of his debt, the security is done with; there is no purpose left in it. Let us suppose that we reach a stage where the mortgage debt except Rs. 480 has been paid off by the application of Rs. 80 a year out of the income and at the same time by his failure to pay the Rs. 60 a year to the mortgagor the mortgagee has Rs. 480 out of the income from the mortgaged property in his hands. It appears to me almost absurd to suggest that in such circumstances the mortgagee could say:

> "The mortgage debt still remains to the extent of Rs. 480. I have got the mortgagor's money to that amount in my hands; but I intend to keep that entirely separate."

It has been suggested that the mortgagee could do that, because he could have got the Rs. 60 a year in his hands not in accordance with the terms of the contract between the parties but in violation of the terms. Surely, we cannot allow a party to plead his own wrong in that way. In my opinion it is clear on principle that, when the mortgagee has paid himself the mortgage debt out of the mortgaged property in his possession, he cannot maintain that the mortgage is still in force. That principle is recognized in S. 62-A, T. P. Act, and it was enforced in Jaijit v. Gobind Tewari (3). That case is interesting because it enforced the principle in circumstances somewhat more marked than those of the present case. In that case, the income of the property was to be applied by the mortgagee to the payment of the interest on the mortgage debt except a certain amount which he was to pay every year for the mortgagor's purposes. The principle of the mortgage debt was to be paid by the mortgagor only in one lump sum. The mortgagees failed to apply the part to the income which he was bound under the contract to have applied to the mortgagor's purposes, and the Court held, that that part of the income which was the mortgagor's money and which the mortgagee had kept in his hands instead of applying to the mortgagor's purposes, must be adjusted against the principal of the mortgage debt, even though according to the contract the principal could only be paid off in one lump sum. If the proper principle is that the mortgagor's money which the mortgagee retained in his hands in that way must be applied to reduce the mortgage debt even in such a case as that, much more must it be so applied in a case where there is no stipulation that the principal can be paid only in one lump sum but it is to be paid out of the income of the mortgaged property. The decision in Jaijitraj v. Gobind Tewari (3) has never been overruled, nor has dissent ever been expressed from it.

Now does the fact that in this case a term of 55 years is mentioned make any difference in the application of this principle? We are not concerned in this case with any question of redemption, because in this transaction the mortgagor could never redeem by paying the balance of the mortgage debt to the mortgagee; his right was only to recover possession when the mortgage debt was satisfied. For myself I doubt whether in these documents, Exs. A and B, any term of years in the strict sense was really intended. I doubt whether the meaning is more than that the Rs. 4,400 was to be paid off out of the income of the property at the rate of Rs. 80 a year and so would be cleared of in 55 years ending with Siddarti. But, even, if the mention of the term of 55 years ending with Siddarti means more than that, how does it really affect the mortgagee's position in the circumstances that have arisen? If the amount of the mortgagor's money which the mortgagee retained in his hands has to be adjusted against the mortgage debt then at a time long before the expiry of the 55 years the mortgage debt must have been satisfied. From that time, until the end of the 55 years in what capacity would the mortgagee claim to remain in possession? Obviously not as a mortgagee to whom any part of the mortgage debt was still due. I think the result of that is, that, if this transaction is a mortgage and nothing else, the Rs. 60 must clearly be adjusted as it fell due against the mortgage debt until it was discharged and that the plaintiff must be held to have been entitled to recover possession from the date on which the debt was so discharged.

There appear to me to be only two ways in which the defendants could modify or get out of that result. If it were permissible, as it is not permissible for them to represent that, although the parties entered in the documents Rs. 4,400 as the amount of the principal and interest and agreed that that should be paid off by taking Rs. 80 out of the income of the property which they took for purposes of the transaction at a conventional and fixed sum of Rs. 240 a year, they really knew that the income of the property would be much more than that as indeed it is admitted before us it has turned out to be, and that they intended that the total of the mortgage debt, principal and interest, should be more than Rs. 4,400 then they might be able to say that, even when the Rs. 60 had been adjusted as I have suggested, there would still be more due to them and that the debt had not really been discharged. But it is obviously not permissible for them to say in the face of the documents that the real transaction was for some larger amount than Rs. 4,400 that the real principal and interest together were something more than Rs. 4,400 though that would only include interest at the comparatively low rate of 2 per cent. If they cannot say that, then the only other way in which they can avoid the result indicated is by showing that this transaction was or included a lease. It cannot be contended and Mr. Lakshmanna has not seriously contended that the transaction did not include a mortgage. The very language of the documents precludes any such contention. But Mr. Lakshmanna has contended that here we have a mortgage which partakes of the nature of a lease. For myself I think that in this country that form of language is only likely to lead to confusion. We can have a transaction which is a mortgage and have a transaction which is a lease; we can, have a transaction which is a mortgage and also a lease, as in the case of a Malabar kanam. But I do not think that in this country there is any real profit or use in speaking of a mortgage as partaking of the nature of a lease, as if we could have a mortgage with a tinge or flavour of a lease in it. What we have to find out is, whether the transaction included a lease. Mr. Lakshmanna has drawn attention to the fact that in Ex. A the document is described as a cowle. "Cowle" is a word which may be used for a lease but may be used for other transactions. Mr. Lakshmanna has also pointed out that in the early part of Ex. A there is mention of the rent of the property as being Rs. 240 a year. But nothing can be got from that, because that is only a statement showing the income which the mortgagor was getting when he was in possession. If we are to find that this transaction includes a lease, we must ask "where is the rent?" Ordinarily there will be rent either paid in advance as a premium or reserved to be paid periodically. Now the Rs. 4,400 cannot possibly be represented to be a premium, because it is decsribed as a debt to be repaid. Then, apart from that the only amount which could be represented to be rent is the Rs. 60 a year to be paid to the mortgagor. That is not described as rent, and, when we remember the provision that, if the Rs. 60 a year is not paid to the mortgagor, he may recover one-fourth of the property and keep it in his possession, it is obvious that Rs. 60 also was not rent. If it were, we should get the curious result that the lessor might recover one-fourth of the property from the lessee, if the rent was not paid, and then the lessee would be able to keep the whole of the remaining three-fourths in his possession without any rent being due from him.

I think it is quite clear that this transaction does not include a lease. I may remark that, even if it were definitely called a lease, that would not be conclusive in the matter as is shown by Brij-Kumar Lal v. Magli Sahai (4), and other cases which deal with what are called zuripeshgi leases in Bengal.

Mr. Lakshmanna has also laid stress upon the special provision by which the mortgagor could recover a quarter of the property if the sum of Rs. 60 is not paid to him in any year, and he contended in one part of his argument that that was the only remedy which the mortgagor had if the Rs. 60 was not paid. I think it is quite clear that that provision only gave the mortgagor an option to recover a quarter of the property if he wished. That did not affect the position and liability of the mortgagee in respect of Rs. 60 if he did not pay it to the mortgagor and the mortgagor did not choose to exercise that option.

So far I have referred only to the Rs. 60 a year, which had to be paid to the mortgagor. Under Ex. A, the mortgagor has also to pay Rs. 95 a year as kattubadi to the zamindar. It is represented for the plaintiff that for several years more than 20 years ago the mortgagee did not pay that to the zamindar and that he himself was forced by decrees of Court to pay it. That amount of kattubadi, which he had to pay, he wishes also to set off by adjustment against the mortgage debt. It is clear that the mortgagor is not concerned with any kattubadi not paid by the mortgagee to the zemindar unless he himself was forced to pay it or is still liable to pay it. He is certainly not still liable to pay anything to the zamindar on that account for the years mentioned, and, if he wishes to recover by adjustment against the mortgage debt any kattubadi by himself, he must prove that he had to pay it. He has not troubled to produce the decree under which he says he was forced to pay kattubadi for six years; and the only evidence which he has produced, Ex. E series, though it shows that he had to pay certain amounts under decrees, larger than the amount of the kattubadi in the years concerned, does not show that it was the kattubadi on this land, with which we are concerned, that he had then to pay. I agree that he has not made out his case that he had to pay kattubadi to the zamindar on this land.

I agree that Rs. 60 a year from the date of the plaintiff's purchase should be adjusted against the mortgage debt with interest at two per cent per annum as proposed by my learned brother. On the question how the account between the parties should be taken after the mortgage debt is found to have been discharged in that way, I am not prepared to dissent from that view that it is only Rs. 240 a year minus the kattubadi and the village payment (making Rs. 100 a year in all) which should be credited to the plaintiff at six per cent per annum until the date when he demanded possession. Mr. Varadachariar has contended that from the date when the mortgage debt was discharged, the mortgagor is entitled to the full profits of the property (minus of course the kattubadi and the village payments) on the ground that, when the mortgage debt was cleared off, the mortgage transaction had come to an end. As I have said in one sense it is quite clear that the mortgage transaction had come to an end at that point of time. But it cannot be said that the relation between the mortgagor and the mortgagee had entirely ended with that discharge or that the mortgage transaction left no result behind it. Certainly as there was no demand from the plaintiff for recovery of possession until 1913, it cannot be said that the mortgagee's possession from the date of discharge to 1913 was wrongful or that it was adverse to the mortgagor. And it is only in his position as mortgagor that the plaintiff has the longer period of 60 years under the law of limitation to recover possession.

I think we can properly say, that, as the mortgagee's possession originated in the mortgage and remained in a sense that of a mortgagee, until there was a demand for recovery from the mortgagor, the conventional income, which the parties had agreed between themselves should remain in force as the income of the property to save them the trouble of accounting, should be considered to remain in force until there was a demand for recovery. After that date of course, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the full profits of the property until the date on which possession was given. I agree therefore in all respects with the order proposed by my learned brother.

Pynda Venkatachalapati Garu—Plaintiff—Appellant.

v.

Pynda Ramakrishnayya and others—Defendants—Respondents.

Appeal No. 248 of 1924, Decided on 4th April 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, Cocanada, in Original Suit No. 13 of 1923.

(a) Contract Act, S. 251—Contract with firm—Promissory note evidencing contract signed by partner in his own name—All partners are liable—Promisee should be allowed to adduce evidence as to alleged contract—Evidence Act, S. 92 Proviso (2).

Where there is a contract with the partnership and a promissory note signed by a partner in his own name and not in the name of the partnership, as evidence of such contract, all the partners will be liable. The principle that only the maker of the promissory note can be held liable thereunder is not applicable in a case where an independent contract is alleged and, therefore, the promisee can be allowed to adduce evidence as to the independent contract: A. I. R. 1914 P. C. 132 and 40 Mad. 727, Rel. on; 7 Cal. 256 and A.I.R. 1913 P C. 146 Ref.; 25 Mad. 580, Doubted. [P 170 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 6, R. 17—Suit on promissory note signed by one partner in his name only—Creditor contending to hold all partners liable — No clear indication in plaint whether creditor based his suit on independent liability—Amendment of plaint was allowed by High Court.

A suit was brought by a creditor to recover two loans given to a firm of four brothers. For each of the loans a promissory note was executed by the 3rd partner alone which he signed in his own name and not in the name of the partnership. It was contended for the creditor that as the loans were given to the partnership, the other three partners were also liable for their amount. The plaint was not worded so as to indicate clearly that the creditor based his suit not only on the promissory notes but on the independent liability. No question of amending it was raised in the lower Court because the Subordinate Judge held that because the promissory note had been executed for the loans by the 3rd partner, it was not open to the creditor to base his claim on any other cause of action.

Held: that in the circumstances the creditor may properly be allowed an opportunity to amend his plaint. [P 172 C 1]

T. R. Ramachandra Iyer and S. Srinivasa Iyer—for Appellant.

S. Varadachariar—for Respondents.

Phillips, J.—This suit is brought by the plaintiff to recover two loans given to a firm of four brothers, defendants 1 to 4. For each of the loans a promissory note was executed by defendant 3 alone which he signed in his own name and not in the name of the partnership. On the promissory notes therefore defendant 3 can alone be held liable; but it is contended for the plaintiff appellant that as the loans were given to the partnership, the other three partners will also be liable for their amount. The plaint is not worded so as to indicate clearly that the plaintiff bases his suit not only on the promissory notes but on the independent liability of the partnership, but it is I think capable of such interpretation; no question of amending it was raised in the lower Court because the Subordinate Judge held that because the promissory notes had been executed for the loans by defendant 3, it was not open to the plaintiff to base his claim on any other cause of action.

One of the earliest cases in which this question was considered is Sheik Akbar v. Sheik Khan (1). There it was held that, when the original cause of action is the bill or note itself, and does not exist independently of it, there is no cause of action for money lent, or otherwise than upon the note itself, for the note is the only contract between the parties. If realy there is no independent cause of action, this decision that the note alone can be sued upon must be accepted and has been accepted in many cases since it was propounded. The appellant, however, relies on the case in Karmali Abdulla v. Karimji Jwanji (2), in which the Privy Council held that that one partner could he held liable upon hundis drawn by another partner when the transaction for which the hundis were drawn was a partnership transaction. In that case the suit was not based upon the hundis but upon the account between the parties, of which the hundis formed one item. In Shunmuganatha Chettiar v. Srinivasa Iyer (3) a Bench of this Court held on the strength of the above case that in a suit on a promissory note executed by two out of the three partners of a firm for money advanced for purposes of the firm the third partner was also liable. If this latter decision is correct, the plaintiff's contention that he has a cause of action against the other partners, defendants 1 and 2 and 4 must succeed.

It is, however, argued for the respondent that the case in Shunmuganatha Chettiar v. Srinivasa Iyer (3), goes beyond the case in Karmali Abdulla v. Karimji Jivanji (2), and is not good law. Even in the case in Sheik Akbar v. Sheik Khan (1), it was recognized that, where there was a cause of action independent of the note, resort could be had to that cause of action; and in this Court it has been held that, where the note has been executed by the Manager of a Malabar tavazhi, the other members of the family or the tavazhi are liable: Krishna Iyer v. Krishnaswami Iyer (4) and Thankammal v. Kunhanna (5). The Subordinate Judge has distinguished these cases as being cases governed by Hindu Law and has held that they are the only exceptions to the rule that the maker of a promissory note alone is liable thereon. This is quite true if there is no alternative cause of action, but in Sadasuk Janki Das v. Kishan Pershad (6), the Privy Council while holding that the principal could not be made liable on a promissory note which was not signed in his name, remarked that the plaintiffs in that case could:

"had they thought it fit to have framed their case in an alternative form and have sued both on the hundis and alternatively upon the consideration."

In that case the money was lent to the Maharaja Sir Kishan Pershad Bahadur, defendant 1, through his agent, Mohan Lal, defendant 2, and the suit was brought upon the hundi alone, and it was held that, as the alternative relief had not been put forward in Courts below, the plaintiff's suit as against defendant 1 must fail because he was not liable under the hundi itself. In the present case, if the plaintiff really entered into a contract with the partnership that is clearly a contract which is independent of the contract evidenced by the promissory notes, because in those notes the contract was one between the plaintiff and defendant 3 alone whereas the other was a contract between the plaintiff and the partnership of which defendant 3 was a member.

In Darguvarapu Sarrapu v. Rampratapu (7), where a promissory note was given by one partner for the price of goods sold to the partnership, it was held that the other partners were liable. In principle there would appear to be no distinction between money to be paid for the price of goods and money to be paid for repayment of a loan; if that is so, in this case the partnership would be liable to the plaintiff. There appears to me to be no reason why the liability incurred by members of a joint family under the Hindu Law in respect of a promissory note should be put upon any different footing to the liability incurred by the partners of a firm under S. 251, Contract Act; but the language of their Lordships in Sadasuk Janki Das v. Kishan Pershad (6) at p. 668 (of 46 Cal.) very clearly indicates the view that no liability attaches under a promissory note unless such liability is expressly recited. Possibly, therefore, Darguvarapu Sarrapu v. Rampratapu (7), requires reconsideration. However, it is, unnecessary to discuss the question now, for the cause of action may be based on the contract independent of the promissory note.

In that event the real question at issue is not whether the firm benefited by the transaction, but whether the firm did enter into the contract. If the plaintiff can show that there was a contract with the partnership and the promissory note was merely evidence of such contract, all the partners would appear to be liable. The principle that only the maker of the promissory note can be held liable thereunder is not applicable in a case like this where an independent contract is alleged. I think, therefore, that the Subordinate Judge ought not to have refused to allow the plaintiff to adduce evidence as to this independent contract. I would, therefore, allow plaintiff to amend his plaint and after the amendment is approved the suit will be remanded for fresh disposal in ths light of the above remarks.

Costs in this Court will abide the result of the suit.

Reilly, J.—The promissory notes on which the plaintiff sues in this case have not been translated; but it is admitted that there is no word in them to indicate or suggest that the plaintiff in lending the amounts mentioned in them, was dealing with any one but defendant 3, who executed the notes. Whatever may have been the relations of defendant 3 to the other defendants at the dates when he made these notes, on no fair, nor even possible, interpretation of the notes themselves could it be held that any person but defendant 3 was liable on them. Mr. Ramachandra Iyer does not suggest that an undisclosed principal can be held liable on a promissory note executed by his agent; but he contends that a person to whom no reference whatever is made in a promissory note executed by his partner may be held liable on the note. His argument is that, though under S. 27, Negotiable Instruments Act, an agent must act in his principal's name when making a promissory note, if he is to bind his principal by the note, that section has no application to partners, whose liabilities for each other's acts are regulated by S. 251, Contract Act. I see no basis for the contention. Under S. 251, Contract Act, a partner can bind his copartners to the same extent as if he was their agent and no further. If such a contention as Mr. Ramachandra Iyer's was ever possible, it is not possible after the language used by the Privy Council in Sadasuk Janki Das v. Kishan Pershad (6):

> "It is of the utmost importance that the name of a person or firm to be charged upon a negotiable document should be clearly stated on the face or on the back of the document, so that the responsibility is made plain and can be instantly recognized as the document passes from hand to hand."

There is no distinction in this respect between what is necessary to make it clear that a firm is bound by a promissory note made by one of its partners and what is necessary to make it clear that a principal is bound by a promissory note made by his agent. I agree that on the promissory notes in this suit the plaintiff can get a decree against no one but defendant 3, and that he has got.

But it is further contended that the plaintiff could get a decree against all the defendants as partners on the consideration for the promissory notes, that is on the loans made to the firm represented by defendant 3 in the transactions. That is so, if it is proved that that the loans were made to the firm and if the pleadings are sufficient to support such a case. I do not think it is of any profit now to discuss the old question whether, when a promissory note has been executed for a certain amount. a suit can be based on the consideration only if the consideration has been antecedent to the execution of the note or that can be done also when the consideration and the note are contemporaneous. That question appears to me to have been concluded by the case which I have already mentioned: Sadasuk Janki Das v. Kishan Pershad (6). In that case it is stated in the judgment of the Privy Council that "it would, of course, have been open to the plaintiffs, had they thought fit, to have framed their case in an alternative form and to have sued both on the hundis and alternatively upon the consideration."

There the execution of the hundis and the making of the loan were contemporaneous. In this part of the case Mr. Varadachariar for defendants 1, 2 and 4 suggested in his turn that there was a distinction in this matter between suing a principal on a loan made to his agent acting within authority for him and suing a firm on a loan made to them represented by one of the partners. There again in my opinion no distinction can properly be drawn. If when an agent takes a loan for his principal but executes a promissory note for the amount which does not disclose that the borrower is his principal, the lender can sue the agent on the note and alternatively the principal, on the loan, I see no reason, why, when the loan is made to a firm but a promissory note is taken from one of the partners, which does not disclose that any one but he is liable on it, the lender should not sue the partner on the note which he has made and alternatively the firm on the loan itself. It appears to me to make no difference in this matter that the agent is a different person from his principal, while the partner is included in the persons forming his firm. But, if the firm is to be made liable in such a suit the lender must not only allege and prove that the loan was really taken for his firm by the partner who made the promissory note but must base the suit on the loan to the firm. Although we have not got the full plaint in Sadasuk Janki Das v. Kishan Pershad (6) before us, it is instructive to notice that the report shows that in that plaint it was alleged that the money was borrowed by

"defendant 2 who executed the hundis for and on behalf of and as agent of defendant 1 (his principal); but nevertheless the plaint was confined in the opinion of their Lordships to an action brought on the hundis themselves. That shows that if the suit is to be based on the note and alternatively on the consideration, it is not enough to allege that the loan was taken for the principal or the firm. In the present case the suit is obviously upon the promissory notes. Is it also or alternatively on the consideration? In connexion with each note the plaint states that defendant 3 borrowed the amount

"for the trade carried on by the defendants as Paida & Co.

In para. 7 it is stated that "demand for the repayment of the principal and interest due on the two promissory notes was made by the plaintiff."

and in para. 8 it is stated that

"the cause of action for this suit arose on 11th April 1920 and 17th August 1920 the dates of the two promissory notes."

With great respect it is quite impossible in my opinion to get out of those statements any averment that the loans were made to the firm of which defendant 3 was a partner or any allegation that the plaintiff has or bases his suit upon an alternative cause of action against the firm. The plaint also contains a statement that the defendants, that is the firm, repaid Rs. 100 towards the second promissory note; but repayment of part of the debt by parties not liable on the notes cannot make them liable on the notes or on the consideration. I have no wish to insist on technicalities of pleadings to the detriment of any party. But it is the duty of a plaintiff to make clear to the Court and to his opponent what his alleged cause of action is. In my opinion only by torturing the language of the plaint in this case or by an effort of the imagination can we say that the plaintiff intended to sue the defendants alternatively on the loan to the firm. Nor could we do so without implicitly criticizing the opinion expressed by the Privy Council of the plaint before them in Sadasuk Janki Das v, Kishan Pershad (6). I have no doubt that, when presenting his plaint, the plaintiff was under the impression that he could sue all the defendants on the promissory notes themselves, as was contended for him before us. But that was undoubtedly a mistake. On the plaint as it stands, although I do not agree with all his opinions or reasoning in my opinion the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge was right.

But in the circumstances I think the plaintiff may properly be allowed an opportunity to amend his plaint. I agree that we should give him a short adjournment in which he may, if he wishes, amend his plaint so as to make it clear that he is alternatively suing all the defendants as members of a firm or loans made to that firm. If he makes the amendment, I would set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and remand the suit to him for fresh disposal on the amended plaint, the costs of this appeal in that event to abide and allow the result of the suit at the new trial. (After allowing the amendment, their Lordships remanded the suit for fresh disposal).

Appeal No. 76 of 1925, Decided on 19th April 1929, from order of Sub-Judge, Naraspur, in Appeal Suit No. 32 of 1923.

Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 11—Wrong mention of defendants' names does not render application invalid.

Plaintiff obtained decrees in two mortgage suits. They were against two different sets of defendants called A and B in first suit and C and D in second suit. When the plaintiff applied for execution of the decree in suit against A and B, in stead of giving the names of defendants as A and B, he gave them, as C and D.

Judgment.—The point I have to decide is whether the execution petition No. 1066 of 1921 is in time or not. There were certain previous execution applications filed. The question is, whether they were in accordance with law within the meaning of Art. 182, Lim. Act. The present petition was filed within three years of the last of the previous petitions, but it is contended for the respondent that those petitions are defective and cannot, therefore, be taken into account for the purpose of the statute.

The facts are these: The plaintiff obtained decrees in two mortgage suits. They were against two different sets of defendants. Let us call them A and B in the first suit, C and D in the second. The suits related to different sets of properties. We are now concerned with what I may call the suit against A and B. The defect alleged in the previous petitions arose thus. When the plaintiff applied for execution of the decree in that suit, he gave the names of the defendants wrongly, that is to say, instead of giving their names as A and B, he gave them as C and D. That the mistake was bona fide cannot possibly be doubted. The learned Subordinate Judge thinks that the question of good faith has no bearing at all on the point to be decided. In this, he is entirely mistaken. With each of the execution petitions, the plaintiff filed a copy of the decree and it is not disputed that the copy so filed was of the right decree. The description of the properties was also correctly given. The Court clerk, by comparing the execution petition with the copy of the decree filed, could have at once discovered the mistake. As it turned out, the mistake was not discovered. As the petitions were dismissed in initial stages, even notices were not taken out against the defendants. Does this mistake prevent the previous applications from being in accordance with law? The decided cases show clearly that the appellant's contention must prevail. Where execution was applied for, the name of the deceased defendant being wrongly mentioned, that was held to be in accordance with law: Samia Pillai v. Chokkalinga Chettiar (1). When the plaintiff applied for a relief not granted by the decree, it was held that the defect did not render the application invalid: Rajam Aiyar v. Anantharatnam (2). When execution was applied for against original defendants, although in the meantime the mortgaged property passed to third parties, the Court held that the application was in accordance with law: Parakkat Devaswom v. Venkatachellam Vadhyar (3). I shall cite a passage from the judgment of Muthuswami Aiyar and Best, JJ., in Samia Pillai v. Chokkalinga Chettiar (1), the first of the three cases mentioned above:

"Where there has been in fact an application for execution made by the party entitled to make it, the mere fact of a mistake having been made in giving the particulars required by S. 235, Civil P. C., cannot, we think, have the effect of rendering the application a nullity."

With this proposition I entirely agree. The order of the lower Court is set aside and the appeal is allowed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 538 of 1925, Decided on 11th September 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, Masulipatam, in Appal Suit No. 8 of 1924.

(a) Limitation Act, Art. 120—In cases where fraud is proved time begins to run when fraud is known to plaintiff—Even to suits falling under Art. 120 same principle applies.

In cases in which the relief is sought on the ground of fraud, misconduct, mistake, etc., it would appear that limitation is made to commence from the time when the fraud, misconduct or mistake becomes known to the plaintiff. Art. 120 being an omnibus one, the general expression employed in Col. 3, is necessitated by a variety of suits not specifically provided for coming within its purview, in some of which there would be fraud, misconduct, or mistake as part of the cause of action, but in the rest that element would be absent. It would thus be in consonance with the scheme of the Act, dealing with suits on a cause of action consisting of fraud, misconduct, etc., if the right to sue should be deemed to accrue under Art. 120, from the time of the plaintiff's knowledge of the same even in respect of suits based on similar grounds coming under that article: 7 *L. (b) Limitation Act, Art. 120—Decree passed against minor through negligence and misconduct of guardian ad litem—Time runs against minor when he comes to know of misconduct.

Where in a suit falling under Art. 120, the cause of action is not merely the passing of an adverse decree against the minor, but in addition to it the fact that such a decree was passed by reason of the misconduct or gross negligence of his guardian ad litem, limitation should not begin to run the moment the decree was passed, but only when gross negligence of the guardian which alone would entitle the minor to have the decree set aside, became known to him. Judgment.—The suit out of which this second appeal has arisen, was filed by the plaintiff for declaration that the decree obtained by defendant 1 in O. S. No. 86 of 1913 on the file of the District Munsiff's Court, Masulipatam. is invalid as against him, and for an injunction restraining defendant 1 from executing that decree as against him (plaintiff) or his property. In that suit, the present plaintiff who was then a minor was impleaded as a defendant, represented by the present defendant 3 as his guardian ad litem.

Both the Courts below have found that the guardian ad litem was guilty of gross negligence in the conduct of that suit by omitting to set up an important plea, which was available as a ground of attack against the then plaintiff's claim. No attempt has been made to challenge this finding.

The question argued before us is one of limitation. It is admitted on both sides that this suit is governed by Art. 120, Limitation Act, but the dispute is as to the starting point for limitation. This is a residuary article, for all suits which cannot be brought under one or other of the specific articles. It provides a period of six years from the time when the right to sue accrues. The starting point is prescribed in general terms, and this expression may be taken to mean, when the cause of action arises. The cause of action would comprise the facts which have necessarily to be proved in order to entitle the plaintiff to the relief asked for by him in a particular usit. In the present case the mere fact, that a decree was passed in O. S. No. 86 of 1913 as against the present plaintiff is not enough to entitle him to the relief asked for, but he must make out, that his guardian ad litem suffered such a decree to be passed against him, on account of gross negligence. The decree in that suit was passed on 27th October 1913. This plaintiff attained majority on 5th February 1916 and the present suit was instituted on 19th December 1921. The lower appellate Court has found, that that the plaintiff came to know of the decree in question in or about March 1921. If it should be held that the date of the decree is the starting point of limitation, the suit is barred under Art. 120 and even S. 8 of the Act is of no avail to plaintiff, the suit having been filed more than three years after his attaining majority. If the right to sue should be deemed to have accrued when all the facts constituting the cause of action became known to plaintiff, the suit would be within time.

In cases in which the relief is sought on the ground of fraud, misconduct, mistake, etc., it would appear that limitation is made to commence from the time when the fraud, misconduct, or mistake becomes known to the plaintiff, c. g.: vide Arts. 90, 91, 92, 95, 96 and 114. Under Arts. 91 and 114, limitation would begin to run from the time when the facts entitling the plaintiff to the relief asked for become known to him. Art. 120, being an omnibus one, the general expression employed in Col. 3, is necessitated by a variety of suits (not specifically provided for) coming within its purview, in some of which there would be fraud, misconduct, or mistake as part of the cause of action but in the rest, that element would be absent. It would thus be in consonance with the scheme of the Act, as indicated by such specific articles referred to above, dealing with suits based on a cause of action consisting of fraud, misconduct, etc., if the right to sue should be deemed to accrue under Art. 120, from the time of the plaintiff's knowledge of the same even in respect of suits based on similar grounds coming under that article. This is the view expressed by Phillips, J. in Venkateswara Ayyar v. Somasundaram Chattiar (1), at p. 283. The decisions of this High Court in Mambi v. Kunhi Pakki Haji (2), and Viswanathan v. Narayan Das (3), seem to be in favour of the plaintiff's contention. In the former case the declaration sought for was in respect of a sale for the purpose of enforcing the plaintiff's right of pre-emption. It was held that the starting point of limitation under Art. 120 was not the date of the sale but the time when the plaintiff became aware of the terms of the sale which would enable him to exercise his right. In the latter case also the date of the alienation by a trustee was not taken as the starting point but the time when the plaintiff came to know of the fraud, which was the ground on which the alienation was attacked. A different view was taken in the case reported in Ottapurakal Tazhathe Soopi v. Cherchial Pollikkal Upathumma (4), where the plaintiff sued for a declaration that the alienation by a karnavan was not binding on the tarwad. The learned Judges in that case held that the right to sue accrued on the date of sale deed itself and not when the plaintiff obtained knowledge of the sale. But there seems to have been no element of fraud urged in that case as part of the cause of action. If the sale was attacked as having been brought about by fraud, which would constitute at least a part of the cause of action, the right to sue would accrue, when the fraud became known to the plaintiff. The case in Ottapurakkal v. Upathumma (4) has been distinguished in this way in the decision in Viswanadhan v. Narayan Das (3). The decision in Venkatachella Reddiar v. Collector of Trichinopoly (5) is distinguishable for the aforesaid reason.

Where in a suit falling under Art. 120, the cause of action as in the persent case, is not merely the passing of an adverse decree against the plaintiff but in addition to it, the fact that such a decree was passed by reason of the misconduct or gross negligence of his guardian ad litem, it stands to reason, that limitation should not begin to run. the moment the decree was passed, but only when the gross neligence of the guardian which alone would entitle the plaintiff to have the decree set aside, became known to him. In this view, the plaintiff's suit should be held to be not barred under Art. 120. In the re-

Second Appeal No. 1489 of 1925, Decided on 18th April 1929, against decree of Second Additional Sub-Judge, Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 36 of 1924.

(a) Hindu Law — Widow—Survivorship—Partition among co-widows of husband's property—Co-widows dealing with respective shares as absolute owners—Rights of survivorship held to be given up by each of co-widows under partition.

After the death of the husband, his property was divided by an oral partition between two co-widows. Ever since that partition each of the co-widows had been dealing with the properties that fell to her share as if she took the same with absolute rights under the partition. At a time when no dispute arose whether right of survivorship was given up by the widows each widow executed sale deeds with reference to property that fell to her share, specifically purporting to confer absolute title to the alienees using the vernacular expression ordinarily in use to connote the idea of conferring absolute rights on the alienees.

Held: that the partition was absolute and that rights of survivorship had been given up by each of the co-widows under such a partition arrangement: 3 M. H. C. R. 268, Foll.; A. I. R. 1919 *P. Judgment. — Chokkalingam Pillai died about 35 years ago leaving no issue, and on his death two widows, Valliammai and Minakshiayi, inherited his properties. The two widows sold certain properties belonging to the estate to pay off the debts incurred by their husband Chokkalingam Pillai, and afterwards they entered into an oral partition by which each got about nine kulies of land; old survey No. 46-C was among the properties thus divided by them. And in that partition Valliammai got the western half of this survey number, while Meenakshiayi, defendant 5 in the suit, got the eastern half of this survey number. Valliammai alienated the western half of survey No. 46-C to the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title from whom the plaintiff purchased the same. Valliammai died in 1916. The plaintiff as purchaser of Valliammai's right in the western moiety of survey No. 46-C, instituted the original suit for possession of the same from defendants 1 to 4 who were let into possession by the plaintiff's vendor. Defendant 5, Meenakshiayi, put forward her right to possession of the western half on the death of her co-widow Valliammai, and she executed a lease deed in favour of defendant 1 in respect of the said western portion.

The dispute between the parties centered on the question whether on the death of Valliammai, defendant 5 was entitled to possession of the suit properties. This again depended on the question as to the exact effect of the oral partition entered into between the two widows, Valliammai and defendant 5 in or about 1894.

The District Munsif dismissed the suit, holding that it was not proved to his satisfaction that Valliammai and defendant 5 divided their husbands' properties with absolute right of ownership and precluding the rights of survivorship inter se.

On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge disagreed with the finding of the District Munsif, and came to the conclusion that "the two widows orally divided their husband's properties with absolute rights as against each and that therefore defendant 5 had relinquished her right of survivorship by the said partition."

He accordingly reversed the District Munsif's decree and granted a decree in the plaintiff's favour and directed the defendant to surrender 46-C.

Defendant 5, the co-widow, has preferred the second appeal.

On her behalf it was contended by the learned advocate Mr. Patanjali Sastri, that having regard to the admitted fact that the partition between the two co-widows was an oral one, and having regard to the statement in the 8th Edn. of 1914 of Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 554 at p. 777 to the effect :

"Where several widows hold an estate jointly, or whether one holds as manager for the others, each has a right to her proportionate share of the produce of the properties, and of the benefits derivable from its enjoyment and the widows may be placed in possession of separate portions of the properties, either by agreement among themselves or by decree of Court . . . . . But no partition can be effected between them, whether by consent or by adverse decree, which would convert the joint estate into an estate in severalty, and put an end to the right of survivorship."

it must be taken to be clear that the oral partition of 1894 between the co-widows must be taken to be one merely for convenient management and that no idea of giving up right of survivorship ever entered into the minds of the parties at that time. Before considering this argument of the appellant, it would be convenient to examine the reasons given by the lower Courts for arriving at the findings. Issue 3 framed in the suit was:

"whether Valliammai and defendant 5 divided their husband's properties with absolute rights of ownership and if so whether such a division is valid in law."

In considering this issue the District Munsif observed as follows :

"the first point for determination is whether at the partition between Valliammai and defendant 5, the latter consented to give up her rights of survivorship in her co-widow's properties. In other words, whether Valliammai had absolute rights of alienation over the suit properties."

After noting that there was no direct evidence on this point as to what happened at the partition he proceeded to consider the recitals in Ex. 8 of 1899, C of 1890 (both executed by Valliammai), and in Exs. K of 1901, and 1 of 1908 (executed by defendant 5), by which the co-widows alienated portions of properties that fell to them in the partition. These sale deeds recite that :

"the vendees are to enjoy the properties absolutely from generation to generation."

In answer to the plaintiff's contention that these recitals in document executed by the two co-widows after the partition, and at a time when there was no dispute between them as to whether they had parted with their rights of survivorship as against each other, would prove that the partition between the two widows was absolute and without the existence of rights of survivorship in each other, the learned District Munsif observed as follows :

"It seems to me that no importance can be attached to the casual recitals contained in these exhibits. These recitals are ordinary ones which we meet with in all sale deeds. They might have been written, in my opinion, without intending that any speccial significance should attach to them. At any rate I am of opinion that in the absence of direct evidence as to what took place at the partition between these widows or of any deed containing the consent of the widows to release their rights of survivorship, it is not safe to draw any conclusion in favour of such release from the recitals in these sale deeds. I therefore find that the plaintiff has not made out that Valliammai and defendant 5 took their share in their husband's properties with full rights of ownership."

He, however, went further, and in para. 11 of his judgment held :

"granting for the sake of argument that these widows took their shares with absolute rights according to the decision in Ramakkal v. Ramaswami Naicken (1), an alienation by either of the widows which is to enure beyond the life time of the surviving co-widow is not valid in law. I therefore find issue 3 against the plaintiff."

On plaintiff's appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge as already observed, held that :

"the two widows orally divided their husband's properties with absolute rights as against each other" and therefore :

"defendant 5 has relinquished her right of survivorship by the said partition."

Referring to the sale deeds Exs. S, K, and C and I executed by the two co-widows with the recitals referred to already, the learned Subordinate Judge observed as follows :

"we see from the aforesaid four sale deeds that both the widows executed the sale deeds purporting to confer absolute right to their alienees."

He then proceeded to consider Ex. 2 dated 1st March 1926 by which defendant 5 leased to defendant 1 the western half of survey No. 46-C, (i.e., the suit property) wherein it is mentioned that the same fell to the share of Valliammai and on Valliammai's death without heirs, the executant, defendant 5, got the same. The Subordinate Judge remarked with reference to Ex. 2 :

"the aforesaid description involves the admission that if Valliammai had left any heir, the latter would have got the lands in preference to defendant 5. That seems to imply that in the oral partition entered into between them, there was a stipulation releasing the rights of survivorship of each to the other," and finally he stated as follows :

"apart from what we can gather from the various documents filed in the case, there is no evidence as to whether the partition between the two widows was intended to be absolute as against each other, in other words, whether it contained the provision releasing the right of survivorship in respect of each other (para. 20). . . . Having regard to the language used in defendant 5's lease, Ex. 2, and the four sale deeds referred to above, by which the two widows executed sale deeds purporting to confer absolute title on their alienees, I am inclined to hold that the two widows orally divided their husband's properties with absolute rights as against each, and therefore following the rulings referred to above I hold that defendant 5 has relinquished her right of survivorship by the said partition."

(1) [1899] 22 Mad. 522=9 M. L. J. 101.

The question therefore is whether the learned Subordinate Judge was justified in finding as he did on the basis of the documents referred to above.

I agree with the contention of the learned advocate for the appellant that the onus of proving that the partition that was effected by the co-widows precluded the rights of survivorship in each other is on the person who asserts the same, in this case on the plaintiff, I also agree that the statement in para. 554 of (Mayne's Hindu Law edition of 1914) would prima facie help the appellant's contention. It thus being clear that the onus of proving that the oral partition between the two widows involved the parting with of the rights of survivorship on the part of each of the widows is on the plaintiff, the only question before me is whether the plaintiff has discharged that onus.

In Ramakkal v. Ramaswami Naicken (1), it was held by Subramania Aiyar and Boddam, JJ. :

"where the two co-widows entered into a deed which they called a deed of partition whereby they divided the property between them and each gave the other full power of alienation," that each widow had released her right of survivorship so as to preclude her from recovering from the alienee after the other co-widow's death the property given by way of partition to the latter and alienated by her. In the case reported in Subbammal v. Krishna Iyer (2), Sadasiva Iyer and Spencer, JJ. held that the use of the expressions "santati paramparyamayi" "sarva swathanthra badhayamayi" occurring in such partition deeds between the co-widows is a circumstance from which the intention to give up the right of survivorship may be legitimately inferred. In the case reported in Alamelu Ammal v. Balu Ammal (3), there was an oral partition between three daughters each purporting to take one-third share absolutely, the Court (Sadasiva Iyer and Napier, JJ.), held that the same involved the relinquishment of rights of survivorship on the part of the daughters : see also Immani Ammal v. Periaswami Udayan (4), by Oldfield and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ.

In the present case, no doubt we have no evidence as to what exactly happened at the time of the oral partition of 1894 between two co-widows; but we have the undoubted facts that ever since that partition, each of the co-widows had been dealing with the properties that fell to her share "as if she took the same with absolute rights" under the partition. At a time when no dispute arose whether right of survivorship was given up by the widows, each widow executed sale deeds with reference to property that fell to her share, specifically purporting to confer absolute title to the alienees using the vernacular expression ordinarily in use to connote the idea of conferring absolute rights on the alienees. These sale deeds containing such recitals and also the particular recital in Ex. 2 referred to by the learned Subordinate Judge constitute, in my view, relevant items of evidence available to the Court to come to a conclusion whether the partition between the co-widows was absolute or not. If the partition was absolute then the reported decisions leave no doubt and that rights of survivorship have been given up by each of the co-widows under such a partition arrangement. The decision of the Privy Council reported in Mt. Hardai v. Bugwan Singh (5), seems to support the above view. At p. 109 Viscount Cave observed as follows :

"Further from the time of the arrangement of 1875 until the commencement of this suit, that is to say, for a period of 38 years all the parties to the arrangement, including the plaintiff, dealt as absolute owners of the property allotted to them and to this, with trifling exceptions, no objection was taken by the other parties to the division. In these circumstances, the true inference appears to their Lordships to be that . . . . . the members of the family agreed and arranged among themselves that the whole property should be at once divided among the daughters and their sons then living, the mother surrenderiug her claims and each daughter accepting the property allotted to her in severalty in lieu of the undivided share in the whole estate which would have devolved upon her on her mother's death and abandoning her right of survivorship on the death of either of her sisters. Whether this arrangement is binding on the grandsons cannot be determined in this suit and on that question their Lordships expressed no opinion. But the plaintiff at all events is bound by her own arrangement."

In that case no oral arrangement was come to in 1875 to which the daughters were parties and from 1876 each of the daughters dealt with the property allotted to her on the division as her own absolute property. The Privy Council held, as mentioned already, that the proper inference to be drawn was that each daughter accepted the property allotted to her in severalty in lieu of the undivided share and abandoned her right of survivorship on the death of either of the daughters.

For the above reasons it seems to me that the learned Subordinate Judge was justified in his finding that the original oral partition arrangement between co-widows was such as precluded the fifth defendant the surviving co-widow, from putting forward her right of survivorship with reference to the properties that fell to the senior widow in the partition. That it is open to co-widow to give up the rights of survivorship in such partition of their husband's estate has been laid down as early as 1866: see the decision reported Rindemma v. Venkataramappa (6) at p. 269. The same view has been adopted in the several reported decisions referred to by me already Ramakkal v. Ramaswami Naicken (1), Sudalai Ammal v. Gomati Ammal (7), Subbammal v. Krishna Iyer (2), Alamelu Ammal v. Balu Ammal (3). The decision of the Privy Council in 24 C. W. N. 105 at p. 109 (5) also, it seems to me, supports this view.

The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is therefore right and I accordingly dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 1860 of 1927, Decided on 1st May 1929.

(a) Transfer of Property Act, S. 81—A and B together mortgaging in favour of C—B mortgaging his mortgaged interest to D who had no notice of previous mortgage—D purchasing B's interest—D can marshall B's securities even if he has become purchaser.

Even where the mortgages have culminated in sales, the Court can, on a consideration of equity, extend to the purchaser the right to have the securities, which are properly marshallable, first sold in execution. [P 180 C 1]

A and B holding separate interests, mortgaged together their properties to C. B subsequently mortgaged his mortgaged interest to D who had no notice of the previous mortgage. In a suit brought by C on his mortgage:

Held: that D could marshall the securities of B if, in the mortgage to C, there were other properties than those which were mortgaged to D himself, even when he was not a mortgagee but had become a purchaser of the mortgaged interest: (1916) 1 M. W. N. 265 and A. I. R. 1924 Pat. 450, Rel. on. [P 179 C 2; P 180 C 1]

(b) Transfer of Property Act, S. 81—Subsequent mortgagee cannot be allowed to require properties of any debtor but his own to be first sold—Civil P. C., O. 34, R. 4.

A and B holding separate interests together mortgaged their properties to C. B subsequently mortgaged his interest to D who had no notice of the previous mortgage. A sold his interest to P. In a suit brought by C upon his mortgage:

Held: that D could not require the properties sold to P to be first sold because a subsequent mortgagee could not be allowed to require properties of any but his own debtor to be first sold either by way of marshalling under S. 81, or by way of exercise of discretionary power to control execution sales under O. 34, R. 4, Civil P. C. [P 180 C 1]

Judgment.—The dispute in this case is only about a direction given in the decree of the lower Court that the properties sold to defendant 5 must be brought to sale first and those sold to defendant 4 should be sold, if necessary, afterwards. The appellant is defendant 5 and defendant 4 is the real contesting respondent. The suit was brought upon a mortgage Ex. A dated 15th December 1913 executed by defendants 1 and 2 and one Narayanaswami since deceased mortgaging the properties mentioned in the plaint schedule to the plaintiff. On 5th January 1914 defendant 2 alone, one of the mortgagors mortgaged his interest in item 2 of the properties in the former mortgage to defendant 4 who, it has been held, took the mortgage without notice of the former one. Defendant 4 brought a suit upon his mortgage and after decree bought the mortgaged properties himself by private sale on 26th June 1917. Defendant 5 purchased defendant 1's rights in the mortgaged properties by a sale deed Ex. 3, dated 22nd June 1921. In this suit which was brought by the plaintiff to enforce his mortgage of 15th December 1913, defendants 4 and 5 were the chief contesting defendants. Defendant 4's contention was that he had no notice of the suit mortgage at the time of his own mortgage of January 1914, that the plaintiff had been guilty of fraudulent conduct in not disclosing his mortgage and therefore was not entitled to the priority and that as defendant 2 executed the mortgage to the plaintiff only as surety on behalf of defendant 1, the plaintiff should be directed to recover his amount in the first instance from the share of defendant 1 and his brother, the deceased Narayanasami.

Defendant 5 contended that he was ready and willing to pay off the suit mortgage but did not do so because the mortgagee, plaintiff's father, had died and as regards the liability of the properties inter se, contended that they should be held proportionately liable. Three issues were framed :

(1) Whether the plaintiff's mortgage was genuine and supported by consideration ?

(2) What marshalling rights, if any, defendants 4 and 6 to 9 were entitled to ?

(3) To what relief the plaintiff was entitled ?

On issue 1 the Munsif found that the plaintiff's mortgage was genuine and supported by consideration and on issues 2 and 3 that defendant 2 joined in the suit mortgage as surety for defendant 1 and that though it was clear that on a mortgage like that, the plaintiff could proceed against all or any of the mortgaged properties at his choice it was right as between the defendants themselves to append a direction that the plaintiff should in the first instance proceed against the properties sold by defendant 1 to defendant 5. Defendant 5 appealed and the only question before the Subordinate Judge was whether the direction appended by the District Munsif as to the order in which the property should be sold could be upheld. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the case was not governed by Ss. 81 and 82, T. P. Act, because defendants 4 and 5 relied upon sales in their favour and did not claim as mortgagees. But the learned Judge held that the Court could even in circumstances not justified by those sections make an order under O. 34, R. 4 regulating the order for the sale of the mortgaged property, and founding himself upon the fact that defendant 4 when he took his mortgage in January 1914 had no notice of the plaintiff's mortgage of December 1913 whereas defendant 5 when he took his sale deed in June 1921 had notice of the plaintiff's mortgage, made the same direction which the District Munsif had made. The present appeal is by defendant 5 against that direction.

A great many decisions have been cited during the argument to show that the direction appended by the lower Court to the decree cannot be sustained by Ss. 81, 82 or 56, T. P. Act. It is unnecessary to refer to those decisions because the sections themselves are clear. S. 56 applies only as between a purchaser of one of several properties previously mortgaged and the vendor. This is not that case. Section 81 applies as between mortgagees of the same debtor, the first of whom has got several securities and the second of whom has but some of those securities and advanced loan without notice of the earlier encumbrance. In such a case the later mortgagee is entitled to marshal the securities and to require that the earlier mortgagee shall first proceed against those securities which have not been encumbered in favour of the latter. This is not that case either, except to the extent which I will presently mention. It is this. From the facts stated defendants 1 and 2, who are shown to have been divided from each other prior to the mortgage sued upon, together mortgaged their properties, in which, of course, they must have had their several interests. One of them viz., defendant 2 subsequently mortgaged his interest in one of those items to defendant 4. Stopping there for a moment, it is clear that defendant 4 has no right to marshal the securities against the plaintiff in so far as the plaintiff is a mortgagee from defendant but he is entitled to marshal the securities of his own debtor viz., defendant 2 if in the mortgage to the plaintiff there are other properties than those which were mortgaged to defendant 4. At an early stage of the argument, I suggested that the direction contained in the decree might be right to that extent. The appellant's advocate acceded to it and I think rightly. The respondent's advocate was not content with it; but so far at any rate as concerns defendant 2's property contained in the suit mortgage, if there be any other than those which were mortgaged to defendant 4, it is clear that defendant 4 to the extent to which he was a mortgagee was entitled to marshal them as against the plaintiff. To the extent of defendant 2's own property, the only complication on this topic is that defendant 4 is not the mortgagee himself but has become the purchaser. But there are decisions of which it is only necessary to cite Ramaswami Chetty v. Madura Mill Co. Ltd., (1), and Rajkeshwar Prasad Narain Singh v. Mahommad Khalilul Rahman (2), to show that even where the mortgages have culminated in sales, the Court may on a consideration of equity extend to the purchaser the right to have the securities which are properly marshallable, first sold in execution. To the extent to which the direction in the decree only covers the properties of defendant 2, I do not think that the appeal deserves to succeed.

But defendant 5 is the purchaser from defendant 1 of his interest in the mortgaged property and the main question in this appeal has been whether the direction in the decree can be upheld as against defendant 5 and the properties of which he is the owner. On this point the learned advocate for the respondents has not been able to show me any instance in which a subsequent mortgagee has been allowed to require properties of any but his own debtor to be first sold either by way of marshalling under S. 81 or by way of the exercise of discretionary power to control execution sales under O. 34, R. 4. The other cases cited before me have been cases of either a second mortgagee or a purchaser, subsequent to a second mortgage, of some property from a man who had first mortgaged those and other properties to a third party and either by way of marshalling under S. 81 or by way of regulating sales under O. 34, R. 4, the Court has intervened to order that such other properties of the same debtor should be first proceeded against, whether such direction is contained in the decree itself or whether it should be made during execution. The respondent's learned advocate has asked me to say that there are special equities in this case which justify such an order as has been made against defendant 5 though he does not claim from the same debtor as defendant 4. It was urged that defendant 2 joined in the mortgage deed to the plaintiff only as surety for his co-mortgagor, defendant 1 and that a surety would be entitled to ask the principal debtor to pay off the debt in the first instance. The learned Judge has not even referred to the fact that defendant 2 was only a surety. Assuming that to be so, I am unable to see how such an obligation could be transferred to the owner of the property sold by the principal debtor so as to involve that property in the liability to be first sold for the debt. Even though the purchaser knew that the debt was one for which his vendor was primarily liable, we cannot have such a liability running with the land. It is purely personal; at any rate I have not heard of such a ground adopted as justifying a direction of the kind now given against defendant 5. Then it was said that the defendant 5's purchase itself was fraudulent and it was suggested that if I found any difficulty on that point on the record, the case may be sent down for a finding on it.

I am afraid I can find reason for neither. No one pleaded in the case that defendant 5's purchase was fraudulent. There was no issue upon it. No doubt the Munsif in trying to support his direction tries to distinguish between the recitals in Ex. 3, the sale deed to defendant 5 of 1921 and the mortgage deed to the plaintiff Ex. A of 1913 and says that the recitals in Ex. 3 appear to be fraudulent. All that need be said is that there was no issue and no contention on that point and the fact that certain discrepancies exist between recitals in two documents executed between different parties at a distance of eight years cannot ordinarily be said to be evidence of any fraud. The learned Judge has made no reference whatever to these observations in his judgment or in any way based it upon the character of the sale deed Ex. 3. It appears to me that the District Munsif not knowing on what grounds to support his conclusion was casting about for one and pitched upon a vague, and futile allegation of fraud which is supposed to cover all manner of legal insufficiency. There is no ground whatever to send the case back upon a point which never arose and on which the appellate Judge has made no observations whatever.

The result is that the direction in Cl. 4 of the lower appellate Court's decree will be deleted and the following substituted

"and that defendant 2's interests if any in the property comprised in the mortgage Ex. A other than the property sold to defendant 4 under Ex. 2, will be proceeded against in the first instance and then if necessary the properties sold to defendant 4 under Ex. 2. This direction to have effect only as between the plaintiff-decree-holder on the one hand and defendants 2 and 4 on the other."

The appellant who has substantially succeeded must have his costs here and in the lower appellate Court from defendant 4 who must bear his own in both the Courts.

This case having been ordered to be posted for being spoken to this day the Court made the following order :

(a) Alluvion and dilluvion—Accretions—Rights to accretions by alluvion arise ex jure naturae wherever land abuts on river—Riparian owners.

Rights to accretions by alluvion arise, ex jure naturae, wherever land abuts on a river, whether the bed of the river be the property of the riparian owners as in the case of private rivers, or the property of the Crown as in the case of public rivers. Case law discussed. [P 183 C 1]

If land on the bank of a river which is gradually silting up is surveyed at any particular time, though this will of course show the then limits of the riparian owner's property, it does not mean that it is the demarcated and fixed limit of the river bank : Attorney General of Southern Nigeria v. *John Holt & Co. Walsh, J.—This appeal arises in the following circumstances : The plaintiff's father and the father of defendants 1 and 2 were brothers and owned the zemindari of Vallur. The plaintiff's father who was the junior brother brought a suit for partition in 1896 and obtained a decree against the father of defendants 1 and 2, Ex. QQ in O. S. No. 15 of 1896 dated 31st March 1902. In the division made at this partition South Vallur fell to the share of the plaintiff's father and North Vallur to that of the father of defendants 1 and 2. The river Kistna had been corroding its banks and the Government started conservancy operations in 1893. The conservancy operations resulted in a gradual accretion to the mainland on the Vallur side of about 704 acres. The father of defendants 1 and 2 claimed the accretions as his own as being the owner of the foreshore. He brought a suit in 1912. The Government opposed his claim on the ground that the river was navigable. The plaintiff's claim in that suit was allowed. The case is reported in Secretary of State v. Venkatanarasimha Naidu (1). The present plaintiff whose father had died was a minor at the date of this litigation and his estate was under the Court of Wards. There was no representation made by the Court of Wards during this litigation that he had any claim to any part of the accretions. The Government was ordered in that suit to pay about three lakhs mesne profits to the plaintiffs. On attaining his majority the present plaintiff has filed the present suit saying that 90 acres out of the 704 acres of accretion belonging to him were wrongly taken possession of by the father of the defendants. He bases his claim on an assertion that at the time of the division the eastern portion of the river bed which adjoins North Vallur was assigned to his father and that as these 90 acres formed part of the river bed he is entitled to them. Two questions therefore arose in the suit, one of fact and one of law. The question of fact was whether the river bed was divided at the partition so as to award its eastern half to the plaintiff's father. The question of law is whether, assuming that the river bed belonged to his father, the accretion to the mainland would belong to the plaintiff or defendants. It is not denied that it is a gradual accretion and has been caused by the planting of nanuul grass during the river conservancy operations The lower Court has found that the river bed was divided in the manner alleged by the plaintiff and, on the question of law, that he is entitled to the accretion which then formed part of the river bed. It has therefore given a decree for recovery of possession of the suit land against defendants 1 and 2 subject to the provisions of the Rivers Conservancy Act. It has allowed the plaintiff mesne profits to be recovered from defendants 1 and 2 for faslis 1330, 1331 and 1332 ; but it has disallowed his claim for mesne profits as against defendant 3, the Secretary of State for India. Against this decree defendants 1 and 2 have preferred this appeal.

The initial difficulty which the plaintiff has to meet is that the decree on which his whole claim rests, for it is admittedly not based on his possession, is entirely silent as to the alleged division of the river bed contended for by him. (Here His Lordship dealt with the plaintiff's case of the division of the river bed and after considering the evidence on this question proceeded as follows) : Differing therefore from the view of the lower Court we hold that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the eastern portion of the river bed adjoining the North Vallur estate was granted to his father at the time of the partition ; and, if he fails to prove this, it must be held that the partition was made as contended for by the defendants, that each riparian or lanka owner enjoyed up to the middle portion of the stream adjoining his share or lanka. In view of this finding it is unnecessary to discuss at length the second question, whether, assuming that the plaintiff has proved that the river bed is his, he is entitled to the accretions claimed. But we would hold against him on this point also differing from the view of the law taken by the lower Court.

The principle that the riparian owner owns a half of the river bed ad medium filum aquae is of course not disputed. In Venkata Lakshmi Narasimha v. Secretary of State (2), which followed : Micklathwait v. Newlay Bridge Co. (3), it was laid down that as regards a grant of land in India described as bounded by a non-navigable river the onus of showing that the grant did not cover the bed ad medium filum acquae was on the grantor. That even where the owner of the river bed is different from the riparian owner, a gradual accretion to the shore will belong to the riparian owner and not to the owner of the river bed is laid down by the Privy Council in Secretary of State v. Rajah of Vizianagaram (4). There the accretion was in the Godavari river at a point where it was tidal and navigable and the bed was the property of the Government ; it was nevertheless held that the accretion belonged to the riparian owner. That case is really sufficient to settle the whole matter before us. But as the learned Subordinate Judge has taken a different view of the law and there had been some discussion on it before us the matter may be pursued a little further. In Foster v. Wright (5), it was held that the person who possessed fishery rights in a river was entitled to fish in that part of the river which had covered the riparian owner's lands by gradual encroachment. So also in Re, Hull and Selby Railway (6) it was held that, where there was a gradual encroachment by the sea upon the land, the land covered by the water belonged to the Crown. In Hindson v. Ashby (7) the view of Romer, J., that a strip of land formed by gradual accretion in a river belonged to the land owner and not to the person possessing fishery rights in the river was upheld. But on the facts it was found not to be a case where the accretion was gradual : Attorney General of Southern Vigeria v. John Holt and Co. (Liverpool) Ltd. (8) is a case where the principles of gradual accertion do not apply ; but there are some remarks which bear on the present case and they will be quoted later. The learned Sub-Judge has referred in para. 38 to the Bengal Regulation 11 of 1825 ; but that has been held to be not applicable in Madras : vide Surya Row Bahadur v. Secy. of State (9), at p. 61. The present also is not a case of a small shallow river silting up gradually. Doss's Tagore Law Lectures on the law of Riparian Rights p.209 relied on by the learned Sub-Judge in the same paragraph is not applicable to the present case. The principles applicable to the present case will be found at p. 261 of the same book where the learned author states :

"Rights to accretions by alluvion.

"This right arises ex jure naturae, wherever land abuts on a river, whether the bed of the river be the property of the riparian owners as in the case of private rivers, or the property of the Crown as in the case of public rivers vide also his remarks at pp. 151 to 156.

The learned Sub-Judge admits that it was argued before him that the Bengal Regulation was not applicable to the Madras Presidency. But he draws an inference from the decision in Venkata Lakshmi Narasimha v. Secy. of State (2) referred to above that it logically follows upon that decision that in the special cases where the ownership of the bank and the ownership of the river bed adjoining it are in different persons, all accretions formed in the river bed must go to the owner of the river bed. That this does not follow has been decided by the Privy Council, in Secy. of State v. Rajah of Vizianagaram (4). There is really only one difficulty about the law on the point and that no doubt is a somewhat serious one, namely whether, when there has been a demarcation of the river bed, the results of the accretions formed go to the riparian owner of the river bed. The learned advocate for the respondents relies on 28 Hals. 362 and Attorney General v. Chambers (10). This latter case was mentioned in Hindson v. Ashby (7) by Lindley, L. J. who had also decided Foster v. Wright (5) as being apparently opposed to the decision in Rex v. Lord Yarborough (11), Gifford v. Lord Yarborough (12) and In Re Hull and Selby Ry. Company (13). What he say is :

"Whether, apart from the Statute of Limitations, the accretions, or the land left by the water can become the property of the plaintiffs or cease to be the property of the defendant is a question of considerable difficulty, and one which, in my view of the facts, it is not now necessary to decide. Passages were cited from Bracton, Britton, Fleta, and Hela de Jure Maris, c. i. and vi., and the year book, 22 Ass. fo. 106 pl. 94, to show that the doctrine of accretion does not apply where boundaries are well defined and known. This may be if the boundary on the waterside is a wall, or something so clear and visible that it is easy to see whether the accretions, as they become perceptible are on side of the boundary or on the other. But I am not satisfied that the authorities referred to are applicable to cases of land having no boundary next flowing water except the water itself."

Then he quotes the cases which were opposed to the view and says :

"But it is unnecessary to dwell more on this question, and I leave it for reconsideration and decision when it shall arise."

A full discussion of the law on the point is found in Coulson and Forbes' Law of Waters, Edn. 4, pp. 82 and 91 and Hunt's Boundaries amd Fences, Edn. 6. pp. 35 to 48. There is no evidence at all in the present case that the boundary of the river was demarcated at any time. The learned advocate for the respondents sought to establish such a state of things from the following statement of D. W. 2 :

"There are survey stones between the metta lands and the plaint lands. There are only the big stones planted at a distance of one furlong each by the River Conservancy Department."

The witness admits that he never inspected the plaint lands subsequent to the suit to see whether there were any survey stones. But in any case there is no evidence at all that the Conservancy Department planted any stones to demarcate the boundary of the river. Then it is attempted to be argued that because the defendant's riparian lands were surveyed the western boundary of these lands must be taken to be the limits of the estate and also to be the eastern boundary of the river. Apart from the fact that it is not shown that defendants had any notice of such survey, this argument is clearly illusory because as remarked before if land on the bank of a river which is gradually silting up is surveyed at any particular time, though this will of course show the then limits of the riparian owner's property, it does not mean that it is the demarcated and fixed limit of the river bed, and in the present case it is not even clear from the evidence that survey stones were planted along this western boundary of the defendant's land. In Attorney General of Southern Nigeria v. John Holt and Co. (Liverpool) Limited at p. 612 it is observed :

"It need no longer be matter of doubt that the operation of the rule of adding to the ownership of riparian lands the property of soil ad mediam filum is not interfered with on account of a specific or scheduled measurement of the land a delineation or colouring on a plan which measurement, delineation or colouring does not in fact include any part of the bed of the river or of the street."

Hint's Law of Boundaries., Walls and Fences, Edn. 6, p. 48, deals with this question of a marked boundary where the author says :

"Finally, it is submitted that the true solution of this troublesome question of accretion is to be found in the question. Yes or nay, was the boundary according to the intendment of the parties interested in its delimination fixed by reference to a physical feature, subject to the incident of alteration through natural causes which is necessarily inherent in such a feature ; or was it fixed by reference to the position of that physical feature as it then subsisted."

Now, taking the plaintiff's case as he puts it, there cannot, we think, be the smallest doubt that if the proposal of the Special Deputy Collector, which the plaintiff says was carried into effect, was to give the river bed to the plaintiff's father irrespective of any fixed boundary of such river bed, there is not the smallest mention in any of his proposals of any fixed boundaries he proposed to give as those of the river bed. Even in the plaint this is clearly the attitude taken up. In para 5 the plaintiff states that at the time of the partition the Special Deputy Collector drew a line bisecting the Kistna paya between certain lankas in such a manner that the river portion on the eastern side thereof and the lankas therein might fall to the share of South Vallur (i. e., the plaintiff's estate). In para. 6 he says that in accordance with the aforesaid partition .the plaintiff's estate alone was entitled to the river portion on the eastern side and the lankas ; and he further states in that paragraph that all the accretions newly formed such as lankas etc., springing up in this plot passed only to the plaintiff's estate. It is not asserted in the plaint that the western limit of the defendants' metta lands was to be considered as the eastern boundary of the river. On the point of law, therefore, even assuming that the plaintiff's father was assigned the river bed east of the line drawn by the Special Deputy Collector the accretions will still belong to the defendants who are riparian owners and the suit must fail and the appeal must be allowed.

The memorandum of cross objections put in by the respondent must therefore also be dismissed. They relate to mesne profits paid by the Government to the defendants 1 and 2 as a result of the decree in the previous litigation. It becomes unnecessary to consider the question whether such money can be pursued by the plaintiff and recovered from the hands of defendants 1 and 2. But we may say as regards the alternative claim for its recovery from the Government that it is clearly untenable for the reasons stated by the learned Subordinate Judge in para. 47 of his judgment : vide also Secy. of State v. Varaprasada, A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 520. The appeal will therefore be allowed throughout with costs in both the Courts and the plaintiff's suit dismissed. The memorandum of cross objections is also dismissed with costs.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—I agree and have nothing to add as my learned brother has dealt fully with all the points raised.

 Criminal P. C., S. 162—Before charge is framed copies of witnesses' statements to police should not be granted until stage of cross-examination is reached—If that stage is allowed to go, accused must wait for time of actual cross-examination after charge—Evidence Act, S. 145.

So far as proceedings before charge are concerned, copies of witnesses' statements made to the police should not be granted until the stage of cross examination is reached. If that stage is allowed to go by without application being made, an accused must wait until the witness is again about to be subjected to cross-examination before he can claim grant of a copy. Under S. 145, Evidence Act, until the occasion arises for putting the statement to the witness it cannot legally be used for any purpose whatsoever. It should not therefore be placed in the accused's hands until that stage in the trial has been reached when he may so use it: A. I. R, 1926 Mad. 183; *A. I. K. N. Ganpathi for Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order.—The Revision Petition is presented by the Public Prosecutor against an order passed by the Sessions Judge of Salem in the following circumstances: In C. C. No. 103 of 1928 on the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Hosur, certain of the prosecution witnesses had been examined and cross-examined. Application was then made on behalf of the accused under S. 162, Criminal P. C., for copies of the statements which these witnesses had made to the police. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate refused the request on the ground that the proper occasion for making it had gone by. The learned Sessions Judge, however, pointed out that the accused would have a right of further cross-examination after the framing of a charge, and in view of this circumstance ruled that copies should be given.

The point not dealt with by the learned Sessions Judge, but raised here, is whether an accused person can apply for, and be granted, such copies (where not already applied for and granted) at any time before the cross-examination after charge takes place, or whether he must wait until at least the witness is in the box and the cross-examination due to begin. Mr. Ganapathi for the learned Public Prosecutor contends that this latter condition must be satisfied.

So far as appears—and I have not had the advantage of hearing the other side—this precise point has not been dealt with in any reported case. In Peramaswami Rayudu, in re (1) Krishnan and Wallace, JJ. held that, since the purpose of furnishing the copy is to contradict the witness, the witness must already have made a statement which lays him open to contradiction. Accordingly, application can only be made, and a copy granted when the witness is under cross-examination. This however, only lays down the procedure so far as the first cross-examination is concerned. The question was answered in very much the same way by a Calcutta Bench in Madari Sikdar v. Emperor (2). The learned Judges say not only that the witness must be under cross-examination but that

> "the cross-examination must lay the foundation for the suggestion that the evidence given by the witness in Court is contradicted by his statement recorded under S. 161, Criminal P. C. and it is only then that the accused is entitled to ask the Judge to refer to the writing and grant him copies."

I find it not a little difficult to understand how a cross-examining counsel can found a suggestion of contradiction between two statements one of which he has not seen; and this part of the decision has been criticized by Rankin, C. J. in a later case (Babarali Sardar v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1929. Cal. 182). That case left it open whether the proper time to apply was when the witness appears in the box or when the cross-examination commences. In Emperor v. Usman (3), the later stage was deemed to be the appropriate one, having regard to the terms of S. 145, Evidence Act.

Accepting then, that so far as proceedings before charge are concerned, copies should not be granted until the stage of

(1) A. I. R. 1923 Mad. 183.
(2) A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 514=54 Cal. 307.
(3) A. I. R. 1928 Bom. 23=52 Bom. 195.

cross-examination is reached, I am inclined to the view that if that stage is allowed to go by without application being made, an accused must wait until the witness is again about to be subjected to cross-examination before he can claim grant of a copy. For, in the first place, until the witness so appears there is no certainty that he will be available for cross-examination, and therefore no certainty that the statement can be used for the only purpose for which the accused may possess it. But further, if the law requires that grant of the copy for use in the original cross-examination should be contingent upon that cross-examination being due to begin, the same principle would seem to apply to cross-examination after charge. Under. S. 145, Evidence Act, if it is intended to contradict a witness by a writing :

" his attention must, before the writing can be proved, be called to those parts of it which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him. "

Until the occasion arises for putting the statement to the witness it cannot legally be used for any purpose whatsoever; and I see no reason why it should be placed in the accused's hands until that stage in the trial has been reached when he may so use it.

Whether adherence to this rule would give rise to inconvenience in practice is scarcely a relevant consideration if it is the correct rule. Equal inconvenience, if any, would attach to the application of the rule to the earlier cross-examination as to the later. Upon a request for a copy being made, the Court must necessarily afford the accused a reasonable opportunity for obtaining it before he is deprived of the opportunity to cross-examine upon it. But with a little contrivance that ought not to result in serious delay.

I allow the Criminal Revision Petition, set aside the orders of the Sessions Judge and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and direct the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to proceed in accordance with the above observations.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 361—Sub Ss. (1) and (2) are not mutually exclusive—Translation of English evidence must also be made.

An accused person is often in a much better position than his pleader to follow the drift of the evidence and it is obvious that he ought to be kept informed of what is being said. Where therefore certain witnesses at the original trial give evidance in English, translation of such evidence should be made, for the first two paragraphs of S. 361 are not mutually exclusive : A. I. R. 1928, Cal. 27, Diss. from. [P 186 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 537—S. 537 is wide enough to cover any irregularity and retrial should not be ordered unless there is failure of justice.

Section 537 may be taken to cover any irregularity in the widest sence of that term, provided there has been no failure of justice The appellate Court ought not to order a retrial in a case where provisions of S. 361 are overlooked without satisfying itself whether or no a failure of justice has been occasioned : *A. Order.—This is a reference from the learned Sessions Judge of Chittoor. In four appeals the Joint Magistrate of Chandragiri has ordered a retrial of the appellant because certain witneseses at the original trial gave evidence in English and their evidence was not translated to the appellant as required by S. 361, Civil P. C.

The Sub-Divisional Magistrate in my opinion was right in holding that the code lays down that such translation should be made and with all respect I do not agree with the ruling in Hari Narayan Chandra v. Emperor (1) that paras. 1 and 2, S. 361 are mutually exclusive. An accused person is often in a much better position than his pleader to follow the drift of the evidence and it is obvious that the ought to be kept informed of what is being said. But the Sub-Divisional Magistrate misdirects himself when he observes that the irregularity cannot be cured under S. 537,

(1) A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 27

Criminal P. C. No doubt after Subramania Ayyar v. Emperor (2) an idea prevaild that S. 537, Criminal P. C., did not apply to the mandatory provisions of the code, although there is nothing in the section itself to give it such a restricted shape. But the ruling in Abdul Rahman v Emperor (3) has dispelled that idea, and S. 537 may be taken to cover any irregularity in the widest sense of that term, provided there has been no failure of justice. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate ought not to have ordered retrial in those cases without satisfying himself whether or no a failure of justice had been occasioned.

With these observations his order in all four cases is set aside, and he is directed to rehear the appeals.

Criminal Revn. No. 181 of 1929 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 184 of 1929, Decided on 6th September 1929, from judgment of Bench Magistrates, Otacamund. D/- 18th October 1928, in Summary Trial No. 610 of 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., Ss. 265 and 367—Judgment and record must in all cases be signed by all members present—Words "presiding officer of Court" do not show that judgment may be signed only by chairman of Bench as they are compendious description of all classes of judicial officers—All members signing register containing sentence and thus agreeing in judgment—But judgment signed only by Chairman—Omission to sign by all is mere irregularity.

The intention of S. 265 is that by whomsoever the judgment and record may have been written, they shall be signed by all the members present. The words "presiding officer of the Court" do not afford any assistance in the construction of S. 265 and do not show that the judgment may be signed only by the Chairman of the Benches; they are no more than a compendious description of all classes of judicial officers, Magistrates and Judges who have to pronounce judgments. But the failure to comply with a mandatory provision of the Code is not necessarily an illegality and thus where all the members of the Bench sign the register, in which the sentences are embodied, and thus agree in the judgment, their omission to comply with the technical requirements of the law in the fact that the judgment is signed only by the chairman is a mere irregularity which occasions no failure of justice: *A. (b) Criminal P. C., S. 526 (8)—Rejection of application made under S. 526 (8) for adjournment on ground that it is made after trial was begun is contrary to S. 526 (8) and vitiates whole proceedings.

Where the accused in the course of a trial applies for an adjournment for the purpose of moving the High Court for transfer and the Court rejects the application on the ground that it had been made after the trial had begun, such rejection is contrary to the terms of S. 526 (8) and vitiates the whole proceedings. [P 188 C 1]

V. L. Ethiraj—for Petitioner.

Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner has been convicted by a Bench of Magistrates. He comes up in revision on the ground that the judgment convicting him is illegal as it has been signed only by the Chairman of the Bench. We think that that is a perfectly good ground of objection. S. 265, Criminal P. C., is divided into three subsections. The first provides that records and judgments shall be written by the presiding officer in English or in the language of the Court or in his mother tongue. The second prescribes that, if authorised by the Local Government, a Bench may employ a clerk to prepare the record or judgment, which shall be signed by each member of the Bench present and taking part in the proceedings. The third directs that, if no such authority has been given, the record which presumably includes the judgment shall be prepared by a member of the Bench and signed "as aforesaid" and shall then be "the proper record." The first subsection says nothing about signing the record or judgment, but deals merely with the language in which they shall be written. The intention, we think, is that by whomsoever the judgment and record may have been written they shall be signed by all the members present. We have been referred to a decision contra by Devadoss, J., in Rama Kottia v. Subba Rao (1), which is based on the wording of S. 367, Criminal P. C. With great respect we do not consider that that section affords any assistance in the construction of S. 265. The words "presiding officer of the Court" are no more than a compendious discription of all classes of judicial officers, Magistrates and Judges, who have to pronounce judgments.

(1) A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 1172.

The Public Prosecutor invites our attention to S. 537, Criminal P. C. and argues that the omission should be treated as an irregularity which has occasioned no miscarriage of justice. It has been held that the failure to comply with a mandatory provision of the Code is not necessarily an illegality. In this case all the members of the Bench signed the register in which the sentence was embodied. They obviously agreed in the judgment and we do not think that their omission to comply with the technical requirement of the law as to the signing of it was anything more than an irregularity, which occasioned no failure of justice.

There is, however, a further and fatal objection. It is founded on that disastrous provision of law, sub-S. (8), S. 526, Criminal P. C., which is absolutely imperative in its terms. The petitioner in the course of the trial, applied for an adjournment for the purpose of moving the High Court for a transfer but the Bench rejected the application on the ground that it had been made after the trial had begun. That was, of course, no ground at all. Such an aplication can be made in the course of a trial and must, unfortunately, be granted. To refuse it, contrary to the terms of the section, is to deny the applicant an absolute right conferred on him by the statute and vitiates the whole proceedings. We set aside the conviction, but, as the case arises out of a family dispute, do not order a retrial.

A. Narasimha Ayyar for Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order.—The six petitioners have presented this petition against their convictions under Ss. 147 and 328, I. P. C., and sentences of two months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine each of Rs. 25. The ground taken is with reference to the terms of the charges and a certain finding of fact of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate in appeal. The charge alleges that the petitioners :

" Were members of an unlawful assembly and in prosecution of the common object of such assembly, viz., in wreaking vengeance for the social dishonour done to you at the social functions of the day, proceeded to the house of P. W. 1 at Kovvali, arming yourselves with sticks, challenged P. W. 1 to come out, committed the offence of rioting and caused injuries on three of the prosecution witnesses."

The Stationary Sub-Magistrate found that the evidence established the various components of the charge, including the fact of social dishonour caused to the petitioners on the day previous to the occurrence. It appears that a woman had died and a dinner and other ceremonies were to take place. There was some unpleasantness over the invitation of the accused to this dinner and when, after the dinner a ceremony called " Suddulu " was performed they were not accorded due honours. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate, adverting to the circumstance that this affair of the " Suddulu " is not mentioned in the earlier reports, considers that it may have been a later development. He goes on to add that the evidence established ill feeling between the parties and that petty incidents due to it had taken place before the occurrence, among these incidents being the unpleasantness over the invitation to the dinner. It is at least doubtful, therefore, whether he does not find established some part of what the charge described as social dishonour done at the functions of the day.

The error that was clearly committed in drafting the charge was to insert as the common object of the accused what was in fact nothing other than a motive. Accordingly, the phrase :

" In wreaking vengeance for the social dishonour done to you at the social functions of the day " may be regarded as pure surplusage and in deciding what should have been the essential components of the charge may be omitted from consideration. We are left, therefore, with the allegation that the accused formed an unlawful assembly, went to the house with sticks, committed rioting and caused injuries to three witnesses. It is no doubt true that, as so revised, the charge does not explicitly recite a common object, which should properly have been to beat or injure these persons. The question is whether it was, therefore, so defective as to require that the accused should now be acquitted. Mr. Lakshmanna for the petitioners, has showed me several decisions principally originating from the Calcutta High Court and one : In re., Loganathaiyar (1) (at p. 40) from Madras, the substance of them being that, where the common object recited in the charge is different from the common object found a charge of rioting cannot be sustained and the accused person should be acquitted : see for instance Rahimuddi v. Asgar Ali (2) and Paresh Nath Sircar v. Emperor (3). In the latter case, which was decided by three Judges ; Rampini, J., who wrote a dissenting judgment, was of opinion that the provisions of S. 537 cured the defect inasmuch as the accused could not have been in any way prejudiced. In a later Calcutta case Silajit Mahto v. Emperor (4) it was recognized that :

" It is not a general proposition of law that a conviction under S. 147, I. P. C., cannot be supported wherever the common object, as stated in the charge, is not precisely made out. The question in each case is whether the common object established agrees in essential particulars with that laid in the charge."

The same principle was given expression to in Babbon Sheikh v. Emperor (5). I have been referred to no authority for the view that failure to define expressly and accurately the common object with which an unlawful assembly acts is not such an error, omission or irregularity as may be cured by S. 537, Criminal P. C. I think, accordingly, that I should only be justified here in interfering in revision if it appears that the accused were prejudiced by the manner in which the charge was drafted. I am unable to discover any ground for this view. It must have been quite clear that the case they had to meet was, as set out in the charge, that, as an unlawful assembly, they went into the house and injured the inmates, and I think it was equally clear that the common object imputed to them was that which they put into effect. I see, therefore, no sufficient reason to revise the convictions and I dismiss the revision petition.

Criminal P. C., S. 423—Prosecution broken in every respect—Appellate Court cannot send case for retrial—Appellate Court orders retrial for supplying formal defects.

The appellate Court can no doubt order a retrial under S. 423, Criminal P. It is rather for supplying formal defects that an appellate Court orders retrial: 42 Mad. 885, Rel. on. [P 190 C 1]

K.S.Jayarama Ayyar—for Petitioner.

Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner was tried under S. 15, Act 8 of 1899. It is a summons case but a charge was framed that petitioner had either sold 31 cans of dangerous petroleum to an unlicensed person, or had transported the same cans through that person without a pass, and therefore, he had committed an offence under S. 15 (c) of the Act.

The offence under S. 15 (c) is breaking any condition contained in a license under the Act. The lower Court found the accused guilty under S. 15 (c) of having sold 31 cans to an unlicensed person, which must mean that selling to an unlicensed person contravenes some condition of his license. The license was never proved, and, assuming that that could be a remediable omission, this Court has been unable to discover from the rules what condition in what license would have been contravened.

The prosecution, therefore, entirely failed to make out its case in the Court of trial.

The learned Sessions Judge came to the same conclusion, observing quite correctly that upon the essential points of the case there is neither evidence nor finding, and he could not uphold the conviction. He considered, however, that the proper course was to order a retrial. Here it must be found that the learned Judge exceeded his proper function. In certain circumstances he can no doubt order a retrial under S. 423, Criminal P. C., but hardly where the prosecution has hopelessly broken down in every respect, so as to enable the prosecutor to substantiate some new charge against the accused or to produce evidence which might easily have been produced at the first trial. It is rather for supplying formal defects that an appellate Court orders retrial: see Varadarajulu Naidu v. Emperor (1). The petition is allowed and the petitioner acquitted. Criminal Trial — Counter cases should be tried by one Judge and judgment should be pronounced when both cases are finished.

Cases and counter cases should be tried in quick succession by the same Judge, who should not pronounce judgment till the hearing of both cases is finished. [P 190 C 2]

K. S. Jayarama Ayyar for M. Krishna Bharathi - for Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner has been sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment for stabbing a man in the neck with a spear, and six months rigorous imprisonment concurrently for hurting a man in S. C. No. 158 of 1928, Coimbatore. In S. C. No. 157 of 1928, he was the complainant, with the plea that certain of the prosecution witnesses in S. C. No. 158 had set upon him.

There is no clear law as regards the procedure in counter cases, a defect which the legislature ought to remedy.

It is a generally recognized rule that such cases should be tried in quick succession by the same Judge, who should not pronounce judgment till the hearing of both cases is finished.

This precludes the danger of an accused being convicted before his whole case is before the Court, and also prevents there being conflicting judgments upon similar facts. But at the same time the rule involves obvious difficulty. It seems to infringe the fundamental principle that the Court must not import any facts into a case which are not to be found upon the record. To take an illustration, suppose in the first of the cases the accused succeeds in showing that the prosecution has failed to prove its charge, and then in the second case the same accused as complainant goes into the witness box and breaks down in cross-examination so as to convince the Court that the truth lies with the other side. Can the Court be expected to dismiss this circumstance from its mind, and if it does not do so, what legal justifction is there for importing it into the case already heard ?

The only way in which such a procedure can be justified is by setting up a fiction that the case and the counter case are really one; and this fiction should be made a reality by statute. If a Court were empowered to link cases, as they link files in a secretariat there would also be the incidental advantage of a great saving of time. At present in each case the evidence of every witness must be fully recorded, and what P.W. 1 says for the prosecution in one case must all be written out again when he repeats it as D.W. 1 in the other case.

But whether there be a statutory enactment or not the point remains that for practical purposes a case and its counter are one, and it is this that makes these general observations particularly germane to the present case.

Because the lower Courts have entirely ignored this principle, the learned Assistant Sessions Judge, when the two cases were referred to him, changed their order for some reason which the record does not divulge, and proceeded to try 158 before 157. Then when 158 was concluded he wrote his judgment upon it and the Public Prosecutor had no other course open to him than to withdraw 157 which that judgment had irrevocably discredited.

The learned Sessions Judge on appeal finds that this procedure did not prejudice the accused:

"There was no restriction regarding the manner in which he might defend himself. There was nothing to prevent him from examining in his defence all his own prosecution witnesses."

That no doubt is true; but on the other hand there was nothing to compel him to do so; and when he expected all these prosecution witnesses to be examined in his own case, he was probably well advised not to subject them to an earlier cross-examination. Was the accused ever warned that if the Judge was against him on the first case, the second would be dropped? Presumably not, and if he was not warned, it can never be said that he was not prejudiced.

There was, as the learned Judge observes, no actual illegality in taking up the case first and disposing of it before the other was heard, but it offends against the accepted practice.

He adds:

"the public prosecutor having requested that this case might be tried first, the Assistant Sessions Judge was well within his rights in acceding."

The Assistant Sessions Judge should certainly have left a note explaining on what the request was based, and why he acceeded. In its absence there arises a suspicion that the Public Prosecutor suggested that he would succeed in 158 and then it would not be necessary to try 157, and if so, the suggestion was scarcely proper.

As the accused was not given the opportunity which he expected would be given him of examining all his evidence, there must be a retrial.

There is one point upon which this Court offers no opinion, but which should be borne in mind. If it is found that the accused was going on duty (apparently the sentence was enhanced on some such consideration) what was he doing with a spear? The finding and sentence are cancelled and petitioner is ordered to be retried by the District Magistrate or any Magistrate subordinate to him having jurisdiction and no previous connexion with the case. He may remain on bail till the case is concluded.

Order.—The information given in the charge sheet in this case is not very full; but I cannot say that it does not comply with the provisions of S. 173, Criminal P. C. The contention that that section requires that an abstract of the evidence to be given by each of the witnesses mentioned should be entered in the report of charge sheet appears to me unsound. Nor is there in my opinion anything in the suggestion that this form of charge sheet, prescribed by G. O. No. 3,487 Law (General), dated 16th October 1928, and published in the Fort St. George Gazette dated 23rd October 1928, could not legally be prescribed under S. 173, Criminal P. C., because it requires less details to be given than were required in the form previously prescribed. This petition is dismissed.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 288 of 1929 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 256 of 1929, Decided on 18th November 1929, against judgment of Sess. Judge, Guntur Division

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 476—Any Court seised of transferred case can complain.

If a case is transferred it is not only the Court which originally received the forged document can complain under S. 476. It is a continuing offence and any Court seised of the case can complain. [P 192 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 476—Forging document—Document filed—Presumption is that it was one given to pleader.

In a prosecution under S. 476 for filing a forged document, there is a fair presumption that the document filed was the one given to pleader. [P 192 C 2]

Judgment.—Petitioner has been sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment by the Assistant Sessions Judge, Guntur, under Ss. 471 and 467, I. P. C. for filing a forged receipt in a suit on a promissory note in which he was defendant.

Two points are taken in revision. Firstly, that if a case is transferred only the Court which originally received the forged document can complain under S. 476 Criminal P. C. It is a continuing offence and any Court seised of the case can complain.

Secondly, that the learned Sessions Judge misdirected himself when he observed that the burden of proof did not lie upon the prosecution to prove that the receipt filed by the pleader was the receipt given to the pleader by the accused. The observation is not happily worded because the burden is on the prosecution to make out its case. It might have been said rather, that there is a fair presumption that the document given to a pleader is the document filed, and the accused should offer some rebuttal. I do not find that the learned Judge failed to regard the case from this aspect, or that the petitioner has been prejudiced. That ends the matter so far as revision is concerned, but there has been discussion of the merits, and I may add that on the merits I agree with the lower Courts.

The petitioner's defence is that a forged receipt was substituted for a genuine receipt by his enemies. He has done little to show that there was a genuine receipt. In the suit he cited no evidence to prove it, and gave up his plea of discharge when the plaintiff took an oath. He never summoned the attestator who might corroborate the writer.

His enemies are not likely to have elaborated a plot merely to defeat his plea of discharge to the amount of Rs. 150 and the chances of getting him prosecuted for perjury were remote. If the suit had come on for trial, and he had at once said that the receipt was not the receipt he gave his vakil, the Court would not have prosecuted him. And anyone who had taken the trouble to arrange this trap, would nave taken care to spring it in the suit itself. If the suit were settled without reference to the document there was great risk of the Court declining to move in the matter of a document which had not really affected the issue.

If the plaintiff himself was in the plot he certainly would not have taken an oath instead of putting the petitioner to the proof of his alleged discharge. And if the petitioner genuinely believed that he held the plaintiff's thumb-marked receipt he would never have consented to abide by an oath and lose his money. As for the futility of the fabrication, people for whom litigation is a tissue of falsehood lose all sense of truth and cannot distinguish between a good and a bad lie; just as some are colour blind they became truth blind. The petition is dismissed.

Waller, J.—The petitioner was convicted and sentenced to undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment. He appealed and his conviction was affirmed, but the sentence was altered into one of one month's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 60, with a further two months' rigorous imprisonment in default of payment. He asks us in revision to say that the sentence passed on him by the appellate court is illegal as amounting to an enhancement. He has the support of several decisions, for example, Bhola Singh v. Emperor (1) which followed King Emperor v. Sagwa (2). The ratio decidendi in these cases was this—that, in the event of the fine not being paid, the prisoner would serve a sentence equivalent to that passed by the trial Court, and still be liable to have the fine collected from him. The same view was taken in Emperor v. Mehar Chand (3). With great respect, it seems to us that the proviso to S. 386 (1) (b), Criminal P. C. takes much of the force out of this line of reasoning. The legislature recognized that no sane man, who had money or credit at his disposal, would go to jail, if he could avoid it by paying a fine. It, therefore, provided that, if the whole of a sentence of imprisonment imposed in default of payment of a fine had been served, no warrant should issue against the defaulter's property "unless for special reasons to be recorded in writing the Court considers it necessary to do so." In practice, no Court would, we imagine, try or levy execution, unless there was property to attach and, as we have pointed out above, it is almost inconceivable that a man would go to jail, if he had means to pay the fine. It is, consequently, in the highest degree improbable that the contingency which influenced the High Courts of Allahabad and Patna would ever arise. A contrary view was taken in Queen Empress v. Chagan Jagannath (4), which followed an unreported decision of this Court.

It cannot be denied, indeed, Mr. Sampath Ayyangar, admits that, in this case, the appellate Court, in effect, reduced the sentence. The petitioner had only to pay his fine in order to escape from two months' in jail. We find it very difficult to say that a sentence which, if submitted to, had not been enhanced, but reduced, must be held to have been enhanced merely because the prisoner has refused to submit to it. He has an option in the matter. If he does not choose to exercise that option in his own favour, is he to be heard to say :

" you must still further reduce my already reduced sentence, because, if I am contumacious, I shall not only have to serve a sentence equal to my unreduced sentence, but will also be liable to have my property attached to pay the fine I have refused to pay."

It is, of course, impossible to decide the question academically or to lay down a principle applicable to all cases. In this particular instance, the petitioner does not appear to say that he is unable to pay the fine or would prefer to suffer the sentence passed on him by the trial Court. Judging by the energy with and the expense at which he has conducted the proceedings, we feel no doubt but that he could pay the fine without any difficulty. We are satisfied that, if he were before us and we offered him the option of paying Rs. 60 or going to jail for two months, he would choose the former alternative without hesitation. There is therefore no reality in his argument that, academically speaking, his sentence has been enhanced. The same test was applied by Piggot, J., in Emperor v. Mehr Chand (3) above cited. We think that the proper test is whether the petitioner really considers a fine of Rs. 60 a heavier sentence than two months' rigorous imprisonment. That he does consider it to be so, he has not attempted to allege. His contention is that his sentence would be perfectly legal, if we reduced the default term of imprisonment by one day that is, if his already reduced sentence were still further reduced. We consider it absurd and dismiss his petition.

(2) [1901] 23 All. 497=(1901) A. W. N. 176.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 112 — Divorce not legally taking place—Child is born during continuance of valid marriage.

Where divorce in the sense of a legal dissolution of the marriage, has not taken place, a child born must be taken to be born during the continuance of a valid marriage between a woman and her husband. [P 194 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 157—Entry in vaccination register regarding father's name of illegitimate child made three years after child's birth is inadmissible in evidence—Evidence Act S. 35.

Where an entry in the vaccination register, which includes a statement by a woman that a person, bearing the name of the alleged father of her illegitimate child, was the father of the illegitimate child, is made three years after its birth, the entry does not satisfy the terms of S. 157, and is not admissible in evidence.

Order.—This is a Revision Petition against an order of the Third Presidency Magistrate granting the petitioner maintenance allowance at the rate of Rs. 5 per mensem in respect of her younger child. The question in issue is whether the counter petitioner has been shown to be the father of that child.

The first point taken is that the learned Presidency Magistrate has overlooked the provisions of S. 112, Evidence Act. He appears to find that petitioner's husband divorced her, but he does not explain what meaning he attaches to that term, and using it in the sense of a legal dissolution of the marriage it is clear that no divorce has taken place. I must take it therefore that, in the language of S. 112, the child was born "during the continuance of a valid marriage" between the petitioner and her husband. It has then to be shown, for the petitioner to succeed, that the parties to that marriage "had no access to each other at any time when he (the child) could have been begotten." On the date when petitioner gave evidence (5th October 1928) she gave the age of the child as four years, and stated that the counter petitioner had been keeping her for fourteen years. Her husband was employed in Bangalore, but some years before the child was born she came to Madras and lived with her father. Evidence which the lower Court has accepted shows that when the elder son three years senior to the younger was born petitioner's husband severed relations with her, on the ground that he was not the father even of that child; and certainly for some long while before the younger was born he had been living in Bangalore and his wife had been living in Madras. I think it may fairly be inferred, from this circumstance and from the relations shown to have been existing between petitioner and her husband, that he had no access to her at the time the younger child was begotten.

On the specific issue of the counter petitioner's paternity, the learned Presidency Magistrate has admitted certain evidence which is in my view inadmissible. The entry Ex. A in the vaccination register, which includes a statement by petitioner that a person bearing counter petitioner's name was the father of the child, was made three years after its birth and does not therefore satisfy the terms of S. 157, Evidence Act. I doubt whether such a statement is rendered admissible by S. 35. So too, the activities of P. W. 6, the caste headman, in trying to prevent counter petitioner's marriage do not constitute admissible evidence, though the objection does not apply to the evidence of P. W. 3, that the counter petitioner sought his help to pay money to the petitioner to dissuade her from creating trouble over the marriage.

Excluding what is inadmissible, it appears to me that there is quite enough evidence on the record to show beyond reasonable doubt that counter petitioner is father of the child. What that evidence is will be found detailed in the lower Court's order. That Court is the proper and, in general, the final Judge of its credibility, but I may add that I see no reason to differ from the view which it takes. The Criminal Revision Petition is dismissed.

Judgment.—These petitions arise out of an election held on 27th August 1928, to fill three vacancies in the 3rd Ward of the Wallajah Municipality. The election was conducted by the Chairman and the result, so far as it concernes us, stood as follows:

		Votes.
1.	T. K. Ratnavelu Chetti ...	170	Elected.
2.	M. Lakshmana Iyer ...	127	,,
3.	K. S. Mallappa Chettiar ...	123	,,
4.	S. Rajam Iyyar ...	116	,,
5.	P. Venkataswami Naidu ...	109	,,

Accordingly 1, 2 and 3 were declared elected. An election petition (O. P. 11 of 28) was then filed by S. Rajam Ayyar (No. 4) in the Subordinate Judge's Court, Vellore, alleging that the Chairman had shown undue partiality, that he had counted votes in favour of the successful candidates which ought to have been rejected, that he employed an inadequate staff, that the results were announced without checking or verification, and that if there had been subsequent check the petitioner and other candidates who had failed would have been elected. This petition was filed on 3rd September, and on 24th October, before the hearing had commenced, the petitioner applied for a recount (I. A. No. 699 of 28). This was granted, and the recount was carried out by a Commissioner with the following result:

		Votes.
1.	T. K. Ratnavelu Chetti ...	160	Elected.
2.	S. Rajam Iyyar ...	124	,,
3.	P. Venkataswami Naidu ...	123	,,
4.	M. Lakshmana Iyer ...	120	,,
5.	K. S. Mallappa Chettiar ...	116	,,

It will be seen that 4 and 5 in the prior list have displaced Nos. 2 and 3. The two candidates who were now defeated, M. Lakshmana Iyer and K. S. Mallappa Chettiar, thereupon applied (I. A. No. 752 of 28) for a scrutiny of the ballot papers, with a view to ascertain in whether they had been tampered with, but this was disallowed by the lower Court.

In arguing the main revision petition the contentions are raised that the learned Sub-Judge ordered the recount in circumstances not sufficient to give him jurisdiction, and that he was in error in not directing the further scrutiny asked for. On the first point it is urged, more specifically, that a Court before ordering a recount must have evidence before it that the original Court was or may have been incorrect. Mr. K. S.

Krishnaswami Iyengar, has recourse to English law in support of this position. In the Stepney case (4 O' M. & H. 34) the questions which arose were as to the stage in the proceedings at which a recount could be applied for and ordered, which does not now concern us and whether or not it could be claimed as a right. Denman, J. in delivering judgment, referring to an interlocutory conversation during the course of the hearing, says:

"We decided against the contention that the respondent was entitled to a recount as a matter of right, but offered to hear any evidence tending to show there there had been a mistake on the part of the returning officer. We heard witnesses on both sides upon the point, and were satisfied, I may say mainly upon the evidence of one of the witnesses called by the petitioner, that there were strong grounds for thinking that the return could not be strictly relied upon. We therefore determined upon directing a recount . . . . . ."

This case forms the sole cited authority for the exposition of the law on this point in Halsbury (Vol 12, para. 891).

"A recount is not granted as of right, but on evidence of good grounds for believing that there has been a mistake on the part of the returning officer the Court will make on order for a recount."

In Rogers on Elections, 19th Edition, Vol. 2, p. 301, it is stated that:

"The practice now is to order a recount before the trial where there is reason to believe there has been a miscount. Application for it should be made by summons supported by affidavits showing grounds.

The form of order for recount (No. 35 at p. 933) of the same Volume) contemplates the order being passed "upon hearing counsel for the petitioner and respondent and upon reading the affidavits of, etc."

Thus although in the Stepney case oral evidence was taken, it is enough to support the application by affidavit.

Let us now see what preceded grant of the application in the present case, I have already summarized the allegations which petitioner made in his main petition. I will now quote the following verbatim extracts from it:

"The Chairman deputed only one clerk to mark the votes secured by all the candidates when he ought to have employed more than one clerk . . . . . There was no subsequent check or verification of the votes marked by the clerk. The results were announced without checking or verification. If there had been subsequent check petitioner and other candidates who failed in the election would have been elected."

In his affidavit in support of his application for a recount he says:

"I have stated in my petition that the Chairman showed undue partiality and counted many votes in favour of the successful candidates which ought to have bsen rejected . . . . . I believe that if the votes were counted properly, I would have been elected."

In the counter affidavit it was objected that the petitioner was not entitled to the relief prayed for before he had satisfied the Court of the irregularities complained of. The learned Subordinate Judge in the course of his order, after quoting the passage in Rogers which I have given says:

"A misconduct is alleged by the petitioner and this application is aupported by a verified petition. I am therefore satisfied that there is a reasonable ground for the petitioner's belief that there has been a miscount."

Reading together the affidavit with the original petition, we find what that reasonable ground is, and if the Court considered the ground for the petitioner's belief to be reasonable, it must have felt, I presume, that there was room to doubt the correctness of the Court. It is not for me, dealing with this case in revision, to weigh the grounds upon which the Court acted. I have only to see that action was not marked by lack of jurisdiction or by material irregularity, in its exercise. It is quite clear that the learned Subordinate Judge was under no misconception as to what at any rate the English Law was, and applied his mind to the question whether or not a recount should be granted. It need hardly be said that from the nature of the case, proof that the count at the election was wrong cannot be given before the recount takes place. Usually nothing more can be alleged than cause to suspect the original count. An overstrict insistence that an application should be supported by evidence of miscounting is therefore unwarrantable. I consider accordingly that there was a sufficient compliance with the English procedure applying to this matter. Nor, looking purely to Indian Law, do I discover any irregularity. R. 6, Election Dispute Rules for District Municipalities renders the procedure laid down by the Civil P. C., applicable; and under O. 19, R. 2 of the Code evidence may be given by affidavit upon any application. From this point of view, the lower Court was dealing with the equivalent of an interlocutory application in a suit, and so far as I can see no question of jurisdiction is raised by the manner in which it dealt with it.

It is then said that having allowed the recount the learned Sub-Judge should have ordered the further scrutiny asked for. Into the merits of the case for this, and of the order dismissing the application, it is not permissible for a revising Court to enter: see the Full Bench case M. Appayya Gounder v. Dawood Sahib (1). I can only say therefore that the order appears to have been passed with jurisdiction and so is final.

One of the results of the recount was, as has been seen, to provide P. Venkataswami Naidu with a seat. This man was a party (respondent 7) to the petition, and under R. 12 (2) (a) it was competent to the Court to declare him duly elected. It is pointed out that he put in an application (I. A. No. 806 of 1928) to which he made only the three originally successful candidates parties, and it is urged that it is bad for non-joinder of the remainder. I doubt whether any such application was in fact necessary; but a sufficient answer is that the objection comes from two of those who were made parties.

C. R. Ps. Nos. 1612, 1613 and 1704 of 1928 are accordingly dismissed with costs to respondents in C. R. P. 1704.

There remains C. R. P. 4 of 1929, preferred by the Chairman. He had been made a party to the original petition, and in declaring the petitioner and respondent 7 in those proceedings duly elected the lower Court ordered that the Chairman should pay their costs. The learned Subordinate Judge found justification for this course in the carelessness evinced by the Chairman in counting the votes. The propriety of this order is open to the gravest doubt, because the question of the Chairman's personal culpability was not in issue and not tried. It is quite possible, for all that the enquiry shows, that he was the victim of misconduct on the part of others. These, however, it may be said, are not grounds for interference in revision; and I turn to a more fundamental objection to this part of the order. The Chairman, it is contended, was not a proper party to the petition; and the Court should have struck his name out. It is no doubt true that in England a returning officer may be impleaded as a respondent (Hals. 12, 821 and Rogers, Vol. 2, 266). But there is ground to hold that this is not the law in India. Under R. 12, Municipal Council may appoint a legal practitioner or other person to attend and take such part in the inquiry as the Judge may allow. That does not of course in terms preclude a petitioner from making the Chairman a party, but it does suggest that the framers of the rules did not contemplate that he should do so. There is a statement in a report on a petition decided by the Election Commissioners of the Punjab Govardhan Das v. Lal Chand (2). that there is no provision in the Indian as there is in the English Law for the returning officer being made a respondent, and that, so far as it goes, appears to be correct. In Ramakrishna Reddi v. Nooney Panakalu (A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 1129), it was held by Jackson, J., that a Chairman is not a proper party to an election petition and that the Court ought to have struck out his name. The point has not been so put in the arguments, but I conceive that, by force of R. 6, the Court must guide itself by the terms of O. 1, R. 3, Civil P. C., and here no right to relief was alleged to exist against the Chairman, so that he was not a proper party. On this view the order making him liable for costs cannot be supported and I set it aside, petitioner will recover his costs of this petition from respondents.

Judgment.—This second appeal is against the decision of the lower appellate Court in the matter of a promissory note claim. The promissory note dated 9th June 1920 was executed by defendant 1 in favour of plaintiff 1 on behalf of the joint family of which he was the manager. In a partition suit decree, this promissory note was allotted to the share of one Balkrishnayya although the promissory note appears to have remained with plaintiff 1. On 14th September 1922, Balkrishnayya executed a release deed relinquishing his rights in the suit note in favour of both the plaintiffs. Both the plaintiffs filed this suit to recover the full amount due upon the note. The defence pleaded was a discharge to Balakrishnayya partly by cash and partly by execution of another promissory note. The trial Court held that the payment pleaded by the defendants was true but that it was not binding on the plaintiffs. The lower appellate Court agreed in holding that the payment was true but held further that the plaintiffs had no title to sue, not being holders in due course. It therefore dismissed the suit and the plaintiffs appeal.

The first contention urged by them is that as the promissory note is in the name of plaintiff 1 and has not been endorsed by him to any one else, he is the holder and entitled to recover from the defendants. This to my mind is entirely a new case set up here for the first time. It may be a good case or a bad case, but the defendants have never been given an opportunity of meeting it. It is argued that this is a pure question of law but clearly that is not so. I cannot speculate as to what would have been the defendants' defence if plaintiff 1 alone had sued upon the note. Attempts to raise in second appeal points which are not even in the pleadings and which the other side has never been called upon to meet are not to be lightly permitted in second appeal. The Privy Council has lately condemned such a practice:

"It appears to their Lordships to be highly irregular for any Court either to assume without the admission of all parties that material facts are not in dispute or to proceed to draw inferences from those facts where no evidence of them has been placed before the Court." James R. R. Skinner v. Nannihal Singh (1).

That this present contention is a new case is clear from a perusal of the pleadings and the judgment of the lower Courts. There is no hint in the plaint that plaintiff 1 has any cause of action apart from that of plaintiff 2. The manner in which the plaintiffs became "absolute hukdars" of the promissory note is stated in paragraph 6 to be the release deed. The only prayer in the plaint is to pay the suit amount to both the plaintiffs. There is no issue whatever on this present point and the frame of the only issue shows that it was never raised. The only issue is:

"whether the discharge set up by the defendants is true and binding on the plaintiffs."

If there had been any case that plaintiff 1 alone was entitled to sue as holder the plea of discharge to some one else who never was holder was irrelevant and could not have arisen. A perusal of the judgments of both Courts shows also that the present contention was never raised there, and neither Court has given any finding which can remotely be related to such a contention. I therefore refuse to allow this contention to be raised at this stage.

We are then concerned with the joint rights of both plaintiffs to sue on the footing of the release deed. Plaintiff 1's rights in this matter are no more than plaintiff 2's. So it will be convenient to ask what rights plaintiff 2 now has to sue upon the promissory note. His right is derivable, if anywhere, from the release deed which canveyed to him the right which Balakrishnayya had in the promissory note. What right had Balakrishnayya? The note was not endorsed to him, so that he is not a holder by endorsements. Is he otherwise a holder in due course? It must be held that he clearly was not. A holder in due course must have come into possession of the note if payable to bearer or be an endorsee or payee if payable to the payee. Balakrishnayya never came into possession of the note and in any case the note is payable to plaintiff 1 and not to bearer, and the note was never endorsed to him. He cannot therefore be a holder in due course. That being so, he cannot make his assignees by a release deed holders in due course. The lower appellate Court is therefore quite correct in deciding that the plaintiffs are not holders in due course.

Nor are they joint holders. Plaintiff 2's name does not appear upon the promissory note. No one can sue on a negotiable instrument as holder unless he is named therein as the payee or unless he becomes entitled to it as endorsee or bearer: see Subba Narayan Vathiyar v. Ramaswami Ayyar (2) which is a binding authority on me.

The only right that plaintiff 2 and therefore plaintiff 1 can have is any right which he may have acquired from Balakrishnayya by the assignment itself. That a party can acquire such rights in a negotiable instrument has been held by this Court in several reported cases, the ratio decidendi being that such an assignment is an assignment of a chose in action. No doubt there has been some difference of opinion in this Court as to whether a suit lies on a promissory note by a party as an assignee of a chose in action: early cases, Pattal Ambadi Marhar v. Krishna (3) Abhoy Chetti v. Ramachandra Rao (4) Arunachala Reddi v. Reddy Subba (5), and Ulagappa Chetty v. Ramnathan Chetty (6) saying that he cannot sue, later cases Muhammad Kumarali v. Ranga Rao (7), Muthar Sahib v. Kadir Sahib (8), and Venkatadri v. Lakshminarasimha (9) and Kutalingum Pillai v. Pakiyam Fernandez (10) saying that he can sue, subject to the condition that he takes over the equities to which his assignor was subject. Subramanian Chetty v. Alagappa Chetty (11), Sowcar Lodd Govindoss v. Munappa Naidu (12) and Ramnathan Chetty v. Katha Velan (13), lay down that a negotiable instrument may pass by operation of law without endorsement. The plaintiffs ask me in consequence of this difference of opinion to refer the present appeal to a Full Bench, but clearly that is not necessary for a decision of this case since on neither view can the plaintiffs succeed in their claim. If they cannot sue on the assignment as assignees, they cannot sue at all, since they are not suing as holders, nor was their assignor, Balakrishnayya, from whom they derived their rights as holders. The plaintiffs therefore must sue as assignees of a chose in action or be non-suited and it is only if I follow the cases which rule that they can that the plaintiffs have any case.

Such an assignment only tranfers to the assignee such rights as the assignor had at the time and not the full rights of a holder or of a holder in due course. If the plaintiffs are to be given any relief as assignees of a chose in action, they can only take what Balakrishnnayya had to give, namely the right to recover the unpaid balance of the promissory note amount. But again the question arises if they can be given that relief in this suit, and I do not see how that can be done. Both the lower Courts have found on the facts that the suit promissory note has been fully discharged by part payment and by the execution of a fresh promissory note, and in the lower appellate Court the present appellants did not seriously dispute that. Therefore the promissory note on which they now take their stand has been discharged and is no longer in force. It is not a case where a mere part payment has been made and the balance is still owing on the note itself. It is a case where the note sued upon is dead in law and therefore cannot be a source of any legal rights. Any relief on the footing of the balance still due on the original note can only be granted either by having the fresh note in favour of Balakrishnayya cancelled or by having it endorsed to the plaintiffs. But Balakrishnayya is not a party to this suit, so that neither course is open to me here. I may observe also that this present claim was never raised before the lower appellate Court and has not been raised in the grounds of appeal here.

The appeal must therefore fail in toto and is dismissed with costs.

WALLER AND PANDALAI, JJ.

Gulam Muhammad Ali—Appellant.

v.

Corporation of Madras—Respondent.

Case Referred No. 3 of 1928, Decided on 19th March 1929, by Chief Judge, Court of Small Causes, Madras, for decision of High Court.

(a) Madras City Municipal Act (4 of 1919), S. 111—S. 111 makes liable persons in active pursuits only—Liability ceases on retirement.

Intention of S. 111 s that any person engaged in active pursuit of a profession, art, trade or calling or holding any appointment, is liable to pay profession tax if the income he enjoys therefrom brings him within any of the clauses specified in the schedule. If and when he retires he ceases to be liable. [P 201 C 1]

(b) Madras City Municipal Act (4 of 1919), S. 111, Expln. 2—"Pension" covers also political pensions.

The word pension is used generally and without any qualifications and must be held to cover political pensions as well as pensions in the ordinary sense and consequently a periodical payment made by the State for the support of title conferred by it comes within the definition of "pension." [P 201 C 2]

(c) Madras City Municipality Act (4 of 1919), S. 113—Tax becomes due on assessment.

Profession tax cannot be said to be due till the proper authority has assessed the same by the name of assessee being placed in the proper class. [P 202 C 2]

(d) Madras City Municipal Act (4 of 1919), S. 113—Assessment must be made during period and period of limitation begins to run from date of assessment.

Assessment of taxes payable by each individual is a contemporaneous operation within the period of taxation (year or half year) and the power of assessment conferred by R. 8, Taxation rules, to be properly exercised must be exercised within the half year to which the assessment relates and not retrospectively for several periods together and period of limitation for any suit for such tax begins to run from such date of assessment. [P 204 C 1, 2]

(e) Interpretation of Statutes— Words of enactment clear and imperative—No considerations of inconvenience or hardship can arise—But in absence of express indication consideration of hardship and inconvenience arises—Statutes imposing pecuniary burden must be strictly construed and in case of doubt must be construed in favour of the subject—The principle of strict construction is less applicable in case of public representative bodies for public purpose.

When the words of enactments are clear and imperative, considerations of inconvenience or hardship have no place in its application to circumstances falling within the words. But where there is no express indication in an enactment as to whether the powers given by it were meant to be used in particular circumstances, the fact that great hardship and inconvenience would result thereby is a reason for so construing the words as to meet all attempts to abuse the power, either by exercising them in cases not intended by the statute, or by refusing to exercise them when the occasion for their exercise has arisen. Then again statutes which impose pecuniary burdens are subject to the rule of strict construction and in a case of reasonable doubt the construction most beneficial to the subject is to be adopted, though the principle of strict construction is less applicable where powers are conferred on public representative bodies for essentially public purposes. Judgment.—The questions referred to us under R. 17, Taxation Rules, Madras City Municipal Act of 1919, are three in number :

(1) Whether the payments made by the Government to the Prince of Arcot are in the nature of pension and he is therefore a person in receipt of a pension within the meaning of Expl. 2 to S. 111, City Municipal Act, 1919?

(2) Does the liability of any person to pay profession tax for any half year arise immediately on the expiry of the sixty days mentioned in S. 113, or does it arise only upon his being assessed by the Commissioner for that half year under R. 8, Taxation Rules and served with notice of such assessment?

(3) Is the assessment to profession tax of the Prince of Arcot under R. 8, Taxation Rules and S. 113, City Municipal Act, made on 15th September 1926, invalid for the ten half years commencing from the second half year of 1920-21 ?

The first question is whether the periodical payments made by the Government to the Prince of Arcot are equivalent to receipt by him of a "pension" within the meaning of explanation 2 to S. 111, Madras City Municipal Act. The material part of that section runs as follows :

" Every person not liable for the companies' tax, who, within the City and for the period prescribed in S. 113, exercises a profession, art, trade, or calling or holds any appointment, public or private, bringing him within one or more of the classes of persons specified in the Taxation Rules in Sch. 4 shall pay by way of license fee, and in addition to any other license fee that may be leviable under this Act, a tax as determined under the said Rules."

The intention of the sections seems clear enough. Any person engaged in the active pursuit of a profession, art, trade or calling or holding any appointment, is liable to pay profession tax, if the income he enjoys therefrom brings him within any of the clauses specified in the schedule. If and when he retires he ceases to be liable. So far, however, as the holders of appointments are concerned, Expln. 2 provides that a person in receipt of a pension paid from any source shall be deemed to be person holding an appointment within the meaning of the section. In other words, persons who have once held appointments are deemed to hold them for ever, while retired merchants, bankers, doctors and lawyers living on their invested funds seem to escape. S. 93, District Municipalities Act, draws all classes in and makes, as it should, a distinction between holding an appointment and enjoying a pension. The learned Chief Judge has gone at length into the history of the negotiations between the Government and the Nawab of the Carnatic, which culminated in the agreement of 1867 by which the allowance now in question was fixed. It is not necessary for us to do more than to refer to Ex. D the final letter of the Chief Secretary to the Government of Madras, recording the agreement. The allowance is therein described as "settled on the title," "for the support of the title," "attached to the title." Mr. Rangachariar relies on these expressions as showing that the allowance is no more than an apparage to the title and is not a pension properly so called. Periodical payments made by the State for the support of a title conferred by it certainly come within the definition of "pension." One of the definitions of the word in the Oxford Dictionary is :

" a regular payment to persons of rank . . . . . to enable them to maintain their state."

That definition covers the present case exactly. From another point of view, it is equally clear that the allowance is a pension. The consideration for it was the surrender by the Prince of certain rights. Webster's Distionary gives, as one of the definitions of "pension." :

" a stated allowance or stipend made in consideration . . . . . of the surrender of rights."

Several decisions have been cited before us, wherein it was held that certain allowances paid by Government were political pensions. We think it unnecessary to refer to them. It seems to us perfectly clear that the allowance in question is a political pension. Mr. Rangachariar contends that the word "pension" in exception 2 should be limited to allowances drawn by retired holders of appointments in consideration of past services. The word is not defined in the Act, but we see no reason so to limit its application. It is used generally and without any qualification and must be held to cover political pensions, as well as pensions in the ordinary sense. The first question is answered in the affirmative.

The 2nd and 3rd questions referred may be disposed of together. They raise the question whether the assessment of the appellant made on 15th September 1926, for ten half years commencing from the second half year of 1920-21 and purporting to be made under R. 8, Taxation Rules and S. 113, City Municipal Act, was valid.

The appellant was on 15th September 1926 (i. e.,) within the 1st half year of 1926-27, assessed to profession tax for that half year and 11 previous half years or 6 years in all. The reference relates only to the first ten half years of the above period apparently because the appellant did not question the opinion of the learned Chief Judge of the Small Causes Court who heard this matter that it was competent to the respondent to assess the appellant for the half year in which the assessment took place and for one previous half year, or a period of a year in all. It is not disputed that the respondent was authorised, if the appellant was otherwise liable to profession tax, to assess him for the half year in which the assessment was made.

The dispute was about the eleven previous half years and though the reference expressly relates to the first 10 of those half years, if the opinion of this Court in the matter referred affects the assessment for the eleventh half year which has been left out from the reference, it is competent to this Court under R. 18, Taxation Rules, to pass such order as it thinks fit.

The argument for the respondent Corporation is firstly that profession tax becomes due and owing as soon as the minimum period of 60 days required by S. 113 has expired even without anything done on the part of the Corporation to assess it and inform the assessee of the amount payable and secondly that even if the tax becomes due and owing only after assessment and intimation of the same to the assessee, it is open to the Corporation to assess a person to the tax at any future time within six years after the expiration of the half year for which the assessment is made.

We think that these contentions cannot be upheld. In the first place the profession tax becomes due and owing not merely by the exercise of the profession, art, trade or calling, during the period required by S. 113, but by the assessment to the tax based upon such exercise. Reliance is placed on the words in that section that :

"if the tax due in respect of the half year is not paid, the Commissioner shall cause a notice to be served on such person."

But this section must be read with other provisions of the Act. By S. 138 the rules and tables embodied in Sch. 4, shall be read as part of Chap. 5 in which the sections relating to profession tax and other taxes occur. By S. 111, profession tax is imposed upon persons who fall :

"within one or more of the classes of persons specified in the Taxation Rules in Sch. 4," and the amount payable is "a tax as determined under the said rules." R. 8, Sch. 4, provides that persons shall be assessed by the Commissioner to the profession tax under one of the 9 classes therein specified on a scale to be determined within certain limits by the Corporation from time to time. By R. 9 the Commissioner is authorized in the case of persons not drawing a fixed salary to determine the class in which a persons falls on certain general considerations but without calling for accounts from the assessee. Rule 12 gives an assessee to profession tax who is dissatisfied with the assessment by the Commissioner the right to apply to him for revision, provided the application is delivered to the Municipal Office within 15 days from the date of the service of the notice under S. 113. This indicates clearly that the tax said to be "due" in S. 113, is that to which the assessee has been first assessed under the powers conferred by R. 8. It also shows that the notice under S. 113 is the initial and essential step in the process of final determination of the tax according to the provisions for revision of the assessment; for until that notice is served and for 15 days thereafter the right of claiming revision is preserved. That notice has another importance because under R. 22, the tax demanded may be distrained, for if it is unpaid for 15 days and the omission is not satisfactorily explained. R. 14 provides that if the assessee is dissatisfied with the orders of the Commissioner on an application for revision, the application must be heard and decided by the Standing Committee and that a copy of the Committee's decision should be sent to the applicant within two days thereof. R. 15 then confers on the assessee a right of appeal to the Small Cause Court provided notice of appeal is given to the Corporation in 10 days and the appeal itself is presented in 14 days from the date of the decision of Standing Committee and the applicant has paid in the case of a tax leviable by half yearly instalments (profession tax is such a tax) the half yearly instalment due under the order appealed against. From the above provisions it is clear that the tax is not due till the Commission has assessed the person liable and that even then it is only provisionally fixed for. It is liable to revision in the manner mentioned above.

A reference to the corresponding provision of the Acts 1 of 1884 and 3 of 1904 shows that the machinery of assessment and revision which was provided for in those Acts in the body of the Act is in the present Act of 1919 relegated to Sch. 4. The comparison is instructive as showing that the classification or assessment by the Commissioner is as essential now as it was under the former Acts. A bird's eye view of the comparative provisions of the two earlier Acts will be found in Veeraraghavulu v. President, Corporation oi Madras (1), at p. 131. Under S. 101, of the Act of 1884 corresponding to S. 118 of the Act of 1900 the President was required to keep lists of persons liable to pay profession tax and other taxes. In S. 4 of the present Act, R. 1 requires the Commissioner to prepare and maintain property tax registers. S. 103 of the Act of 1884 corresponding to S. 120 of the Act of 1904 made persons exercising a profession or holding an appointment in the City liable to pay profession tax. S. 111 of the present Act corresponds to this. S. 104 of the Act of 1884 corresponding to S. 121 of the Act of 1904 empowered the President to determine in which of the scheduled classes any person was to be placed and to revise such classification from time to time. Now R. 8, Sch. 4, empowers the Commissioner to assess persons to profession tax under one of the nine scheduled classes and R. 14 empowers him to revise the classification.

Section 106 of the Act of 1884 corresponding to S. 125 empowered the President in case the tax due on assessment or revision was unpaid, to send a notice that in case the tax was unpaid for 15 days after service of the notice the defaulter will be prosecuted and those sections empowered such prosecution. S. 107 of the Act of 1884 corresponding to S. 420 of the Act of 1904 empowered the Magistrate to impose a penalty of twice the amount of the tax. In the present Act prosecution for non-payment of profession tax has been done away with but the notice mentioned in S. 113 corresponds to the notice mentioned above and the present notice has two objects. It enables the assessee if he so desires to apply in 15 days to get the assessment revised and the Corporation, in case the tax remains unpaid for 15 days without good cause to distrain on the defaulter's goods. It follows that neither under the old Acts nor under the present can the profession tax be said to be 'due' till the proper authority has assessed the same by the name of the assessee being placed in the proper class. Under S. 370 (a) of the present Act such act of classification or assessment should be evidenced by a writing signed by the Commissioner or by some Municipal Official delegated by him in writing under S. 16 and it is noteworthy that under this last section the power of revision given to the Commissioner by R. 14 cannot be delegated.

But it is urged that no time is fixed for the Commissioner to make the assessment and that it is therefore open to him to make assessments backward for a period of six years. This limit on the alleged power of backward assessment is suggested on the ground that the period of limitations for bringing a suit under S. 396 for a tax after it has become due and owing is six years. But, if the power of backward assessment exists, the limit suggested for its exercise disappears. For the right to sue accrues only after the tax has become due and if it becomes due, as we have held it does, only on assessment by the Commissioner the period of limitation for any suit must begin from the date of the assessment. In other words the contention for the Corporation leads logically to the result that, though once a tax is assessed and has become due, the Corporation has only six years to recover it by suit, yet the Commissioner is authorised to put off assessing persons to profession tax for an unlimited period and so put off indefinitely the due date of the tax and the liability of the assessee. The startling nature of this result is what compels the respondent to impose on himself a supposed limit, really illusory, of six years for the exercise of the power contended for. By itself this would be a strong ground for insisting upon explicit and clear foundation in the provisions of the Act and the rules thereunder for the existence of such a power. It is admitted that there is no express provision in the Act and the rules which confers any such authority. But it is said that there is also nothing which negatives it and in the absence of any such prohibition the authority must it is argued, be deemed to exist. Both on an examination of the scheme and purpose of the City Municipal Act and on general grounds of construction of similar enactments we are unable to read, by implication into that Act, the power contended for.

The scheme of imposition, assessment and collection of taxes laid down in the Act would seem to show that while the rate of taxation is fixed for each year begining 1st April by the Council at the Budget meeting in the February previous (S. 156) the assessment of taxes payable by each individual is a contemporaneous operation within the period of taxation (year or half year) in which while the Commissioner is afforded facilities for obtaining all relevant information on which assessment is to be based (see Ss. 114, 115 and 368) the assessee is required within a very short time after the assessment to take all his objections to the assessment proposed (R. 12, Taxation Rules). It is hardly consistent with this scheme that the tax fixed by the Council, say for 1920-21, in February 1920 should have to be assessed and realised from the individual tax payers six years (as have pointed out an unlimited number of years) later, when the Commissioner charged with the duty of assessment would find that all relevant information has ceased to be available and the assessee might long ago have ceased to exercise the profession and enjoy the income or salary from which he might be expected to pay the tax. In the case of companies tax to which similar provisions to those applicable to profession tax are applicable, the incongruity is still more marked. No big concern like a limited company with obligations to its shareholders which has to produce a balance sheet in each working year and on the result of that balance sheet to declare dividends to its shareholders could be carried on if its Municipal assessment in that year is uncertain and is liable to be suddenly demanded for several years together at a perfectly unknown and indefinite date. The learned Chief Judge has referred to other aspects of the hardship to which assessees would be put if the power contended for by the Corporation were upheld. We think it unnecessary to refer to them.

In R. (6), Sch. 4 of the Act, it is expressly provided that when the Commissioner makes an amendment of the property tax register as he is empowered to do under R. (3) by altering, adding or deleting items therein, such amendment shall be deemed to have taken effect from the earliest date in the current year on which the circumstances justifying the amendment existed. This rule is remarkable both for what it enacts and for what it forbids. In the case of property tax if a property has escaped taxation for a period of years, the Commissioner may in any subsequent year by amending the register assess it to the tax. But the rule says that the tax is to be operative only from the earliest date in the current year in which the omission was rectified. Similarly, if a property has been taxed too low, the Commissioner may amend the register. But in that case also the enhanced tax due to the amendment takes effect only from the earliest date in the year current when the amendment was made on which the property was liable to the enahanced tax. The careful prohibition against retrospective assessment in the case of property tax beyond the beginning of the current year is to our mind a very strong indication that in the case of other taxes like the profession tax retrospective assessment to a greater extent was not contemplated. Property tax is a yearly tax though payable half yearly. Profession tax is a half yearly tax. With this difference, if the analogy of the property tax may be used, the inference would seem to be that the power of assessment conferred by R. 8, Taxation Rules, to be properly exercised must be exercised within the half year to which the assessment relates.

Further, the companies tax imposed by S. 110 and the profession tax imposed by S. 111 are expressly by those sections levied:

"by way of license fee and in addition to any other license fee that may be leviable under this Act."

The tax on carriages and animals imposed by S. 116 is another instance of a license fee described as a tax. This is made clear by S. 121 which says that when the tax due on any carriage or animal is paid the Commissioner shall grant the person a license to keep such carriage or animal for the period to which the payment relates and by S. 360 which speaks of the license under S. 121 in connexion with the prosecution of a defaulter. The other license fee referred to are those leviable under Cap. 12 of the Act and Sch. 4 thereof read with S. 365 (2). The essence of a license is that it is a permission which must be usually obtained before the thing licensed is done (Wharton's Law Lexicon, p. 428). The City Municipal Act in several sections (e. g., Ss. 287, 290 and 295) requires that the license mentioned therein should be obtained in respect of existing undertakings within the first month of the year and in respect of new undertakings before they begin and it is an offence to carry on an undertaking which requires a license, without it. In the case of such licenses, those who ought to get them are expected to apply for and obtain them on payment of the fees fixed by the Council under S. 365 (2), In default, they stand the risk of prosecution and the Magistrate is required in case of conviction to recover in addition to any fine that may be imposed the license fee and pay it over to the Corporation. But this coercive recovery of the fee does not entitle the convicted person to the license which if wanted must be obtained by further payment, S. 365 (8) and (9). In the case of license fees described as companies tax and profession the amount of which depends on the rates fixed by the Council for the classification of the particular individual in one of the several classes (and this is true to a certain extent in respect of the tax on vehicles and animals) the fact that the levy is still declared to be by way of license fee strengthens the inference that the assessment is intended to be made before or during the period to which it relates and could not have been intended to be made long afterwards retrospectively for several periods together.

When the words of an enactment are clear and imperative, considerations of inconvenience or hardship have no place in its application to circumstances falling within the words. But where there is no express indication in an enactment as to whether the powers given by it were meant to be used in particular circumstances, the fact that great hardship and inconveniece would result thereby is a reason for so construing the words as to meet all attempts to abuse the power either by exercising them in cases not intended by the statute or by refusing to exercise them when the occasion for their exercise has arisen: Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes 10th. 6. p. 226. Statutes which impose pecuniary burdens are subject to the rule of strict construction and in a case of reasonable doubt the construction most beneficial to the subject is to be adopted: ibid pp. 503 and 504 though the principle of strict construction is less applicable where the powers are conferred on public representative bodies for essentially public purposes: ibid p. 530. The only inconvenience that may be urged to result from the Corporation not having the power contended for is that some persons who may have escaped taxation to profession tax in previous years cannot be assessed thereto in subsequent years. But the inconvenience, if such, it really is, already exists in respect to property tax, far the most important source of municipal revenue. And after all if the municipal executive is vigilant and efficient such cases must be comparatively rare. On the other hand, a power to assess persons for many years retrospectively if granted is more likely to encourage slackness and inefficiency on the part of the municipal executive and also will produce very great hardships on those who are suddenly called upon to pay in a lump sum the taxes which ought to be met out of current income. The present case in which the appellant was called upon to pay in addition to the tax for the current half year a sum of Rs. 4,600 and odd on account of eleven and half years' arrears is a good illustration. We can find no justification for this either in the express terms of the Act or in any reasonable construction of its intention. The decision in Gill v. Meller and Gill v. Monday (2) is no authority in favour of the respondent as in that case the necessary steps had been taken in previous years to make the rate an arrear and all that remained was its collection. The decision was merely that when a rate is duly made and published, it is the duty of the parties concerned, to seek the collector and pay it.

Having regard to the difference between the procedure prescribed for making and publishing the rates according to the English Acts and that prescribed for the assessment of property tax under the City Municipal Act, the appellant not having been assessed at all in respect of the previous back years before 15th September 1926, there were no arrears before that date.

Our conclusion on the 2nd and 3rd questions referred is that liability to pay profession tax arises only after assessment under R. 8, Taxation Rules, and that the appellant Prince of Arcot not having been assessed in respect of the eleven and half years commencing from the 2nd half year of 1920-21 within several half years, the assessment of 15th September 1926 was invalid in respect of those eleven and half years.

Second Appeal No. 44 of 1926, Decided on 4th October 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, Trichinopoly, in Appeal No. 6 of 1925.

(a) Hindu Law—Joint family—Manager—Decree in previous suit against father not expressly described as manager—Decree is binding on sons in subsequent suit as res judicata—Civil P. C., S. 11, Expl. 6.

The circumstances that neither the father of A, B and C, nor C himself, who were parties to a prior suit, was described expressly as manager of the family, does not by itself make the decision in the prior suit not binding in a subsequent suit on A, B and C who are members of an undivided family. To such a case the provisions of S. 11, Expln. 6, Civil P. C., apply and the decision in prior suit becomes res judicata as against A, B and C: A. I. R. 1927 *P. (b) Limitation Act, Art. 142—Delivery of properties given to judgment-creditor through Court—Limitation runs from such delivery.

Even if the judgment-debtors continue to be in the possession of the properties in spite of the delivery of the properties made through Court, yet, as against the judgment-debtors to the suit and persons represented by them, the effect of such delivery should be taken to be that the decree-holder is in possession; and consequently a fresh cause of action arises against the judgment-debtors, and limitation begins to run only from the date of the delivery made through Court: 27 Mad. 262; and *A. Judgment.—On the allegations that the plaintiffs' father obtained a decree against the father of the present defendants and also against defendant 3, in O. S. No. 1180 of 1904, for the suit lands, and took delivery thereof on 27th September 1908, through Court in execution of the decree, and that in 1909 the defendants trespassed upon about 2 acres of the said lands and in 1917 upon about 5 more acres and that they were also attempting to disturb the plaintiff's enjoyment of the lands in B schedule, the plaintiffs instituted the original suit for possession of the A schedule lands, and for an injunction and if necessary also possession of the B schedule lands, attached to the plaint, with mesne profits.

Of defendants 1, 2 and 3, who are brothers, defendant 3 disclaimed all interest in the suit lands, and defendant 2 was subsequently exonerated by the plaintiffs, and defendant 1, the really contesting defendant in the suit alleged that the lands belonged to the defendants, that in the partition which took place 25 years prior to the suit most of the suit lands fell to defendant 1's share that after the death of their father the defendants were in possession of his properties also, that the decree in the prior suit was not binding on the defendants, that the plaintiff's father never took actual delivery of the plaint lands in execution of the prior decree, and that the suit was barred by limitation. There was also a further plea raised in the additional written statement of defendant 1 that the suit for injunction in respect of B schedule properties was not maintainable as the plaintiffs were not in possession of the same.

Six issues were framed by the District Munsif, issue 1 raising the question of alleged trespass and also limitation; issue 2, raised the question of partition; issue 3 raised the question whether defendants 1 and 2 were precluded from putting forward the pleas by reason of the decision in O. S. No. 1180 of 1904; issue 4 raised the question whether the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction in respect of B schedule lands; and issue 5 was whether defendants 1 and 2 has acquired title by reason of adverse possession of both warams as contended by them; and issue 6 raised the question of the relief to which the plaintiffs were entitled.

The District Munsif found that the partition set up by the defendants was not proved, that the trespass alleged by the plaintiff was proved, and that the suit was not barred by limitation as it was filed within 12 years from the date of the delivery of the lands to the plaintiffs' father in execution of the decree in the prior suit. The plaintiffs were given a decree for the possession of the suit lands (both A and B schedules) with mesne profits.

Defendant 1 preferred an appeal from the District Munsif's decree. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge reversed the decision of the District Munsif and dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs have preferred the present second appeal. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge upheld the decree of the District Munsif that the partition set up by the defendants had not been proved. That is a finding of fact and must be accepted. As I understand the learned Additional Subordinate Judge's judgment, he reversed the decision of the 1st Court by reason of his findings upon 2 points viz., that defendants 1 and 2 were not bound by the decree in the prior suit, and that plaintiffs had no possession within 12 years prior to the present suit. It is therefore necessary to consider those two points at some length.

The prior suit was instituted by the plaintiffs' father against the defendants' father (Korattayyan) who was defendant 82 in the prior suit, and the present defendant 3 who was defendant 83 in the prior suit. The defendants' father is said to have been very old at the time, and defendant 3, the next senior most male member of the family and the eldest son of Korattayyan, was also a party to the suit. The defendants' father having died, the litigation was continued against his representatives, defendant 83 (the present defendant 3), already on record. The previous suit was contested by the defendants but the then plaintiff was given a decree by the District Munsif. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge held that defendants 1 and 2 were not bound by that decree because neither the defendants' father nor defendant 3 was sued as manager, the learned Judge's view evidently being that unless they were sued expressly as managers, that decree could not be binding upon defendants 1 and 2. His reasoning is contained in para 10 of his judgment:

"Besides, there are no indications to show that either defendant 3, or the father of defendants 1 to 3 was sued as manager. If the father was sued in his capacity as manager, defendant 3 would have been an unnecessary party. If defendant 3 was the manager their father would have been unnecessary. The plaintiffs' father had to file a number of suits; apparently he was not aware of the existence of these defendants. But I do not think that the evidence justifies in inference that either defendant 3 or defendant 3's father was sued as manager of the family of defendants. I find that defendants 1 and 2 were not bound by the decree."

I think the learned Subordinate Judge's decision of this point is unsustainable. The circumstance that neither the father of the present defendants nor defendant 3 was expressly described in the prior plaint as manager is not conclusive to show that the decision is not binding on defendants 1 and 2. The decision in Kunjan Chetty v. Sidda Pillai (1) and Subbanna Bhatta v. Subbanna (2), are authorities in support of this position. As remarked by Benson and Wallis, JJ. in Subbanna Bhatta v. Subbanna (2) at p. 326:

"Further, where as here, the managing member is sued for the purpose of charging the joint family property, we think, he must be considered to be sued as a representative of the joint family even if it is not so expressly stated in the plaint."

As remarked by Subramanya Ayyar and Benson, JJ., in the case reported in Kunjan Chetty v. Sidda Pillai (1) at p. 462:

"If the father is manager and the question in issue is one which equally affects him and the other members of the family, and if the suit is properly defended, the adjudication will bind all the persons interested along with the father for the reason that, in that case, it must be presumed that the father represents the interest of all."

Thus the circumstances that neither the defendants' father nor defendant 3 who were parties to the prior suit was described expressly as manager of the family, does not by itself make the decision in the prior suit not binding on the present defendants who were members of an undivided family. Further the provisions of S. 11, Expl. 6, Civil P. C., have also to be considered in this connexion, to see whether the prior decision is res judicata against the present defendants:

(1) [1899] 22 Mad. 461.
(2) [1907] 30 Mad. 321=17 M. L. J. 180.

"Where persons litigate bona fide in respect of a public right or of a private right claimed in common for themselves and others, all persons interested in such right, shall, for the purpose of this section (S. 11) be deemed to claim under the persons so litigating."

As decided by the Privy Council in the case reported in Lingan Gowda v. Bastan Gowda (3) a decree obtained by or against the managing member of the joint Hindu family is binding upon minor members of the family, under S. 11 Expl. 6, if it appears to the Court that the manager was acting in the former litigation on behalf of the minors in their interests. Their Lordships observed at p. 453 (of 51 Bom.) :

"In the case of a Hindu family where all have rights, it is impossible to allow each member of the family to litigate the same point over and over again, and each infant to wait till he comes of age and then bring an action or bring an action by his guardian before ; and in each of these cases, therefore, the Court looks to the Expl. 6, S. 11, Civil P.C. to see whether or not the leading member of the family has been acting either on behalf of minors in their interest. or if they are majors, with the assent of the majors."

The finding of the lower Court as regards the binding nature of the decree in the previous suit could not I think be supported.

The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on the question of limitation also is, I think, unsustainable. If the decree was binding on the joint family, including the present defendants, then the delivery of possession made to the decree-holder of that decree was also equally binding on the joint family. The learned District Munsiff in the present case came to the conclusion that under Ex. B the lands included in the decree were actually delivered to the decree-holder (father of the present plaintiffs) on 27th September 1908. The present suit was filed on 27th September 1920 and is prima facie not barred by limitation. From the learned Subordinate Judge's judgment, it is not quite clear whether he was or was not satisfied that the decree-holder got actual possession in execution and was in possession for a time, however short, of the said properties after the delivery made to him through Court under Ex. B. It is observed in paras. 16 and 18 of the lower appellate Court's judgment that :

"the evidence is hardly satisfactory to show that the plaintiffs or their lessee or their servants ever enjoyed the property in pursuance of the delivery under Ex. B."

The question to be considered is not whether the decree-holder or his servants "actually enjoyed" the property (para. 16) but whether they were in possession by virtue of the delivery made through Court. There is difference between "possession" and 'enjoyment'. Even if the defendants continued to be in the possession of the properties in spite of the delivery of the properties made through Court yet, as against the defendants to the suit and persons represented by them, the effect of such delivery should be taken to be that the decree-holder was in possession ; and consequently a fresh cause of action would arise against the defendants, and limitation would begin to run only from the date of the delivery made through Court. This is made clear by the observations of Sir S. Subramanya Ayyar, Offig. C. J. and Bhashyam Iyengar, J., in the case reported in K. K. Venkatakrishna Row v. V. Venkappa (4) at p. 270 :

"If the judgment-debtor is in possession, such delivery operates as a delivery of actual possession."

The recent decision of a Bench of two learned Judges of this Court (Waller and Madhavan Nair, JJ.) in the case reported in Kamayya v. Mahalakshmi (5) also supports this proposition. In that case, the plaintiff obtained a decree for possession and applied for delivery. He obtained only symbolical possession and not actual possession. The defendant was in possession both before and after the delivery for a total period of about 20 years. Plaintiff waited for nearly 12 years from the date of the symbolical delivery and then brought a suit against the same defendant for recovery of possession. The learned Judges held that the suit was not barred by limitation, as the symbolical delivery gave rise to fresh period of limitation as against the judgment-debtor who was not entitled to deny that he was dispossessed, even though he was not actually evicted. In fact the Privy Council in the case reported in Radha Krishna v. Ram Bahadur (6) held that symbolical possession was sufficient to interrupt adverse possession, if the adverse possessors were parties to the proceedings in which it was given. The Privy Council approved of the decision of a Full Bench of five learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court, in the case reported in Juggobhundhu Mukerjee v. Ramchander Bysack (7). This has been the view followed by this High Court in the cases reported in Govind Bidiraj v. Venkata Sastrulu (8) and D. Kamayya v. B. Mahalakshmi (9). The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on the question of limitation is therefore unsustainable.

It therefore follows that even if the decree-holder did not obtain actual possession, a fresh cause of action arises from the date of the delivery made in execution, and so the present suit is not barred. As the decision of the lower appellate Court has proceeded on erroneous principles, I reverse that decision and remand the appeal to the lower Court for fresh disposal according to law on the evidence on record having regard to the observations contained in this judgment. The costs of the second appeal will abide and follow the result of the decision of the appeal on remand. The court-fee paid on the second appeal memorandum will be refunded to the appellants.

Commr. of Income-tax, Madras—Respondent.

O. P. Nos. 177 and 178 of 1928, Decided on 23rd October 1929.

 * (a) Income-tax Act (1922), Ss. 22 (4) and 37—Decision regarding assessment arrived at after investigation and enquiry—Income-tax authorities are competent to reopen the decision—Income-tax authorities are not Courts and hence principle of res judicata does not apply to them—Civil P. C. S. 11.

When in a previous year of assessment a decision is arrived at after investigation and enquiry, that certain amounts standing in the name of certain ladies in the petitioner's accounts, were stridhanam amounts belonging to them, and as such the interest paid in respect of the said amounts, is held to be a valid deduction, it is still open to the Income-tax authorities to reopen the question of the ownership of the amounts in a subsequent year of assessment, and the authorities not constituting a Court, are not barred by principle of res judicata. (Case law discussed). [P 210 C 2, P 213 C 2]

 * (b) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 23 (4)—Income-tax officer cannot arbitrarily change assessment—He should be guided by principles of natural justice—If fresh evidence is available, he can come to different conclusions.

Where Income-tax Officials have after enquiry proceeded to assess the assessee on a certain basis, though they may be entitled to reopen the enquiry they cannot arbitrarily change the assessment simply on the ground that the succeeding officer does not agree with the preceding officer's finding. The principles of natural justice or judicial dealing which Courts impose upon Income-tax Officers would prevent them capriciously setting aside the order of their predecessors based on an enquiry. But if fresh facts come to light which on an investigation would entitle the Income-tax Officers to come to a different conclusion from that of his predecessor he is entitled to reopen the question. [P 214 C 2, P 215 C 1]

 * (c) Income-tax Act (1922), Ss. 22 and 23—Proviso to S. 22 (4) read with S 23 (4) limits power of Income-tax Officer to call for accounts—But when testing allegations of assessee made in the return he can call for any evidence including accounts—On non-production of accounts presumptions can be drawn under Evidence Act S. 114 Illus. (g) and (h).

The proviso to sub-S. (4) S. 22 when read with S. 23 (4) only limits the power to call for accounts for more than three years prior to the previous year when the Income-tax Officer has to make the assessment to the best of his judgment where the conditions mentioned in S. 23 (4) exist. Where, however, during the course of the enquiry the Income-tax Officer is not going to make the assessment to the best of his judgment owing to want of materials but proceeds to make an enquiry as regards the truth or otherwise of the allegations made by the assessee in his return there is nothing to prevent the Income-tax Officer from requiring the assessee to produce any evidence including accounts. And on non-production of the account books the case will be governed by Evidence Act, S. 114, Illus. (g) and (h). [P 215 C 2]

M. Patanjali Sastri—for Commissioner of Income-tax.

Judgment.—The assessees are a Hindu joint family and were sought to be assessed for the year 1926-27 as members of a joint family. They claimed an allowance for interest which they said was paid on sums of money standing in the books as borrowings from the wives of the male members. These sums according to the assessees have been standing for several years in their books as moneys which belonged to the ladies and which they lent to the firm and on which interest has been paid to them. So far as the female members are concerned, it is not disputed that they were being taxed separately as if the interest paid to them was income which they derived from moneys which they lent to the firm. This was going till 1923 when the Income-tax Officer instituted enquiry as to whether these sums were really loans to the trade made by the female members. Notice was given, enquiry was held, affidavits were filed and the Income-tax Officer came to the conclusion that these were loans and the allowance was made for interest which was paid to the female members of the family. This went on according to the petitioners till the accounting year 1925-26. In 1926-27 enquiry was again opened on this question. The Income-tax Officer wanted to reopen the question and he asked the assessees to produce the accounts from 1917-20. A combined notice was issued under S. 22 (4) and 23 (2). The accounts from 1917-20 were not produced, it being alleged that the books were not available as they were lost. Upon that the Income-tax Officer of Sattur disallowed the claim made for reduction on account of interest paid to the female members and his note is:

"Interest payments to the asseesee's female relations have been disallowed as the assessees have withheld the production of earlier books which alone will show whether the amounts standing to their credit are their own stridhanam amounts or not."

He evidently acted on the mere fact of non-production of the account books. An appeal was made to the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax who after setting out all the facts in para. 2 of his order held that the Income-tax Officer was not precluded from reopening the question. He made further enquiries, examined the parents and relations of the ladies and came to the conclusion for the reasons given by him that these amounts were not proved to be the stridhanam moneys of the ladies lent to the firm. He upheld the Income-tax Officer's decision. Then there was an appeal to the Commissioner and he upheld the order of the Assistant Commissioner and refused to refer the questions asked on the ground that no questions of law arose. On a petition to the High Court he was ordered to refer the following questions:

(a) Whether when in a previous year of assessment a decision was arrived at after investigation and enquiry that certain amounts standing in the name of certain ladies in the petitioners' accounts were the stridhanam amounts belonging to them and as such the interest paid in respect of the said amounts was held to be a valid deduction, it is open to the Income-tax authorities to reopen the question of the ownership of the amounts in a subsequent year of assessment and whether the authorities are not barred by principle of res judicata or otherwise from reopening the said question.

(b) Whether when amounts are shown in the assessee's account books as the amounts belonging to certain ladies of the family and the Income-tax authorities have treated the said amounts for several years as such and when they have assessed the ladies separately in respect of the said amount on that basis, it is competent for the authorities to levy assessment in respect of the very same amount on the petitioners, the assessment on the ladies having become final not having been set aside by appropriate proceedings.

(c) Whether in the absence of any affirmative evidence on the part of the Crown it is open to the authorities to presume that the amounts standing prima facie in the name of the ladies belonged to the petitioners.

(d) Whether there was any legal evidence before the Income-tax Officer and the Assistant Commissioner in support of their findings as to the ownership of the said amounts.

(e) Whether there is any jurisdiction for the Income tax authorities purporting to act under S. 37 of the Act to call upon an assessee to produce accounts relating to a period prior to three years of assessment and whether any inference can be drawn against the assessee by reason of non-production thereof of such accounts.

(f) Whether when goods are sent to an assessee for the purpose of sale on commission and a certain small amount is charged on the consignor for each bag sent as and from mahimai which is paid over by the assessee either immediately or subsequently to the trustees of the mahimai fund (sic) intact, the said amount is liable to be assessed for income-tax.

(g) Whether when debts are actually written off by the assessees as an irrecoverable bad debt it is open to the authorities to disallow a deduction in respect of the same on the ground that the origin of the debt has not been proved.

It is argued before us that where an Income-tax Officer holds an enquiry and comes to a decision that decision has the force of res judicata and precludes the question being reopened subsequently and that even if not res judicata it operates as an estoppel; secondly, that the Income-tax Officer was not entitled to call for accounts relating to a period more than three years prior to the previous year as he is prohibited from doing so by the proviso to S. 22 (4); that the requisition for the production of the account books for the years 1917-20 was therefore illegal and consequently no adverse inference can be drawn from the non-production of the account books nor can the non-production be made the basis of an assessment and that in the present case the Income-tax Officer having proceeded mainly on that ground alone the assessment levied by him on that footing is illegal.

As regards the question of res judicata we do not think the contention can be accepted. The argument for the petitioners is that where an authority is constituted by a statute for determining judicially the legal rights and obligations of parties whether inter se or between themselves and the Crown and where that authority has to determine not only whether an obligation exists but also the measure of that obligation. that authority is a Court and the decisions of that authority are final and conclusive subject to such remedies by way of appeal or otherwise as are conferred by law. For this broad proposition there is no authority.

So far as the Income-tax Act is concerned, there is nothing in the Act which states that an Income-tax Officer proceeding to assess the income of an assessee and to determine the amount of such assessment is a Court. On the contrary the provisions of S. 37 suggest that except for certain purposes the Income-tax Officer is not a Court.

Section 37 states that the Income-tax Officers specified therein shall for the purpose of Chap. 4 have same powers as are vested in a Court under the Civil Procedure Code when trying a suit in respect of the following matters, namely; (a) enforcing the attendance of any persons and examining him on oath or affirmation; (b) compelling the production of accounts and (c) issuing commissions for the examination of witnesses and that any proceeding before an Income-tax Officer, Assistant Commissioner or Commissioner under this chapter shall be deemed to be a "judicial proceeding" within the meaning of Ss. 193 and 228, I. P. C.

If an Income-tax Officer in making an investigation was a Court, there is no necessity for the provisions of S. 37. It is only for the purposes stated in that section that he is to be deemed a Court.

In Lal Mohan Poddar v. Emperor (1) it was held that a proceeding before an Income-tax Officer on the production of account books pursuant to a notice under S. 23 (2), Income-tax Act, is a judicial proceeding only for the purposes of Ss. 193 and 228 but not of S. 196 of the Penal Code and that a conviction under S. 196 for the production of false accounts is bad in law. The learned Judges (C. C. Ghose and Cammiade, JJ.) observed;

"As we read S. 37, it seems to us to be clear that the legislature has for the purpose of punishing offences under Ss. 193 and 228 of the Penal Code (and under no others) converted proceedings before the officers mentioned therein, which are not judicial proceedings ordinarily, into judicial proceedings."

In In re, Harmukh Rai Dulichand (2) the question arose whether an Income-tax Officer is a Court. Rankin, C. J., observed:

"It has been said that the Income-tax Officer must proceed in a judicial manner and S. 37 has been mentioned in this connexion. Fundamentally, no doubt the Income-tax Officer must proceed in a judicial spirit and come to a judicial conclusion upon properly ascertained facts though I would point out that the Income-tax Officer is not a Court, he has not the procedure of a Court, and he is to some extent a party or Judge in his own case."

(1) A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 724=55 Cal. 423.
(2) A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 587=56 Cal. 39 (S. B.).

In Mahader Ganesh v. Secretary of State (3) the question was whether an officer acting under the Sea Customs Act, 1878, and adjudicating on the question whether a certain property was to be confiscated was a Court and it was held that he was not a Court. Sir Norman Macleod, C. J., observed :

"I have no doubt that the Collector, who is not bound to adjudge on confiscation and penalty as if the matter was proceedings in a Court of law according to the provisions of the Civil or Criminal Procedure Code, dealt with the various statements before him in a careful and judicial manner."

The question again arose for decision on a reference in Commr. of Income-tax, Madras v. Massey & Co. Ltd. Madras (4) where the question referred was whether the decision of an Income-tax Officer in a previous enquiry constituted the matter res judicata and the Full Bench answered the question in the negative. Though there is no discussion in the judgment of this question as the Judges evidently thought it was not argueable it cannot be said that because no reasons are given in the judgment the opinion is not binding on us. It was an answer to a question referred and not merely obiter.

Reference has been made to In re, Nataraja Ayyar (5), where the question was as regards the power of the High Court to issue a writ of certiorari against an Income-tax Officer who instituted criminal proceedings under S. 476, Criminal P. C. Sundara Ayyar, J., was of opinion that the High Court has no jurisdiction. Sadasiva Ayyar, J. was of opinion that the High Court had jurisdiction. There are some observations in the judgment of both the learned Judges which, it is argued, support the contention of the petitioners that the Income-tax Officer is a Court. The facts were that the Income-tax Officer issued a notice under S. 476, Criminal P. C., to show cause why the petitioner should not be prosecuted for making a false statement.

Section 37, Income-tax Act, states that the proceedings under Chap. 4 which refer to assessment should be deemed to be judicial proceedings within the meaning of Ss. 193 and 228, I.P.C. So that, where proceedings are sought to be taken for perjury it may well be contended that so far as the proceedings are concerned, the Income-tax Officer should be deemed to be a Court attracting the provisions of the Code as regards revision and appeal to the High Court. So far as we can see, the question was not raised nor was it necessary to be raised as to whether an Income-tax Officer was a Court when he assessed parties to income-tax. The contention of the petitioner was that the Income-tax Officer in determining the appeal did not act as a Court, that he had no jurisdiction to pass an order under S. 476, Criminal P. C., and that even if he was a Court, he had no jurisdiction to pass the order long after the proceedings terminated. The Public Prosecutor stated that there was no power in the High Court to issue a writ of certiorari for various reasons. It was unnecessary for the purpose of that case to decide whether an Income-tax Officer proceeding to assess an assessee was a Court. And if the observations of the learned Judges can be said to lay down any such broad proposition we would respectfully dissent from it.

In this connexion we may state that the Income-tax Department has been held in England to be only a department of the executive and not to be a Court of Justice.

In Local Government Board v. Arlidge (6), Viscount Haldane, observed :

"My Lords, when the duty of deciding an appeal is imposed, those whose duty it is to decide it must act judicially. They must deal with the question referred to them without bias, and they must give to each of the parties the opportunity of adequately presenting the case made. The decision must be come to in the spirit and with the sense of responsibility of a tribunal whose duty it is to mete out justice. But it does not follow that the procedure of every such tribunal must be the same. In the case of a Court of Law tradition in this country has prescribed certain principles to which in the main the procedure must conform. But what that procedure is to be in detail must depend on the nature of the tribunal. . . . . When, therefore, Parliament entrusts it with judicial duties, Parliament must be taken, in the absence of any declaration to the contrary, to have intended it to follow the procedure which is its own, and is necessary if it is to be capable of doing its work effectively."

Lord Shaw observed :

The words 'natural justice' occur in arguments and sometimes in judicial pronouncements in such cases. My Lords, when a central administrative Board deals with an appeal from a local authority it must do its best to act justly, and to reach just ends by just means. If a statute prescribes the means it must employ them. If it is left without express guidance it must still act honestly and by honest means. In regard to these certain ways and methods of judicial procedure may very likely be imitated; and lawyer-like methods may find especial favour from lawyers. But that the judiciary should presume to impose its own methods on administrative or executive officers is a usurpation. And the assumption that the methods of natural justice are ex necessitate those of Courts of justice is wholly unfounded. This is expressly applicable to steps of procedure or forms of pleading. In so far as the term 'natural justice' means that a result or process should be just, it is a harmless though it may be high sounding expression."

There can be little doubt that Income-tax Officers in conducting enquiries have to act judicially and to exercise their discretion not capriciously but on recognized judicial principles but that would not constitute the officer making the enquiry a Court.

Reference has been made to Hill v. Clifford (7). In this case, the General Medical Council acting under the powers of the Dentists Act 1878, made an order directing that the name of one Clifford should be struck off the Register of Dentists on the ground that he had been guilty of professional misconduct. Thereupon his partner gave notice determining the partnership. Suits were filed to determine the validity of the nctice and the order of the Medical Council was tendered in evidence. Warrington, J., rejected it and decreed the action of the plaintiff. It was held by Cozens Hardy M. R. and Buckeley, L. J., that the order was admissible as prima facie evidence of the fact that Clifford was guilty of acts unfamous or disgraceful in a professional sense. The President Sir Corell Barness was of opinion that the order was admissible as evidence and conclusive evidence of the fact that the defendant's name had been erased from the register by order of the Council against the defendant for some purposes other than the truth of the fact of misconduct to show the grounds upon which it was made. All that this case decides is that the orders of the Medical Council is relevant evidence. It does not support the contention that the Council was a Court. As regards statutory bodies exercising quasi judicial function, the law is thus stated in Halsbury's Laws of England p. 362.

"The doctrine of estoppel by record has been extended by analogy to the decisions of all tribunals which have jurisdiction, whether by the law of this country, or by the consent of parties, or by the law of the country to whose tribunals the parties have, or may be presumed from their conduct to have submitted themselves."

In para. 507 it is observed :

"The principle of conclusiveness has been applied to decisions not of record in numerous cases, of which the following are examples : a sentence of expulsion passed by a College ; of deprivation by a College Visitor ; of trustees dismissing a schoolmaster ; an order of the General Medical Council ; the award of an arbitrator. So orders of Commissioners of servers (not made between the parties litigant) have been held admissible as evidence of reputation, on the express ground that they were adjudications of a Court of competent jurisdiction over the subject matter."

We are of opinion that an Income-tax Officer proceeding to assess an assessee after making an enquiry as contemplated by the Income-tax Act is not a Court and that it cannot be said that the doctrine of res judicata applicable to the decisions of civil Courts applies.

In this connexion we may refer to two cases one cited on behalf of the petitioners and the other on behalf of the respondent.

Reference has been made by Mr. Krishnaswami Iyengar for the petitioners to Hoystead v. Commissioners of Taxation (8). The question there was whether the beneficiaries were joint owners. The High Court in a previous assessment proceedings had held that six deductions of £5,000 should be made on that footing. In the subsequent year the Commissioner allowed only one deduction contending that the beneficiaries were not joint owners within the meaning of the Act. Upon a case stated the Court in Australia upheld the contention that only one deduction of £5,000 ought to be made. But their Lordships of the Privy Council reversed the decision on the ground that the previous proceedings estopped the Commissioner from contending that only one and not six deductions should be made. Reliance was placed on the following passage in the judgment of Lord Shaw.

"Very numerous authorities were referred to. In the opinion of their Lordships it is settled, first, that the admission of a fact fundamental to the decision arrived at cannot be withdrawn and a fresh litigation started, with a view of obtaining another judgment upon a different assumption of fact; secondly, the same principle applies not only to an erroneous admission of a fundamental fact, but to an erroneous assumption as to the legal quality of that fact. Parties are not permitted to begin fresh litigations because of new views they may entertain of the law of the case, or new versions which they present as to what should be the proper apprehension by the Court of the legal result either of the construction of the documents or the weight of certain circumstances . . . . . Thirdly, the same principle namely, that of setting to rest rights of litigants, applies to the case where a point, fundamental to the decision, taken or assumed by the plaintiff and traversable by the defendant, has not been traversed. In that case also a defendant is bound by the judgment, although it may be true enough that subsequent light or ingenuity might suggest some traverse which had not been taken."

For the Commissioner of Income-tax, reference has been made to Broken Hill Proprietary Co. v. Broken Hill Municipal Council (9), the question related to the valuation under the Local Government Act, 1919, of New South Wales. There was an adjudication as to valuation for a previous year and the question arose as to the valuation for the subsequent year. The point of res judicata was raised on the ground that the adjudication by the Court for the previous year would be conclusive as regards the subsequent years. Lord Carson in rejecting this contention stated:

"It was also contended before this Board on behalf of the respondents that having regard to the said decisions of the High Court of Australia the question raised by this appeal is res judicata as between the appellants and the respondents, and the appellants are estopped from contending that such decision of the High Court of Australia is wrong. It has been pointed out that no such question was raised or pleaded either before the District Court or the Supreme Court in New South Wales, nor has there been any adjudication or finding upon it. There is, however, no substance in this contention. The decision of the High Court related to a valuation and a liability to a tax in a previous year, and no doubt as regards that year the decision could be disputed. The present case relates to a new question, namely the valuation for a different year and the liability for that year. It is not eadem questio, and therefore the principle of res judicata cannot apply."

The principle to be deduced from these two cases is that where the question relating to assessment does not vary with the income every year but depends on the nature of the property or any other question on which the rights of the parties to be taxed are based, e. g., whether a certain property is trust property or not it has nothing to do with fluctuations in the income, such question, if decided by Court on a reference made to it would be res judicata in that the same question cannot be subsequently agitated. But if the question is decided by a Court on a reference which depends upon considerations which may vary from year to year, e.g., the case in Broken Hill Proprietary Co v. Broken Hill Municipal Council (9) in which the average valuation had to be taken, there could be no question of res judicata.

The next question is whether even assuming that the matter is not res judicata, it would not create an estoppel by record against the Income-tax Officials.

In this connexion the argument of Mr. Krishnaswami Iyengar, is that even treating the Income-tax Officials as a quasi judicial body and not a Court, the principles of natural justice and expediency ought to prevent Income-tax Officers from going back on their previous decisions. Reference has been made to the passage in Halsbury's Laws of England I have already quoted.

It seems to us that where Income-tax Officials have after enquiry proceeded to assess the assessee on a certain basis, though they may be entitled to reopen the enquiry they cannot arbitrarily change the assessment simply on the ground that the succeeding officer does not agree with the preceding officer's finding. The position is just like the position of any two parties who have proceeded on a certain basis in their relations. It may be open to one party to reopen the matter. But if he wants to do so, there should be facts which would entitle him to do it. If fresh facts come to light which on an investigation would entitle the Income tax Officer to come to a different conclusion from that of his predecessor, we think he is entitled to reopen the question. But if there are no fresh facts, it is difficult to see how he can arbitrarily go behind the finding of his predecessor. The same principles of natural justice or judicial dealing which Courts impose upon Income-tax Officers would prevent them capriciously setting aside the orders of their predecessors based on enquiry. In the present case if there were no fresh facts, we do not think the Income-tax Officer can simply say that he would not be bound by the order of his predecessor affecting a question like the present, namely, whether a certain sum is the capital of the firm or a loan. But if on investigation any additional facts come to his notice which he considers sufficient, he would be entitled to act upon that additional information and we do not think the Courts of justice can interfere. If there is evidence on which he could have acted and it is not for the Court to constitute itself into a Court of appeal and see whether that evidence is sufficient or insufficient.

As regards the question as to the power of the Income-tax Officer to demand the production of accounts beyond three preceding years the provisions of Ss. 22, 23 and 37 have to be considered, The contention for the petitioners is that in no case can accounts for over three years be called for whatever may be the nature of the enquiry. For the Commissioner of Income-tax it is contended that the limitation as to three years applies to cases where the officer proceeds to assess under S. 23 (4) and that in other cases the Income-tax Officer is not precluded from calling for evidence.

Sections 22 and 23 deal with the return of the income furnished by the assessee for the purpose of being assessed. Sub-S. (2) empowers the Income-tax Officer to serve a notice upon the assessee requiring him to furnish within the period specified therein a return in the prescribed form of his total income during the previous year. Sub-S. (4) enables the officer to require the assessee to produce such accounts or documents as the officer may require. So far as the accounts are concerned, the proviso says that the Income-tax Officer shall not require the production of any accounts relating to a period more than three years prior to the previous years.

Section 23, sub-S. (4) deals with cases where the Income-tax Officer is empowered to make an assessment to the best of his judgment and it says that he can do so if the assessee fails to make his return under sub-S. (1) or sub-S. (2), S. 22 as the case may be, or fails to comply with all the terms of the notice issued under sub-S. (4) of the same section, or having made a return fails to comply with all the terms of the notice issued under sub-S. (2), S. 23, which refers to the appearance of the person submitting the return at the office of the Income-tax Officer and the production of any evidence on which such person may rely. Under sub-S. (2), S. 23, it is the evidence which the assessee has to rely on that is required to be produced.

Section 37 refers to the power to take evidence and empowers the officer to enforce the attendance of any person, and to examine him on oath or affirmation, to compel the production of documents and to issue commissions for the examination of witnesses.

Reading these sections together we think that the proviso to sub-S. (4), S. 22, when read with S. 23, sub-S. (4), only limits the power to call for accounts for more than three years prior to the previous year, when the Income-tax Officer has to make the assessment to the best of his judgment where the conditions mentioned in sub-S. (4), S. 23 exist. Where, however, during the course of an enquiry the Income-tax Officer is not going to make the assessment to the best of his judgment owing to want of material but proceeds to make an enquiry as regards the truth or otherwise of the allegations made by the assessee in his return in order to determine whether the assessee has made out his allegations, there is nothing to prevent the Income-tax Officer from requiring the assessee to produce any evidence including accounts. I will be unreasonable to support that where, for example, an assessee claims certain deductions and the Income-tax Officer wants to make an enquiry into the truth or otherwise of the allegations, it is open to the assessee to refuse to produce any accounts beyond the three years fixed in the proviso to sub-S. (4), S. 22, and require the Income-tax Officer to come to a decision on the materials afforded by the three years' accounts.

As regards the presumption to be drawn from the non-production of the accounts books, we think the case will be governed by S. 114, Evidence Act

Illus. (g) and (h) refer to cases of non-production of accounts and documents and refusal to answer questions.

Where an assessment is made under S. 23 (4) it is difficult to see how an Income-tax Officer can call for the production of books beyond the period specified in the proviso to S. 22 and then draw an adverse inference for the purpose of penal assessment. It will really be defeating the protection given by S. 22 (4). But where the accounts are called for otherwise than for that purpose, there is no reason why the presumption should not be drawn as in any ordinary case.

In this case the accounts were called for during the course of the enquiry as to whether the deduction claimed by the assessee should be granted or not, and we think that the Income-tax Officer was entitled to draw an adverse inference owing to the non-production of the account books. It is a question of fact whether the books were available or not. The assessee says they were lost or destroyed but the Income-tax Officer does not believe it. It is not for us to say whether the Income-tax Officer was justified or not in his conclusion.

This disposes of all the points argued before us. The petitioners will pay the respondent Rs. 250, for costs.

Judgment.—Two trustees of a certain charitable and religious trust sued their co-trustee for removal and for accounts in the District Court of Madura. The learned District Judge framed two preliminary issues with the first of which only we are here concerned. It runs thus:

"Whether the suit is maintainable under S. 92, Civil P. C., or under S. 73, Madras Act, 2 of 1927?"

This Civil Revision Petition has been preferred by the defendant against an affirmative finding upon this issue.

It is objected that a decision upon a preliminary issue relating to jurisdiction is not open to revision under S. 115, Civil P. C. The familiar argument in favour of revision is that if the petitioner is successful the trial of the rest of the suit would be saved, and the special objection to it is that if the petitioner waits until the suit has been disposed of he will have a right of appeal. The subject has come up most frequently in connexion with court-fees and a question of this kind was dealt with by a Bench of this Court in Kulandai Pandichi v. Ramaswami Pandia (1). The argument based on the eventual alternative of an appeal was considered but was not deemed of sufficient weight to preclude revision. Two other reported cases relate to a preliminary issue of jurisdiction, one decided by Krishnan, J.,

(1) A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 416=51 Mad. 664.

Janardhanan v. Verghese (2), and the other the Full Bench case in Atchayya v. Seetharamachandra Rao (3) where an appellate judgment which decided such an issue came up for revision. I think it must be said that there is now a course of decisions in favour of interference sufficiently marked to render it undesirable that a single Judge should take the opposite view.

Turning to the merits, the trust was created for a number of specified purposes, some secular and some religious, and the question which first arises is whether sub-S. 2, S. 73, Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, takes the suit out of the scope of S. 92, Civil P. C., and if so, whether power to institute such a suit is derivable from sub-S. 1 of the same section. The learned District Judge holds that S. 73 (2) is a bar to the application of S. 92 but he finds himself able to bring the suit within the scope of S. 73 (1).

Assuming the trust to be a 'religious endowment' as defined in the Act this view of the effect of S. 73 (2) is clearly right and accordingly, in the words of the subsection :

" no suit in respect of such administration or management shall be instituted except as provided by this Act. "

Admittedly S. 73 (1) is the only provision of the Act which can authorize such a suit. Under it :

" The Board of Committee having jurisdiction over any muth or temple or any person having interest and having obtained the consent of the Board may institute a suit . . ," and the first question is whether the plaintiffs in the present suit satisfy this description. To satisfy it, it must be held that they are 'persons having interest.' This phrase is defined in Cl. 9, S. 9 as follows :

" (a) in the case of a muth a disciple of the muth or a person of the religious persuasion to which the muth belongs, and ; (b) in the case of a temple, a person who is entitled to attend at the performance of worship or service in the temple or who is in the habit of attending such performance or of partaking in the benefit of the distribution of gifts thereat. "

Accordingly the subject matter of the interest is confined to a muth or a temple. The trust we have to deal with is certainly neither of these things, though it may be a religious endowment as defined in Cl. 11, S. 9, only by extending the meaning of S. 73, therefore, and concluding that where it speaks of a muth or a temple it may be taken also to mean a religious endowment can this obstacle be got over. Nor does difficulty arise only from the statutory definition of 'person having interest.' From the provision that a suit may be brought by the committee having jurisdiction over any muth or temple the section would seem to contemplate only suits relating to such foundations. I cannot avoid drawing the same inference from the manner in which the reliefs are set forth. The first relief is 'appointing or removing the trustee of a math or excepted temple.' There is no provision for appointing or removing the trustee of a religious endowment such as the present, nor do I find that the Act makes such a provision elsewhere. Reliefs (b), (c) and (d) do not, it is true, expressly confine themselves to muths or temples but it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that by implication they do so. The learned District Judge has found himself able to bring the suit within the section by force of relief (d):

" granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require. "

A comparison of this section with S. 92, Civil P. C., will show that the portion of it which sets out the classes of reliefs admissible has been closely moulded on that other section. I am unable to hold that Cl. (d), S. 73, enables the institution of any suit of a class unprovided for by the rest of the section. Fully therefore as I agree with the learned District Judge as to the canons of construction to be adopted in a case like this, I must hold that S. 73 (1) cannot be so construed as to comprise suits of this class. Endowments such as the present are dealt with to some extent by the Act, as by Ss. 41 to 44, but provision for suits such as the present appears to have been omitted by oversight, unless indeed it was not intended that such foundations should fall within the definition of religious endowment.

That a trust which has for its object the performance of subordinate services in a number of temples does in general satisfy the definition of religious endowment has not been disputed on either side. For the respondents, however, the point is raised that this endowment is not technically a religious endowment by virtue of the provisions of S. 77 of the Act. Besides a number of religious services, the trust comprises such objects as supplying rice to travellers, feeding Brahmins, maintaining a water pandal. In other words, its objects while mainly religious are also partly secular. Section 77 provides that where an endowment is of this character the Board may determine what portion of such endowment shall be allocated to religious uses and then occurs this sentence :

"Such portion shall thereafter be deemed to be a religious endowment and its administration shall be governed by the provisions of this Act."

It appears to me that the effect of this is to keep outside the operation of the Act any endowments part religious, part secular in respect of which the Board has not made an allocation to religious uses. When that has been done the portion allocated becomes a religious endowment amenable to the provisions of the Act and until it is done therefore no portion is so amenable. If this be so, S. 73 (2) does not take the trust out of the operation of S. 92, Civil P. C. Accordingly while setting aside the finding on the first issue I remand the suit for retrial upon that issue, the point for consideration being whether the endowment is or is not a 'religious endowment' by virtue of S. 77 of the Act, decision of which point will decide the question of jurisdiction. Costs to abide and follow the result.

An executor has the power as legal representative to admit and dispose of claims against the testator's estate, when he includes such a claim in Annexure B, Sch. 3, Court-fees Act, as owing from the testator and payable from his estate and he may be assumed to acknowledge liability of the estate for the debt within the meaning of S. 19, Limitation Act. [P 219 C 2]

(c) Succession Act (1925), S. 212—Administrator derives his title wholly from Court—Property vests in him only from time of grant.

The position of an administrator is different from that of an executor. The former derives his title wholly from the Court. An act done by a party, who afterwards becomes administrator, to the prejudice of the estate is not made good by the subsequent administration ; for it is only in those cases where the act is for the benefit of the estate that the relation back exists. Morgan v. Thomas, 8 Ex. 302, Rel. on. [P 220 C 1]

An acknowledgment of liability professed to be made on behalf of a deceased's estate by a person whose power to make the acknowledgment solely depends upon his being the administrator of the deceased is not made effectual by his subsequently obtaining letters of administration. Such an intermediate act as the admission that a debt is due from the deceased's estate tends to the dimunition of the estate. [P 220 C 1]

(e) Limitation Act, S. 19—Acknowledgment of liability by heirs of Mahomedan prevents limitation.

M. S. Venkatarama Iyer—for Appellant.

Cornish, J.—This appeal raises the question whether a suit to recover money due on promissory notes against the defendants who are the sons, widows and a daughter of the deceased executant of the notes is barred by limitation.

It appears that the two notes in question were executed by one Hajee Imamuddin on 10th January 1917 and on the 21st February 1918, for Rs. 1,600 and Rs. 300, respectively. Imamuddin died in 1919. The plaintiff filed his suit against the defendants on 4th September 1923 to recover the amount due on the notes. The suit was, therefore, out of time unless in the meanwhile there had been an effectual acknowledgment of the liability so as to give a fresh starting point for limitation. It is alleged by the plaintiff, who is the appellant before us, that such an acknowledgment is to be found in a petition filed in this Court on 9th October 1919, for a grant of letters of administration, by defendants 1, 2 and 3 of whom defendants 1 and 2 are sons and defendant 3 a widow of the deceased executant of the notes. It is material to observe that S. 278, Succession Act of 1925, requires that a petitioner for letters of administration shall state in his application, inter alia the right in which the petitioner claims ; and S. 218 (1), Succession Act provides that ;

"If the deceased has died intestate and was ..... Mahomedan ..... administration of his estate may be granted to any person who, according to the rules for the distribution of the estate applicable in the case of such deceased, would be entitled to the whole or any part of such deceased's estate."

The petitioners here, being the sons and widow of the deceased, were the persons entitled by Mahomeden Law to the estate, or at least a part of the deceased's estate, and were in consequence entitled to the grant, and a joint grant of administration was in due course made to them. They, as required by the Court-fees Act, filed with their petition for a grant the form of valuation prescribed by Sch. 3 of the Act, stating in annexure A, the assets of which the deceased was possessed or to which he was entitled at the time of his death, and in annexure B :

"the debts owing from the deceased and payable by law out of the estate."

Among these debts were shown the amounts due on the two promissory notes above referred to. This valuation form on affidavit of assets is required for the purpose of assessing the court-fee payable in respect of the grant of letters of administration, and until the appropriate fee has been paid no grant can be issued. The question before us is whether the inclusion of the debts in annexture B amounts to an acknowledgment of liability in respect of the debt so as to extend the period of limitation for the plaintiff's suit.

There can, we think, be no doubt that that when an executor in his petition for probate includes a debt owing by his testator in annexure B, he must be deemed to acknowledge liability for that debt in his capacity of legal representative of the deceased. This arises from his position of executor. The executor derives his title from the will. Immediately upon the testator's death his property vests in the executor, for the law knows no interval between the testator's death and the vesting of the property : Whitehead v. Taylor (1). It follows that before and without obtaining probate the executor may do most things which appertain to his office : thus, he may take possession of the testator's property; he may pay, or take releases of, debts owing from the estate; and he may receive or release debts which are owing to it: Williams on Executors, Vol. 1, p. 200, 10th Edn. The grant of probate does not give him his title; it makes his title certain: Hewson v. Shelley (2). An executor, therefore, having the power as legal representative to admit and dispose of claims against the testator's estate, when he includes such a claim in annexure B as owing from the testator and payable from his estate, may be assumed to acknowledge liability of the estate for the debt. But the position of an administrator is very different. He derives his title wholly from the Court. He had none until the letters of administration are granted, and the property of the deceased vests in him only from the time of the grant: Woolley v. Clark (3). Upon the issue of the grant, the administrator's title has relation back to the date of the deceased's death. S. 220, Succession Act, provides:

(1) 10 A. & E. 210=2 P & D 367=4 Jur. 247 =9 L. J. Q. B. 65.

(3) 5 B & Ald. 744=1 D. & R. 409.

"Letters of administration entitle the administrator to all rights belonging to the intestate as effectually as if the administration had been granted at the moment of his death."

But an act done by a party who afterwards becomes administrator to the prejudice of the estate is not made good by the subsequent administration; for it is only in those cases where the act is for the benefit of the estate that the relation back exists: see Margan v. Thomas (4). And this principle is embodied in S. 221, Succession Act, which states:

"Letters of administration do not render valid any intermediate acts of the administrator tending to the diminution or damage of the intestate's estate."

In our opinion, an acknowledgment of liability professed to be made on behalf of a deceased's estate by a person whose power to make the acknowledgment solely depends upon his being the administrator of the deceased is not made effectual by his subsequently obtaining letters of administration. Such an intermediate act as the admission that a debt was due from the deceased's estate would certainly tend to the diminution of the estate. This was the ground upon which the learned trial Judge decided the case when dismissing the plaintiff's suit as barred by limitation, and we entirely agree with him upon this ground.

But on appeal a new ground has been taken, namely, that the acknowledgment of liability here was made by the petitioners for administration in their character of heirs of the deceased, and the argument is that this acknowledgment has the effect of preventing limitation. After the judgment in the suit the plaintiff obtained leave from the appellate Court to amend his plaint so that he might have an opportunity of putting forward his real case, which, in the opinion of the appellate Court, he had not done before the learned trial Judge. We have, therefore, to deal with the appellant's case, as presented in his amended plaint. It is clear from the language of S. 218 (1), Succession Act, already referred to, that the right to a grant of administration follows the right of succession, and that in order to establish the right to a grant the petitioner must show that he is as an heir entitled to a share on the distribution of the deceased intestate's estate. It follows that this being the purpose of the description of the petitioners defendants 1, 2 and 3 as the sons and the widow of the deceased in their application for the grant, they must be taken to have made the acknowledgment of the liability for the debts set out in annexure B in their character of heirs. It is not suggested that any other character was open to them, so we are not here confronted with any complicated question of an acknowledgment made by individuals filling more than one character. The petition therefore contained not only an admission of assets, but the admission that the debts were payable out of those assets. As heirs the defendants could have been sued by the plaintiff, and they would be liable for the debts of the deceased to the extent of the assets received by them as heirs. This liability would in no wise be affected by the subsequent grant of letters of administration to some of them. The conclusion, then, at which we have arrived is that the acknowledgment of liability of the debt due to the plaintiff from the estate prevented the bar of limitation to his suit.

The only other question is whether the acknowledgment of liability by defendants 1, 2 and 3 serves to bind defendants 4 and 5. We do not think that it does. The acknowledgment by defendants 1, 2 and 3 could only be effective against the other two defendants if it could be shown that these two defendants authorized them to acknowledge liability on their behalf. But it is plain that no such authority can be implied, because at the time when the petition for administration was filed defendants 1 to 3 were disputing the claim of defendant 4 to be the widow of the deceased and of defendant 5 to be his legitimate daughter. And it appears from the written statement of defendants 4 and 5 that the status of these defendants was not established until 22nd July 1920, when a decree was passed by this Court in T. O. S. No. 21 of 1919. This decree was in a testamentary suit which resulted from the caveat entered by defendants 4 and 5 against the petition for administration filed by defendants 1 to 3. In (4) 8 Ex. 302=22 L. J. Ex. 152=17 Jur. 283.

Fohdham v. Wallis (5) it was held that among devisees an acknowledgment by some did not keep alive the creditor's right against others who had availed themselves of the statute of limitation. "Looking at the question upon principle" said Turner V. C.:

"I do not see upon what ground, parties, who might have availed themselves of the statute and have neglected to do so, can insist upon contribution from other parties who have set up the statute, and have upon the footing of it, succeeding in repelling the demand against them."

In these circumstances, we are unable to find any possible ground for holding that defendants 4 and 5 are liable on account of the acknowledgment of liability made by defendants 1, 2 and 3. The recovery of the debt as against these two defendants is, therefore, barred. Reference has been made to an affidavit sworn by defendant 2, one of the administrators on 21st October 1921, in support of his application to the Court for leave to sell, as required by S. 307 (2), Succession Act, the immovable property of the deceased for the liquidation of the debts. This can have no bearing on the question of defendant 4's and 5's liability. For the purpose of S. 19 (1), Lim. Act, an acknowledgment of liability must be before the expiration of the period prescribed for the suit, and at the date of his application by defendant 2 the suit on the two promissory notes had already become barred against defendants 4 and 5.

The result is that we allow the appeal against defendants 1 to 3 but dismiss it as against defendants 4 and 5. There will be a decree for the amount due on the two pronotes with interest up to date, and with 6 per cent interest from date of the decree till payment, against defendants 1 to 3 to the extent of the assets received by them as their shares of the deceased's estate. Defendants 1 to 3 will pay the appellant the costs of this appeal. As there has been no appearance on behalf of defendants 4 and 5 to the appeal, we make no order as to costs in their favour. We do not give the appellant his costs in the Court of first instance as it was due to his failure to present his case there properly that judgment was given against him. The plaintiff will pay the costs of defendants 4 and 5 in the trial Court, but otherwise parties will bear their own costs.

K. S. Jayarama Iyer—for Petitioner.

M. Subbaraya Iyer and S. Panchapagesa Sastri—for Respondents.

Judgment.—Petitioner is defendant 2 in O. S. No. 160 of 1927, District Munsiff's Court, Mayavaram. The plaintiff died and respondents 1 to 3 applied to be brought on the record as his legal representatives. They pleaded to be entitled to be brought on because the plaintiff had been suing in the character of their benamidar and they are the persons really interested in the suit. The learned District Munsiff has accepted their plea without addressing his mind to its merits. He simply states that having found the plaintiff to be their benamidar they are in his opinion entitled to be recognized as legal representatives.

This recognition would be under O. 22, R. 3, Sch. 1 "shall cause the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff to be made a party." And S. 2, Cl. 11, Civil P. C., defines what a legal representative is. It is not suggested that respondents 1 to 3 in law represent the estate of the deceased, but it is argued that the deceased sued in a representative character and on his death the estate on behalf of which he was suing devolved upon the petitioners. The phrase "sue in a representative character" does not convey any ambiguity to my mind. Whatever role a person openly assumes in a suit is the character in which he sues. If a benamidar chooses to sue as absolute owner, and is asked in what character he sues, he will naturally say as absolute owner; to say that he is suing in the character of benamidar when he assumes the role of absolute owner is sheer violation of plain language. It is hardly necessary to labour the point. To the question "in what character did you go to the fancy dress ball," the answer. 'I went as myself but I dressed up as Napolean," would be nonsense.

It is urged for petitioner that S. 2, Cl. 11, Civil P C., has nothing to do with trustees who do not sue in a representative character but in their character of trustee on behalf of the trust; and when a trustee dies the estate does not devolve upon the beneficiary, as may be seen from S. 73, Act 2 of 1882. I agree, S. 2, Cl. 11, Civil P. C., in my opinion refers to suits in which a person is allowed to represent others in a representative capacity, and not to trustees, but since the deceased plaintiff never appeared either as a trustee or in any representative character, but sued in his own right, the point does not arise.

The respondents rely on various rulings none of which are particularly relevant to the point in issue. Gur Narayan v. Sheolal Singh (1), lays down, what in these days is never disputed, that a benamidar legitimately represents the real owner, is a mere trustee for him, and if he likes, may sue in his own name in an action to which the beneficial owner is no party. But it does not lay down that in such a suit the trustee sues in a respresentative character. Venkatanarayana Pillai v. Subbammal (2), establishes that a suit to set aside an adoption is brought by the presumptive reversioner in a representative character:

"the suit was brought by the deceased plaintiff as representing in his reversionary right the estate of the last male owner."

That is to say, the element of representation is inherent in the suit. This affords no parallel to a suit brought by a man in his own right.

Supposing that the benamidar obtains a decree and then dies, the beneficiaries may claim to be his representatives under S. 47, Cl. 3, Civil P. C.: Kistam Naidu v. Duravada Patrudu (3). The fact that although he did not sue in a representative character still nevertheless they may claim to be his representatives, hardly advances the present argument, because it has no bearing upon legal representatives as defined in S. 2, Cl. 11.

On the other hand Periannan Chettiar v. Rangachi Reddi (4), which is relied upon by petitioner is very much in point. If a principal allows his agent to sue on his behalf but in his own name, he cannot come in upon the death of that agent as the person entitled to continue the suit.

In the same way if parties allow their benamidar to sue in his own name, and not in a representative character, they cannot come in on his death under O. 22, R. 3.

Respondents 1 to 3 are not entitled to be recognized as legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff nor to be brought upon the record in that capacity and to that extent the order of the lower Court is modified and the petition is allowed with costs to petitioner to be paid by respondents 1 to 3 both here and in lower Court.

Civil Revn. Petn. No 687 of 1928, Decided on 25th September 1929, from order of Revn. Divn. Officer, Kumbakonam. D/- 17th March 1928, in E. P. No. 117 of 1927.

(a) Limitation Act. Art. 164—In case of substituted service terminus a quo is date of decree.

In the case of substituted service, if the summons was duly served the terminus a quo under Art. 164 is the date of the decree and not the date when it first comes to the knowledge of the defendant: A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 815, Rel. on.; A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 655, Diss. from.

[P 223 C 2]

(b) Limitation Act, Art. 164—Order of substituted service rightly made and properly effected—Knowledge of defendant is immaterial—But otherwise time runs from date of knowledge.

In the case of substituted service the article lays down that when the order is rightly made and the service directed by the order is properly effected, knowledge of the defendant is immaterial and time runs from the date of the decree: A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 487; A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 815 and A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 191, Rel. on. [P 223 C 2]

Where, however, an order for substituted service is improperly obtained, as being made on insufficient material contained in an application supported by affidavit, the summons cannot be said to have been duly served within the meaning of Art. 164, and the time accordingly runs not from the date of the decree but from the date when it first came to the knowledge of the defendant. [P 224 C 1]

M. S. Venkatarama Iyer—for Petitioner.

K. S. Sankara Iyer—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This case raises a point in regard to the applicability of Art. 164 Lim. Act. The defendant was served by substituted service and a decree was passed on 20th June 1927 against him ex parte. He applied on 6th March 1928 for the setting aside of that ex parte decree. The question is, does time run from the date of the decree, or from the date when it came to his knowledge?

Art. 164 runs thus:

"By a defendant, for an order to set aside a decree passed ex parte	Thirty days from the date of the decree, or where the summons was not duly served, when the applicant has knowledge of the decree.

Can it be said that in every case where the summons is served by substituted service, the starting point is not the date of the decree but the date when it first comes to his knowledge? To accept such a contention would be equivalent to holding that substituted service is in no circumstances due service. There seems to be no warrant for this position. The Civil Procedure Code prescribes several modes of serving the defendant and one such mode is what is known as substituted service. It is impossible to hold that a mode of service prescribed by the Code is not due or proper service. It is to be further noted that the words "duly served" which occur in Art. 164 are also to be found in O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C. It enacts that where a decree is passed ex parte, the defendant may apply for an order to set it aside; and the section proceeds to say (I am quoting only the relevant portion):

"If he satisfies the Court that the summons was not duly served, the Court shall make an order setting aside the decree."

If, when the defendant is served by substituted service, it is to be held that that he is in no case "duly served," what follows? Under this provision, the defendant has merely to show that service was effected by substituted service and he is entitled as a matter of course to have the ex parte decree set aside. This, apart from every other consideration, shows that the construction which I have referred to, of the words "duly served," must be rejected. With all respect, I therefore disagree with the decision of Srinivasa Aiyangar, J. in Venkatachalam v. Subbayya, A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 655. My view receives support from a decision of a Bench of this Court in Shariba Beebi v. Abdul Salam, A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 815. I accordingly hold that even in the case of substituted service, if the summons was duly served, the terminus a quo under Art. 164 is the date of the above decree, and not the date when it first comes to the knowledge of the defendant.

Then comes the question, in the case of substituted service, when is the defendant "duly served" and when not? It is contended for the respondent that the Court cannot examine the propriety of the order directing substituted service, for, it is said that under the article, the only point which the Court can consider is, whether the summons was duly served, that is, whether the order directing substituted service was duly carried out. The order may be right or wrong; it may be or may not have been made on sufficient material; the Judge when ordering substituted service may have acted with grave irregularity; still it is contended that the Court under Art. 164 is not concerned with the regularity of the propriety or the order and that its duty is confined to enquiring whether this wrong order was rightly carried out. I cannot accept this construction. What in the case of substituted service the article intends to lay down is, when the order is rightly made and the service directed by the order is properly effected, knowledge of the defendant is immaterial and time runs from the date of the decree. This is the natural and reasonable meaning of the section. This view is implied in the decision in Narasimha Chettiar v. Balakrishna Chetty (1), which is cited with approval in the case already referred to A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 815. The Lahore High Court has taken the same view in Ramkrishna v. Mula (2).

Let me now examine whether the order made directing substituted service can be sustained. The first summons gave the name of the defendant's village correctly but the name of the taluk where the village is situate was wrongly given. The result was that the summons was sent to a wrong officer who returned it. In the second summons again, the same mistake was repeated and it shared the same fate. The third summons omitted to contain the name of the defendant's father and the Nazir returned it saying that it was impossible to serve it, as there were four men having the defendant's name. A fourth summons was then taken out. This time, there was no mistake made but it was found by the process server that the defendant's house was closed. Learning from neighbours that the defendant had left the place, he returned again the summons unserved. On this the plaintiff filed an application for substituted service supporting it by an affidavit. In that affidavit, these facts were not properly mentioned. The statements made were misleading and the Judge thereupon made an order for substituted service. In my opinion the order was improperly obtained, it was made on insufficient material and cannot be sustained. I therefore hold that the summons was not duly served within the meaning of Art. 164, and the time accordingly runs not from the date of the decree but from the date when it first came to the knowledge of the defendant. The lower Court has given no finding on this matter. I direct it to try the question:

"when did the defendant first have knowledge of the decree?"

after allowing the parties to adduce evidence and I further direct the Court to return a finding in three weeks from the receipt by it of this order. Time for objections one week thereafter. (After stating the finding of the lower Court that the petitioner was aware of the decree as soon as it was passed and that his contention that he came to know of it nearly nine months after the decree is false, the judgment proceeded.) The finding is against the petitioner and no objections have been filed by him. I accept the finding. The Civil Revision Petition is dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—The order of the lower Court cannot be supported. The Court certainly has no jurisdiction under O. 26, R. 9, Sch. 1, Civil P. C. There is nothing in the affidavit to attract O. 39, R. 1, and O. 39, R. 6 merely gives power to a Court to sell a perishable article and certainly does not authorize it to send a commissioner to sell any crop. Nor is this a matter in which S. 151 should be invoked. The proper course for the respondent would be to apply for a receiver, if he has right to apply and if he has no right to apply for a receiver, he has no right to apply for a commissioner.

The respondent complains that the suit is being wantonly delayed by the petitioner in this Court—that is a matter for the lower Court.

Order.—The procedure of the learned 2nd Presidency Magistrate cannot be supported. He dismissed a complaint and discharged the accused which he is empowered to do under S. 370, Criminal P. C., without giving any reasons. But he elected to give as his reason that there was no legal evidence. This was taken up on revision and on the face of the record the learned Presidency Magistrate is wrong and there is legal evidence, the sworn statement of P. W. 3. But the Magistrate submits a report under S. 441, Criminal P. C., reiterating his statement that there is no legal evidence, and recording for the first time that he disbelieves P. W. 3. This argues great confusion of mind because if the evidence of P. W. 3 requires judicial consideration there evidently is legal evidence.

It seems obvious that at the time he discharged the accused the Magistrate never directed his mind to the credibility of P. W. 3, because he held that there was no legal evidence.

His subsequent argument is not of much use ; in fact S. 441, Criminal P.C., is not enacted to enable Presidency Magistrates to give fresh reasons for their decisions contradictory to those already given ; but to enable them to supply reasons where in exercise of their privilege under S. 370, Criminal P. C., they have given no reasons at all. This petition must be allowed and further inquiry ordered. The discharge is cancelled.

Civil P.C., S. 115—Suit with regard to election dispute—Only appreciation of evidence involved—High Court cannot interfere in revision to decide questions of facts as to validity of votes.

The High Court has to confine itself to the question of jurisdiction only : (1927) M. W. N. 842; A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 319; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1207; A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 199 and *A. I. P. Venkataramana Rao—for Petitioner.

S. Parthasarthi and V. K. Thiruvenkatachariar—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The petitioner was an unsuccessful candidate in an election to fill a vacancy in the Municipal Council of Tanjore. He got 99 votes against 100 votes obtained by respondent 1, who was declared elected. The petitioner filed a petition challenging the result of the election before the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore and being unsuccessful there has now filed this petition for revision of the lower Court's order.

The question depends entirely upon whether certain votes should or should not have have been rejected. The learned Subordinate Judge has on this point come to certain conclusions. I cannot say that having scrutinized the ballot papers I should have come to the same conclusions, because it appears to me that in each case where there was a second mark, which the learned Subordinate Judge considers in itself sufficient to invalidate the vote as creating a doubt as to voter's intentions, it was produced by folding the paper transversely before the ink was dry. Nevertheless the current of authority in this Court is clearly against my interfering with the order upon any such grounds as this, which involves nothing more nor less than an appreciation of the evidence. In the Full Bench case in M. Appayya Gounder v. Dawood Saheb (1), the view was clearly expressed that where there is no question of jurisdiction or of acting illegally this Court cannot interfere under S. 115, Civil P.C. And there is a series of subsequent decisions: Doraiswami Nadar v. Joseph (2); Mamundi Konar v. Shamsuddin Saheb (3) and K. Subbiah v. Manikyam (4), which have proceeded upon the same principle. In Mamundi Konar v. Shamsuddin Saheb (3). which also related to the validity of ballot papers, Wallace, J., after commenting upon the lower Court's decision and finding that it had ample jurisdiction to decide the questions before it, added:

"There is in that decision neither lack of jurisdiction nor irregular exercise of jurisdiction which would give this Court authority to interfere under S. 115, Civil P. C. It cannot be reasonably contended here that this Court has to decide for itself on the question of fact as to whether the votes were or were not invalid. This Court in a civil revision petition has only to see that the lower Court exercised its jurisdiction properly."

Adopting this view, and notwithstanding that were I to give a decision on the facts it would run counter to the lower Court's decision, I must dismiss the petition with costs.

(e) Civil P. C., S. 92—Legal Propriety of clause in scheme—Test laid down.

The true test as to the legal propriety of a clause in a scheme is whether the relief granted by that Court is such a relief that if it was being sought before the scheme was sanctioned, it would have to be sought by suit under S. 92. A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 559, Foll. [P 228 C 2; P 230 C 1]

Wallace, J.—This C. M. A. and C. R. P. are against the order of the lower Court dismissing an application presented under a scheme decree in A. A. O. 218 of 1925 on the file of the High Court. Under R. 2 in that scheme, which was for the management of the Anjukoil Devasthanam, it is declared that when a vacancy occurs in the trusteeship: "the Pandara Sannadhi for the time being of Thiruvannamalai mutt shall be appointed trustee unless the District Court of Ramnad for any valid reason decides him to be unfit."

The late Pandara Sannadhi who was the trustee died on 10th June 1928. The petitioners applied under this rule on 25th June 1928 to the lower Court to declare respondent 1, who claimed to have succeeded as Pandara Sannadhi, to be unfit for appointment as trustee and to appoint either one of the petitioners or some other proper person to be trustee and for other reliefs. The District Judge dismissed the application, holding that R. 2 of the scheme is ultra vires and the petitioners came up by way of appeal and revision. It is conceded that no appeal lies and the case has been argued as one in revision.

In the lower Court it was alleged by the petitioners, inter alia, that respondent 1 has not been lawfully appointed as Pandara Sannadhi and therefore was unfit to be a trustee. But the argument before us has proceeded on the footing that he is the Pandara Sannadhi de facto, entitled, if R. 2 is not ultra vires, to be appointed as trustee unless otherwise found unfit, and it is urged that the petition should be reopened for enquiry as to his fitness. The respondents maintain that (1) the rule itself is ultra vires, (2) that even if it is intra vires the petitioners under the scheme have no locus standi to apply. A third point viz., that the High Court had no jurisdiction to frame a scheme at all was not pressed here.

To take the second objection first, the only persons to whom the scheme gives liberty to apply for directions are the trustee, the Board and the Advocate General : see R. 13. It is not open to any person to come up under the scheme and ask for directions. If it is held that any person can come up under R. 2 and ask for directions there is no reason why such a liberty should be restricted to that rule and not apply to any rule under the scheme, and S. 13 would become not only meaningless but misleading. I do not subscribe to the contention that the petitioners' petition is not one asking for directions. If, as is assumed by the petitioners, R. 2 vests the power of appointment of the Pandara Sannadhi in the District Court, then clearly the petitioners are asking for directions that the Pandara Sannadhi is unfit to be the trustee and for further directions that one of them or some one else, be appointed. This point will be more fully discussed later.

In C. M. P. No. 5606 of 1928 a Bench of this Court consisting of the Chief Justice and myself held, in interpreting a similar scheme, that when liberty to apply is confined by a rule under the scheme to particular persons, no others have locus standi to apply, and that to permit others to apply is in effect to modify the scheme, which is not permissible in law except by suit under S. 92. I may say, however, that if R. 2 is intra vires I see no objection to the petitioners putting in a memo of information to the District Court merely reporting the death of the Pandara Sannadhi and asking the District Court to function under R. 2 and applying for permission to be heard when the Court is holding its enquiry as to the fitness of the succeeding Pandara Sannadhi to be trustee. But that would be a petition outside the scheme and whether it would lie in law depends on the answer to the second point whether R. 2 is not ultra vires.

On this point the respondents' main argument is that the petitioners in applying for the appointment of a trustee other than the Pandara Sannadhi are asking for a relief which can only be granted by way of suit under S. 92, since the relief comes under Cl. (1) (b) "appointing a new trustee." Petitioners contend that S. 92 will not apply to the present case since the matter is neither in relation to any breach of trust nor one in which the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of the trust. Here of course there is no matter of breach of trust. Petitioners contend that it is also not a matter of direction, since the scheme itself has provided all the directions necessary, and that they are asking only to carry out the directions of the scheme. Now the Full Bench decision in Veeraraghava Chariar v. Advocate-General, Madras (1) has laid down emphatically that a scheme which goes beyond what was decided in the scheme suit, and decides matters which come within the purview of S. 92, is so far ultra vires. R. 2, is therefore intra vires only so far as it embodies a decision in the suit and is not providing for a relief which is only obtainable by suit under S. 92. It does not in my view go beyond what was decided in the suit itself and is therefore intra vires provided it is limited to what it says and is not stretched to cover a general plenary power of appointment of trustee. Appointment under it is intra vires, if confined to appointment of the Pandara Sannadhi. It is ultra vires, if called in aid to appoint anyone else.

To apply the Full Bench principles to the present case the judgment in the scheme suit gave the District Court power only to appoint the Pandara Sannadhi if not found unfit ; that is, it gave the District Court power to proceed to function and either to appoint him or to refuse to appoint him on the ground that he was unfit. If he is appointed, he can only be removed by a suit under S. 92 ; if he is not appointed no one else can be appointed except by a similar suit. A motion to appoint some one other than the Pandara Sannadhi can therefore be made only by way of suit, and that is the motion which the petitioners moved in the lower Court.

The petitioners argued further that Cl. 1 (b) is inseparable from Cl. 1(a), and that it is only in the case of the appointment of a new trustee consequent on the removal of an old one that 1 (b) applies. But I can see no ground for thus restricting the scope of the language used. We might as well hold that each different clause is thus inter-connected from (a) to (h), i. e., you cannot apply one of the clauses at all in isolation but you must apply all together or not at all. I am with great respect not prepared to accept the broad view of the Calcutta High Court in Abdul Alim v. M. T. Abir Jan, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 368 that the juxtaposition of Cls. (a) and (b) implies that the appointment of a new trustee must be limited to cases where it is necessary because of the removal of an old one ; nor was such a proposition necessary for the decision of that case, since the general Mahomedan Law vested in the Court the Kazi's power of appointing a trustee directly, and if the Kazi could make the appointment without his having recourse to S. 92 as the law allowed him to do, so also could the Court. This is made clear in a similar case of the same Court in Mohiuddin Chowdhury v. Aminuddin Chowdhury, A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 441. The Privy Council case in Mahomed Ismail v. Ahmad Mooli Dawood (2), is on the same lines. Nothing which was intra vires of the power of the Kazi could be ultra vires of the power of the civil Court which now exercises his functions.

Mr. Varadachari for the respondents contends that here there is no case of appointment or removal at all, because really there is no vacancy. He argues that the Pandara Sannadhi for the time being is to all intents and purposes ex officio trustee of this Devasthanam. He must base that claim not on R. 2 of the scheme, since in his view it is ultra vires, but on the judgment under which the scheme was sanctioned, but the most that judgment says is that the Pandara Sannadhi :

'has a prima facie right to be the trustee of the Devasthanam."

" His right is inchoate which gets perfected by appointment of the Court and before his right can be negatived some special circumstances must be shown."

This to my mind does not constitute the Pandara Sannadhi ex officio trustee. There is to be an appointment by the Court. Before the Pandara Sannadhi becomes the trustee he must move the Court for his appointment, and the Court must enquire if there are any special circumstances which would render him unfit to be appointed. Obviously as the judgment has already decided that the Pandara Sannadhi shall be appointed unless unfit it is not necessary for him to sue for a declaration that he shall be appointed. The test in such a case would be, would the refusal of leave to sue under S. 92 deprive the applicant of the right already declared by a judgment of a competent Court to be his. If the answer is 'yes,' then clearly S. 92 cannot apply. Here the refusal of leave to sue for appointment under S. 92 would deprive the Pandara Sannadhi of his declared right to be appointed, if not unfit. Therefore no suit by him is necessary ; contrariwise the refusal to the petitioners to sue would not deprive them of any declared right. Therefore their only way of moving the Court to appoint some one else would be by suit under S. 92. If the Pandara Sannadhi does not within a reasonable time apply for appointment, then any one interested in the trust can move for the appointment of a trustee to fill the vacancy but that motion if it is a motion to appoint any one else than the Pandara Sannadhi, must be by way of suit under S. 92, Cl. 1 (b).

(2) A.I.R. 1916 P.C. 132=43 Cal. 1085=43 I. A. 127 (P.C.).

I hold that there is no error of law in the lower Court's order and dismiss the C. R. P. and the C. M. A. with costs of the Pandara Sannadhi in each but only one advocate's fee.

Madhavan Nair, J.—The petitioners before us are two persons who claim to be the senior-most Tambirans of the Thiruvannamalai Adhinam at Kunnakudi. Purporting to act under the scheme framed by the High Court in respect of the Anjukoil Devasthanam in A. A. O. Nos. 218 and 219 of 1919 and A. A. O. No. 216 of 1925 they filed a petition before the District Court of Ramnad at Madura praying (1) that respondent 1 be declared legally unfit to be trustee of the Devasthanam on the ground of his not being a lawful Pandara Sannadhi and even otherwise be held unfit to hold office, (2) that either of the petitioners or such other proper person may be appointed as the trustee and (3) that a receiver should be appointed pending the disposal of the petition. The judgment of the High Court which incorporated the scheme agreed to by the parties to the then proceedings states that :

"The head of the Mutt (i. e., Thiruvannamalai) has a prima facie right to be a trustee of the Devasthanams. His right is inchoate which gets perfected by appointment by the Court and before his right can be negatived, some special circumstauces must be shown."

The case for the petitioners in the lower Court was that the late Pandara-Sannadhi who was the trustee of the Anjkoil Devasthanam died on 10th June 1928, that respondent 1 has been pretending that he had been appointed as "chinna-pattam" on 6th January 1928 and had become the head of the Tiruvannamalai Adhinam on the death of his predecessor, that there was no such appointment as contended for by respondent 1 and that he is immoral and unfit to hold the office of Pandara Sannadhi and therefore to be the trustee of the Devasthanam. For the purpose of the proceedings in this Court, the petitioners stated that they are willing to treat respondent 1 as the Pandara Sannadhi of the Adhinam but they say that he is unfit to be appointed trustee of the Devasthanam for the reasons mentioned in the petition. The application to the District Court was made by the petitioners under Cl. 2 of the scheme which runs as follows :

"When a vacancy occurs at any time hereafter in the trusteeship of the Devasthanam the Pandara Sannadhi for the time being of the Tiruvannamalai Mutt shall be appointed trustee unless the District Court of Ramnad for any valid reason decides him to be unfit. The District Judge shall, if so requested by any party concerned, within one month from his decision, refer the matter to the High Court and the decision of the High Court shall be final."

Having regard to S. 92, Civil P. C., and the decision of the Full Bench in Veeraraghavachariar v. Advocate General of Madras (1) the learned District Judge held that :

"the provision of Cl. 2 of the scheme is ultra vires and that the relief sought by the petitioners can be sought only under S. 92 of the Code."

He, therefore, dismissed the application. It is admitted that no appeal lies against this order and so A. A. O. No. 289 of 1928 has to be dismissed. In C. R. P. No. 12 of 1928, we are asked to say that the Court below acted without jurisdiction in summararily dismissing the petition without conducting an enquiry. In the Full Bench decision in Veeraraghavachariar v. Advocate General of Madras (1), it was decided that:

"if in a decree for a scheme framed under S.92, Civil P. C., liberty is given to persons to apply to the Court for directions merely to carry out the scheme already settled such reservation of liberty in the decree will be intra vires if the assistance of the Court can be without offending S. 92, but where liberty is given to apply to the Court for alteration or modification of the scheme, such reservation is ultra vires as offending S. 92."

Section 92, Civil P. C., provides that in the case of any alleged breach of any express or constructive trust created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature, or where the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust, the person mentioned in it may institute a suit and obtain a decree for any of the reliefs mentioned in Cls. (a) to (h), sub-S. (1) of which the two clauses with which we are concerned are Cls. (a) and (b) which refer to "removing a trustee" or "appointing a new trustee." The substantial question for consideration is whether Cl. (2) of the scheme relating to the appointment of a trustee is ultra vires as offending this section. The argument of the petitioners that the clause is not ultra vires, and that effect can be given to it without offending S. 92, has ranged over a very wide field but for purposes of discussion it may be stated somewhat in this form. S. 92

Civil P. C., applies only in two cases: either there must be an alleged breach of any express or constructive trust created for public purposes or a charitable or religious nature: or the direction of the Court must be deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust. In this case, it is conceded that there is no question of any breach of any express or constructive trust. So assuming that the reliefs prayed for fall within Cl. (a) or (b) of the section, unless the direction of the Court is to be deemed necessary for the administration of the trust the section has no application. In this case the direction of the Court is obviously not for that purpose and, therefore, there is no need to resort to the procedure of a suit referred to in S. 92 for granting the reliefs prayed for by the petitioners. It would, therefore, follow that S. 92 has no application to the present petition. The petitioners' learned counsel has also argued that the relief prayed for is for the appointment of a trustee and that S. 92 does not come into play unless the petitioners ask for the relief of removal as well as the appointment of a trustee.

Having regard to the various considerations urged and the decisions of the other High Courts brought to our notice, the question raised is not an easy one to decide. The argument that direction of the Court for the administration of the trust is not asked for in this case as scheme is already in existence for that purpose does not give as much help in solving the difficulty as it assumes that the scheme has been passed validly which as contended for by the respondent is the very question that we are called upon to decide. As observed by Wallace, J., in Abdul Hakim Baig v. Burramuddin (3), at p. 590 (of 49 Mad.):

"The true test as to the legal propriety of a clause in a scheme is whether the relief granted by that clause is such a relief that, if it was being sought before the scheme is sanctioned, it would have to be sought by a suit under S. 92. If it was, it cannot be granted by any sort of application under the scheme notwithstanding that the scheme itself purports to provide such means of obtaining that relief."

That I think, on principle, is the proper standpoint from which the question should be viewed. Otherwise, it will lead to this result. When once a scheme for the administration of a trust has been framed, S. 92 will no longer have any application and under the guise of applications under the scheme any number of applications for removing or appointing trustees without the gurantees provided for in S. 92 can be made. This will really defeat the object of S. 92. Applying the test referred to above what we have really to consider is whether the relief granted by Cl. 2 of the scheme in this case is or is not a relief which would have to be sought by a suit under S. 92, Civil P. C. On this point I do not think there can be much doubt. The clause refers to the appointment of the Pandara Sannadhi for the time being of the Tiruvannamalai Mutt as the trustee of the Devasthanam when a vacancy occurs and indicates that he should be so appointed unless he is for some valid reason found unfit. The petitioners in their application, as now explained by them, say that the present Pandara Sannadhi of Tiruvannamalai Mutt is an unfit person to be appointed as the trustee and, therefore, he should not be appointed as the trustee. Both Cl. 2 of the scheme and the application of the petitioners made under it refer to the appointment of the Pandara Sannadhi as the trustee of the Devasthanam, a relief which if Cl.2 of the scheme did not exist could be obtained in my opinion only by filing a suit under S. 92, Civil P. C.

But it is argued for the petitioners that considering the history of S. 92, Cls. (a) and (b) of that section must be read together and that the section would have application only when the object of the application is the "removal of a trustee and the appointment of another trustee." In other words, it is argued that the section cannot come into play unless the appointment of a new trustee is dependent on removal of the old one. This view finds support in a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Abdul Alim Abed v. Abirjan Bibi (4). The petitioners argue that this interpretation of S. 92 should be accepted and that since they did not ask for the removal of any trustee before appointing a new one the relief prayed for by them in their application under Cl. 2 of the scheme does not fall within the scope of S. 92. The answer to this contention is twofold: Firstly, the view that Cls.

(3) A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 559=49 Mad. 580.

(4) A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 368=55 Cal. 1284.

(a) and (b) should be read together is not supported by the decisions of this Court. On the other hand, in Neti Rama Jogiah v. Venkatacharlu (5), this Court held that a suit for the appointment of a new trustee for a temple on the ground that the defendants are not the lawful trustees and that the trusteeships are, therefore, vacant, is a suit under S. 539 (a), Civil P. C. Secondly, the petitioners' application in substance asks for the removal of the present Pandara Sannadhi from the trusteeship of the Devasthanam and the appointment of a proper man in his place. In view of the admission made in this Court that respondent 1 may be treated as the present Pandara Sannadhi of the Mutt and having regard to the fact that he is prima facie entitled to the trusteeship of the Devasthanam according to the judgment of this Court, the petitioners' application is not to be read as meaning that there is a vacancy in the trusteeship of the Anjukoil Devasthanam which should be filled up by the appointment of a trustee but that it means that the present Pandara Sannadhi who is prima facie the trustee should be removed from the trusteeship of the Devasthanam and that a new one who is a proper man should be appointed in his place. A perusal of the application will bear out this interpretation of its contents. In this view, the relief prayed for by the petitioners would fall within the scope of S. 92, Civil P. C. I must, therefore, hold that Cl. 2 of the scheme in question is ultra vires and hold that the relief sought by the petitioners can be sought only in a suit under S. 92 of the Code.

Apart from the objection that Cl. 2 of the scheme is ultra vires, respondent 1 has urged another objection to the maintainability of the petitioners' application. He argues that assuming that Cl. 2 is intra vires, under Cl. 13 of the scheme the petitioners have no locus standi to file the application. Cl. 13 is as follows:

"The trustee, the Board or the Advocate General shall have liberty to apply to the District Court of Ramnad for directions generally including directions for the utilisation of surplus moneys, if any. They shall also have liberty to apply for any modification of the scheme."

If the petitioners purport to act under the scheme as they do then it is clear that effect should be given to Cl. 13 under which right of making applications to the Court is given only to the trustee, the Board or the Advocate General. Obviously the right of making the applications has been purposely confined to the persons mentioned in this clause; for, otherwise there will be no guarantee for the bona fide nature of the applications. The petitioners not having been mentioned as persons entitled to apply under Cl. 13 have in my opinion no locus standi to make the present application. It must, therefore, be dismissed on this ground also.

The appeal against the order and the Civil Revision Petition are dismissed with costs of respondent 1.

T. Rangachariar and B. C. Seshachala Iyer—for Appellant.

V. C. Gopalaratnam—for Respondents.

Ramesam, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decree of our brother, Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in C. S. No. 192 of 24 which was a suit brought by the plaintiff for a declaration of his hereditary right to the management of the temple of Sri Vittalnathjee in Ekambareswar Agraharam, Madras, and that the defendant has no right to cancel the power-of-attorney executed by him in favour of the plaintiff and for an injunction. The learned Judge dismissed the suit and the plaintiff appeals.

The facts of the case may be thus stated: In the year 1896 one Ganga Bai, widow of the plaintiff's paternal grandfather's brother, built a temple for Sri Vittalnathjee in Ekambareswar Agraharam and in 1900 she executed a Bhot Patra (Ex. A) in which she mentions the fact of her having built the temple in 1896 and got the idols of Sri Vittalnathjee and Sri Swaminijee installed therein and of having set apart a sum of Rs. 40,000 for the seva, puja, utsavams and other festivals of the deities and for the salaries of the temple servants. The sum was left with the plaintiff's father, Krishnadoss Balamukundoss of Giridoss Govindoss Company of Madras and he was to pay monthly a sum of Rs. 200 for the expenses. She then adds another Rs. 5,000 to the original fund of Rs. 40,000. She says that the above properties, namely, the house in which the temple was built, the above funds and also cloths, jewels and vessels costing about 4,500 were settled upon the deities and were delivered possession of to the Guru of the family, namely, Sri Krishnavati Vahujee of the Udaipur Samasthanam. She also provides that the successors of the Guru should conduct the seva, puja, offerings, festivals etc. of the temple and that the funds should not be used by anybody for any other purposes. In 1904 the said Sri Krishnavati Vahujee, who was made the trustee of the institution under Ex. A, executed a power-of-attorney to Krishnadoss Balamukundoss giving him certain powers for managing the institution, the principal being a person who had to be constantly absent from Madras, namely, in Udaipur Samasthanam. This is Ex. 3. In 1906 Krishnadoss Balamukundoss died and the agency created by Ex. 3 must be taken to have terminated. The plaintiff stepped into his father's shoes and continued to look after the management of the institution, and in 1909 another power-of-attorney was executed by the same lady, namely, Sri Krishnavati Vahujee, to enable the plaintiff to look after the management of the temple (Ex. 4). In 1911 the principal, namely Sri Krishnavati Vahujee died. Again the contract of agency must be taken to have terminated. But the plaintiff continued to look after the management of the temple. In 1914 the successor of Sri Krishnavati Vahujee namely, her adopted son, Sri Gopeswara Laljee, gave a fresh power-of-attorney to the plaintiff (Ex. 5). To this power-of-attorney a schedule of the properties entrusted to him is attached. Items 1, 2, 3, 4, 8 and 9 therein show that the original funds of Rs. 45,000 were reduced to Rs. 39,000 and odd and both parties have recognized that that was the sum then available for the purposes of the trust. The houses are described in items 5 and 6, and jewels and other moveables in items 7 and 10. In 1916 the same Sri Gopeswara Laljee executed another power-of-attorney to the plaintiff (Ex. 2) under which the power-of-attorney of 1914 was cancelled and larger powers were conferred upon the plaintiff. Some time before the suit which was filed in 1924 misunderstandings arose between the plaintiff and the Udipur Guru who is the defendant and the defendant purported to cancel the power-of-attorney, Ex. 2 on 28th February 1924. The present suit was therefore filed by the plaintiff for the reliefs already mentioned in March 1924. The learned trial Judge thought it was unnecessary to take oral evidence. He held that the defendant was entitled to cancel the power-of-attorney, Ex. 2, and that, if the plaintiff could at all complain of it, it was only by way of a claim for damages; he therefore dismissed the suit with costs.

On appeal it is contended before us that Ex. 2 was irrevocable because it was coupled with some interest of the plaintiff. The document itself purports to be an irrevocable power of attorney; but towards the end it is also provided therein :

> "that a power-of-attorney though irrevocably granted shall be revocable on strong proof of gross mismanagement on the part of the said attorney."

It is therefore clear that the document is not strictly, on the face of it, an irrevocable power-of-attorney, but it was a power-of-attorney irrevocable on certain grounds only but not on other grounds. This again means merely that it is an ordinarypower-of-attorney coupled with a promise that it will not be revoked except on certain grounds. How far such a promise is enforceable by way of damages is another matter. It is obvious that such a promise which is the same as a contract to keep a servant on hire is not specifically enforceable see (1906) App. Cases 254. But it is contended by the learned advocate for the appellant that, apart from this promise not to revoke, the document is irrevocable because the contract of agency was coupled with some interest of the agent, that the fact that the temple was erected for the benefit of the plaintiff's family was alleged in the plaint and was the subject of the first issue and that the learned Judge ought to have taken evidence on this issue before deciding on the question of the revocability of the power-of-attorney. It is true that the question whether the plaintiff has any interest is not one covered by the terms of the power-of-attorney and therefore S. 92, Evidence Act, may not stand in the way of the plaintiff.

This brings us to the question whether the plaintiff has any interest, such an interest as is contemplated in S. 202, Contract Act. The plaintiff does not repudiate the Bhot Patra, Ex. A; on the other hand, he recites its contents without any disapproval in para. 14 of his plaint. It is not pretended that Ganga Bai and the plaintiff were members of an undivided family in respect of the sum of Rs. 45,000 or in respect of the sum spent for the purchase of the house in which the temple is located. On the other hand, the recital in the plaint is made on the footing that they were sums over which she had absolute control. We must take it on the admission in the plaint that the house and the property endowed were the absolute property of Ganga Bai and the plaintiff had no interest in those properties. No doubt there is a further allegation in the plaint that the endowment was made for the spiritual benefit of herself and the members of her family. Assuming that it was so, such spiritual benefit cannot amount to an interest within the meaning of S. 202, Contract Act. We do not think therefore that the agency created by Ex. 3 is in favour of an agent who has got any interest in the property which forms the subject matter of the agency. Even if it were such an agency, it is doubtful whether Ex. 2 fulfills the requirements of S. 202 because the object of the agency was not to enable the agent to realise his interest. It is suggested by the learned advocate for the appellant that in this matter there is some difference between the English Law and Indian Law. The illustrations to S. 202 and the Indian decisions seem to proceed on the footing that there is no such difference. However, on the other view we have taken it is unnecessary to pursue this matter any further. We therefore think that the learned Judge was right in refusing to take any oral evidence as to the existence of any interest of the plaintiff. It follows that the defendant was entitled to revoke the agency under Ex. 2. As the plaintiff claimed no damages for the revocation against the covenant in the document, the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to any damages does not arise. The result is the appeal must be dismissed with (taxed) costs.

Mr. Rangachariar complained that the direction to the Official Referee to consider the amount of damages claimed by the defendant is misleading and may lead to an inquiry not intended by the learned Judge. As we understand this direction which is embodied in Cls. 4 and 5 of the decree it is intended to cover any actual loss caused to the property, funds and moneys by the defendant's management. Therefore, no further direction or modification is necessary. The defendant has filed a memorandum of objections complaining of the direction of the learned Judge limiting the taking of accounts to the period from 1916. The prior power-of-attorney was cancelled in 1916 and strictly any claim for taking an account of the period before 1916 would perhaps be barred. But it is necessary to make further observation on this matter because Ex. 2 refers to all the property mentioned in the schedule to Ex. 5 and describes the agency as one relating to those properties. Certainly the agent has got to account for those properties as from 1916, unless he accounts for any change in the properties in a manner which is satisfactory to the Court. Respondent 2 has substantially failed and sho must pay the (taxed) costs of the memorandum of objections to the appellant.

Judgment.—Plaintiff 1 was married by the defendant in 1904. He had two children by her, who lived until 1921 ; differences having arisen between plaintiff 1 and the defendant, the defendant divorced plaintiff 1 in February 1920. Between 1913 and 1920 plaintiff 1 and her two children were living separately from the defendant.

On the allegation that plaintiff 1 maintained herself and her two children out of the money borrowed from her brother-in-law plaintiff 2, she filed the original suit, making her brother-in-law plaintiff 2, to recover Rs. 1,244 from the defendant, being money borrowed for the maintenance of herself and the two children aforesaid ; the amount is alleged to have been borrowed between May 1917 and February 1920, and the suit was filed on 8th April 1922. The defendant denied his liability. He also denied plaintiff 1's right to pledge the credit of the defendant and alleged that there was no lawful necessity to do so. He also pleaded that the suit was not maintainable at law and that the plaintiffs had no cause of action against him.

This is an unfortunate case ; plaintiff 1 a Mahomedan lady had not proper legal advice in connexion with her suit. This is clear from the proceedings in the case. The first Court gave the plaintiffs a decree as sued for, finding that the defendant was a rich man with an annual income of about Rs. 3,000 and that plaintiff 1's claim of Rs. 1,244 for maintenance of herself and her two children for nearly 34 months was proper in the circumstances. On appeal before the lower appellate Court the learned District Judge stated that it was admitted that "under the Mahomadan Law a wife is not entitled to past maintenance unless the claim is based on a specific agreement and as no such specific agreement is set up in the present suit, the plaintiff 1 had no right to sue and this is conceded by the learned advocate for the plaintiffs."

The lower appellate Court treated the case as

"practically a suit by plaintiff to recover money advanced to plaintiff 1 for the maintenance of herself and her two children and the learned vakil for the appellant does not dispute that under Mahomedan Law, a wife if neglected by her husband may contract debt for the support of herself and her children, and that if such debts are legitimate and contracted bona fide for their support, the creditors have a right of recovery against the husband. (Amir Ali, Mahomedan Law, Vol. 22, p. 362, and Mulla's Mahomedan Law, S. 214). There can be no doubt therefore, that the suit is maintainable in law by plaintiff."

On the merits the lower appellate Court reduced the amount decreed, being of opinion that Rs. 30 a month for the maintenance of plaintiff 1 and her two children may be considered a reasonable rate. It held that Art. 120 applied to the suit and that the suit was not barred by limitation.

In modification of the decree passed by the 1st Court, the appellate Court gave a decree for Rs. 993 in favour of plaintiff 2 only. The exact passages from Amir Ali's book referred to in the lower appellate Court's judgment could not be traced by the learned advocates who appeared before me in the second appeal.

The defendant is a Hanafi. It is stated that plaintiff 1 became a Shafi after marriage. It is clear that the defendant, the husband, is not under Hanafi law liable for the maintenance of his wife where there was no decree or agreement for maintenance before suit see : Abdul Futteh v. Zabunnessa Khattun (1). No doubt it is not specifically stated in the report, that the law applicable to that case was Hanafi law ; but having regard to the fact that that the authorities quoted by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court are authorities governing the Hanafi school of law, we may take it that that case was a decision under the Hanafi law. Further light is thrown on that point by the observations of Abdur Rahim, J., and Srinivasa Iyengar, J., in the case reported in Mahomed Haji v. Kalimbai (2). At p. 213, the learned Judges observed as follows :

"The decision in Abdul Fatteh v. Zabunnessa Khathun (1) is according to the Hanafi school of law, which is followed by Mahomedans of Bengal generally."

Further it is also stated at p. 212 as follows:

"In the Shafi law that the wife is entitled to recover arrears of maintenance, though not due under a decree of Court or a mutual agreement, contrary to the Hanafi Law admits of no doubt.

It is also clear that in such cases, it is the personal law of the defendant that has to be applied, when he is sought to be made liable: see Aziz Bano v. Muhammad Ibrahim Hussain (3). Sulaiman, J., observed at p. 824 (of 47 All.) that:

"in his opinion the personal law which ought to be considered would be the personal law of the defendant.

At p. 825 (of 47 All.) the learned Judge observed:

"it would be grossly unjust to decree the claim on the strength of the personal law governing the plaintiff. It is a well settled rule that the law to be observed in the trial of suits shall, in the absence of any enactment or usage having the force of law, be the law of the defendant.

The case before the Allahabad High Court arose out of a suit by a Sunni husband against his Shiah wife for restitution of conjugal rights, and it is in that connexion that the learned Judge remarked that the law which ought to be applied was the law of the defendant: see Nazarat Hussain v. Hamidan (4). This is the principle recognized in S. 112, Government of India Act, though the section in terms applied to cases on the original side of the High Court of Madras, Calcutta and Bombay. The section enacts:

"when the parties are subject to different personal laws or custom having the force of law. the High Court shall decide according to the law or custom to which the defendant is subject."

A similar law has been declared to be the law that should be followed in the mufassil by the Supreme Courts of Madras and Bombay (37 George 3, Chap. 142 S. 13) Similarly with reference to the mufassil in the Bengal Presidency a similar statute was passed : see 21 George 3, Chap. 70, S. 17.

Text writers on Hanafi Law have unanimously laid down that under that system of law, the wife is not entitled to arrears of maintenance against the husband in the absence of a specific agreement or decree: see Baillie's Digest of Mahomedan Law, Hanafi Jurisprudence, Edn. 2, p. 447; Abdur Rahiman's Institutes of Mussalman Law p. 110; Baillie's Digest of Mahomedan Law (Imami Code of Jurisprudence) p. 100 foot-note 6, where the Hanafi Law is also referred to. Tyabji's Mahomedan Law S. 307; Mulla's Mahomedan Law S. 214. In these circumstances, it would seem that the first plaintiff is not entitled to arrears of maintenance against her Hanafi husband—the defendant—as no specific agreement or decree has been set up in the present case.

The learned District Judge, however, treated the plaint as one filed by plaintiff 2 and gave a decree in his favour for the amount of maintenance at the rate of Rs. 30 a month for plaintiff 1 and her two children, on the footing that plaintiff 1 must be taken to have pledged the credit of the defendant since the defendant deserted and neglected to arrange for their maintenance. When the defendant is not liable for any arrears of maintenance under the Hanafi Law in the absence of specific agreement or decree the question arises whether the wife has got an absolute right to pledge the husband's credit to procure necessities for maintenance or borrow money for such purpose. The learned advocate for the respondent drew my attention to certain text books on Mahomedan Law; but the same mention certain conditions also and it is not the plaintiff's case that such conditions have been satisfied in the present case. Amir Ali's Mahomadan Law Vol. 2, p. 468; Abdur Rahiman's Institutes of Musalman Law p. 112, Art. 202; Hedaya, Vol. 1, p. 397, Baillie's Digest of Mahomedan Law, pp. 447-448. My attention has not been drawn to any provision of Mahomedan Law allowing the plaintiff—the wife—unconditionally to pledge her Hanafi husband's credit to secure money for maintenance where the husband desertsed the plaintiff his wife. In these circumstances and having regard to the pleadings and proof in this case, I regret, I am unable to uphold the decree in favour of plaintiff 2.

There is, however, the fact that the defendant deserted and neglected his two children by plaintiff 1 who were maintained by plaintiff 1 till their death in 1921. The amount of Rs. 30 a month fixed by the lower appellate Court was in respect of both plaintiff 1 and her two children, and plaintiff 1 was entitled to recover the amount spent by her for the maintenance of the children from the defendant. I therefore allow the second appeal in part and remand the appeal to the lower appellate Court for fresh disposal in so far as the claim relates to the expenses incurred by plaintiff 1 in connexion with the maintenance, etc., of her two children acting under O. 41. R. 33, Civil P. C. It would be open to the lower appellate Court to allow fresh evidence in case it should think fit to do so. In the peculiar circumstances of the case the parties to this litigation should bear their own costs incurred up.to date. It would, however, be open to the lower appellate Court to pass such orders as to costs, as it should think fit, with reference to the amount which it may ultimately decree including court-fee thereon in the first Court.

(a) Injunction—Tenant-in-common— Principles governing grant of injunction claimed by tenant-in-common are different.

Where the parties are not divided but are only tenants-in-common in a house and for the sake of convenience each is in possession of some particular portion, the principles governing the Court in respect of grant of injunction at the instance of one tenant-in-common as against other are essentially different from those governing the Courts in respect of a grant of injunction between neighbouring owners of land or houses. Where there are no materials on record from which the Court can come to the conclusion whether a proper case has been made out for the grant of an injunction as between tenants-in-common, no injunction can be granted. Justice would not be meted out if an injunction is granted between tenants-in-common when there are no proper grounds justifying the same.

Judgment.—The plaintiff is the appellant in this second appeal. He sued for a declaration of his title to the house and site "A" marked in the plaint plan and for an injunction restraining the defendants from trespassing upon his portion and from pulling down the wall between the portions A and B. Defendant 1 is the widow of the plaintiff's deceased brother. Her case was that the suit house was not divided between the parties but that for convenience of enjoyment, the plaintiff was in possession of one portion and that she was in possession of another portion of the same, and that the allegation in the plaint that the plaintiff was the owner of one portion of the house was not correct. It would seem that, after the death of defendant 1's husband, there was an arrangement evidenced by Ex. 1 dated 18th November 1901 by which certain properties were given to defendant 1 by the plaintiff. It would also seem that, subsequently, with reference to the lands covered by Ex. 1 there was an actual division by metes and bounds, but with regard to the suit house there was no division between the plaintiff and defendant 1 and that each occupied a particular portion of the house only for convenience of enjoyment of the same. Defendant 1 on 30th November 1922 executed a sale deed in favour of defendants 2 to 4 in respect of her rights to a moiety of the suit house.

The plaintiff stated that defendants 2 to 4 were trespassing upon his portion of the house and were trying to pull down the wall and accordingly he sued for a declaration of his title and for an injunction. The first Court found that there was an actual division by metes and bounds between the plaintiff and defendant 1 as regards the house and that the plaintiff was entitled to the house and site marked "A" in the plaint; and he accordingly decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal by defendants 2 to 4, the lower appellate Court came to the conclusion that there was no actual division by metes and bounds in regard to the suit house, that the plaintiff and defendant 1 were enjoying particular portions of the suit house for the sake of convenience only. On that finding that there was no final division of the house as alleged by the plaintiff, the suit was dismissed. The learned Subordinate Judge in para. 13 of his judgment remarked that the proper course would have been for the parties to agree to have a partition of the house effected as between themselves, so that all future disputes might be avoided; but he regretted that none of the parties asked for such a prayer and consequently he could not proceed further with that suggestion. In this second appeal preferred by the plaintiff it was argued by his learned advocate that the finding of the lower appellate Court on the question of non-division was not sustainable because the lower appellate Court had not considered the evidence of the witnesses examined on the side of the defendants. When once it was admitted that there was a partition, the presumption would be that the partition was complete, and the learned advocate submitted that the way in which the lower appellate Court proceeded to dispose of the question, throwing the onus of proof on the plaintiff, was not justified in law. If the lower appellate Court had really proceeded in the way suggested by the learned advocate, I agree that his criticism will be well-founded; but as I read the judgment of the lower appellate Court, at p. 4, line 36, I find the lower appellate Court has considered the evidence of the defence witnesses:

> "It is not necessary to comment on the evidence of the defendant's witnesses. The reason given by defendant 1 (D. W. 1) for a tentative division is very convincing."

So that, according to my reading of the judgment, the lower appellate Court did consider the defence evidence and was satisfied with the evidence of the first witness on the side of the defendants. I think it is a finding which is binding on me in second appeal and accordingly this contention of the learned advocate fails.

The second point urged by the learned advocate for the appellant was that even on the finding that there was no final division between the parties, the lower appellate Court ought to have considered whether the plaintiff would be entitled to the injunction prayed for in the plaint. The answer to this contention seems to be this: the plaintiff came into Court with a specific allegation that the properties had been actually divided by metes and bounds and that the plaintiff was the absolute owner of his portion of the properties and the defendant 1 of hers. As between the parties if the partition has been proved, the plaintiff's prayer for an injunction would have to be adjudicated upon that footing. If, however, the parties were not divided but were only tenants-in-common and for the sake of convenience each had been in possession of some particular portion, then the principles governing the Courts in respect of a grant of injunction at the instance of one tenant-in-common as against others would be essentially different from those governing the Courts in respect of a grant of injunction between neighbouring owners of lands or houses. But having regard to the allegations in the plaint and the issues framed in the case, there are no materials on record from which the Court could come to the conclusion whether a proper case had been made out for the grant of an injunction as between tenants-in-common. In fact, the plaintiff came into Court with certain definite allegations, which, however, were not proved. Justice would not be meted out if an injunction be granted between tenants-in-common when there had been no proper allegations not grounds justifying the grant of the same. It therefore seems to me that the second ground also fails.

I should have been glad if the learned advocates in this case could have found their way to agree to have this suit remanded to the first Court so that an actual partition between the parties in regard to the suit house could be worked out without further litigation; but I am in no better position now then the lower appellate Court was when it wrote para. 13 of its judgment. That being so, I regret that nothing could be done except to leave the parties to take steps to have a partition of the suit house, so that future quarrels could be avoided.

Finally before leaving this case, I think I should make a few observations with reference to the remarks made by the lower appellate Court in para. 12 of its judgment. It says:

"The first commissioner was sent while the suit was pending disposal in the Court of the District Munsiff, Narasaraopet. As is the practice in the Court of the Additional District Munsiff, Guntur, to send a second commissioner in all such cases, a second commissioner was sent."

If the practice in the Additional District Munsiff's Court of Guntur is, as is remarked by the lower appellate Court in para. 12 of its judgment, I think the sooner that practice is put an end to the better will it be in the interests of the parties as well as the convenience of the Court. The jurisdiction of a Court to issue commissions is governed by the provisions of O. 26, Civil P. C. As provided in O. 26, R. 10, sub-Cl. 3 it is only:

"where the Court is for any reason dissatisfied with the proceedings of the commissioner, it may direct such further enquiry to be made as it shall think fit."

and if necessary supersede the report of the first commissioner and either appoint a second commissioner or give further directions in the matter. The practice of appointing a second commissioner without formally receiving objections to the first commissioner's report and without considering whether the first commissioner's report should be superseded or not is a practice which cannot be too strongly condemned. In fact, in the case reported in Thottamma v. Subramaniayyan (1) at p. 82 (of 45 Mad.) the High Court had occasion to express its disapproval of such practice in the following terms:

"It certainly encourages a haphazard and careless selection of commissioners. It subjects parties to unnecessary and avoidable expense and encumbers the records with useless papers. In our opinion this practice should be put an end to at once. We want it to be distinctly understood that the filing of objections to a report is no ground for appointing another commissioner and that in all cases where a second commissioner is appointed to do the work, the reasons for adopting such a course must be recorded in writing to enable the appellate Court to see whether judicial discretion has been properly exercised."

In this case, the Court should first have considered whether the first commissioner's report should be superseded and must have recorded its reasons in writing when it came to the conclusion that it should be superseded. Then and then alone, it had jurisdiction to appoint a second commissioner to do the same work allotted to the first. I thought it necessary to draw the attention of the lower Courts to the observations in Thottamma v. Subramaniayyan (1) so that the practice mentioned by the lower appellate Court to prevail in the Additional District Munsiff's Court might be put an end to.

The second appeal fails for the reasons mentioned by me and is dismissed with costs.

K. V. Srinivasan—for Appellant.

C. Brook Elliot—for Respondent.

Judgment. — This second appeal arises out of a suit, brought by the plaintiff (respondent) for the recovery of a sum of money alleged to be due to him from the defendant under the pro-note Ex. A. The case set up in the plaint was, that this pro-note was executed in consideration of a sum of Rs. 400 paid to the defendant in cash. That case he failed to make out, and it is clear from the judgment of both the lower Courts that they disbelieved the plaint version as to the form of the consideration, and they have held that the suit pro-note was given in consideration of past cohabitation which the defendant had with a dancing girl named Chinnathayi. In the view that such a consideration for the pro-note is not illegal, a decree has been given in favour of the plaintiff.

It is now argued for the appellant, that once the Court below found that the plaintiff failed to prove that the pro-note was supported by consideration as alleged in the plaint, the suit should have been dismissed, without going into the question whether the consideration alleged by the defendant for the execution of the suit pro-note is true and valid. If a strict view of the pleadings is taken, any variance between the pleading and the proof would be a good ground for rejecting the case. However, this case may be decided even upon the finding of the Courts below that the real consideration for the suit pro-note was not a cash loan, but, on the other hand, it was executed in consideration of the defendant's past cohabitation with a dancing girl. The question now to be decided in view of this finding, is, whether the consideration for the suit pronote is immoral within the meaning of S. 23, Contract Act, and if so, whether it is enforceable against the defendant.

Section 23 declares that the consideration or object of an agreement is lawful unless the Court regards it as immoral or opposed to public policy. Section 2, Cl. (d) of the Act states that if at the desire of the promisor, a promisee has done or promised to do something, such act or promise is consideration for the agreement. According to this definition, the services rendered by the dancing girl to the defendant which would come under past cohabitation would be as much a consideration for the pro-note as a promise on her part to have future cohabitation with him. There is no doubt that, where the object of an agreement is future cohabitation, it is tainted with immorality. The question is, whether the consideration would not also be immoral within the meaning of the section, if it should be past cohabitation. In the treatise on the Indian Contract Act by Pollock and Mulla, 5th Edn., the learned authors observe in connexion with S. 23 at p. 162, that a consideration which is immoral at the time, and therefore, would not support an immediate promise to pay for it, does not become innocent by being past. It seems to me that the test to be applied for deciding, whether a particular thing is immoral or not, is not whether it is a past action or one in future contemplation. It would not be quite logical to draw a distinction between the two, for the taint of immorality exists in either case. The decisions of the Bombay High Court reported in Hussainali v. Di bai (1), and Kisendas v. Dhondu (2), clearly lay down that even if the consideration be past cohabitation, it would not be valid under S. 23, Contract Act, and therefore the contract would be unenforceable. Reference was made to these rulings in the judgment of the lower appellate Court, but it tried to distinguish them on the ground that the connexion was found to be adulterous in those cases. In my opinion, the fact that it was an adulterous connexion would make it illegal besides being immoral. In the present case, there is no doubt that the connexion was immoral, though it would not come within the purview of any section in the criminal law. If the Court regard this as immoral, then the consideration must be taken to be obnoxious to S. 23, Contract Act. The only decision which was relied on by the lower appellate Court for holding that the suit pro-note is valid and enforceable is the decision reported in Lakshminarayana Reddiar v. Subhadri Ammal (3). In the first place, I should observe that in that case the plea was that the pro-note was executed for the purpose of future cohabitation. It was found that the defendant failed to prove that plea. At p. 12 Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., observes that "the pro-note will be illegal as tainted with immorality, only if the consideration therefor be future cohabitation or both past and future cohabitation."

(1) A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 135.
(2) [1920] 44 Bom. 542=57 I.C. 472=22 Bom. L.R. 762.

Then the learned Judge proceeds to deal with the view under the English law and states that

"a promise made in consideration of past illicit cohabitation is void for want of consideration under the English law."

After stating this principle of English law, there is the further observation, namely:

"There is, however, no illegality in such promise but merely absence of consideration and, therefore, according to English law if made in the form of a bond or covenant under seal, there is prima facie a valid contract."

An immoral consideration under S. 23 of the Act would, in my opinion, be different from the absence of consideration. In the view that it would only amount to absence of consideration, it was held that the case could come under S. 25 (2), Contract Act, as a promise to compensate a person who has already voluntarily done something for the promisor. In this case, what we have to see is, whether the pro-note in question is one executed without any consideration at all, or, whether, the consideration for the case is tainted with immorality. In the former alternative, it may come under S. 25, Cl. 2, but in the latter alternative, the case would be governed by S. 23, Contract Act. In the aforesaid decision, it does not appear that the question was considered with special reference to S. 23, nor is there an express observation to the effect that, if the consideration be past cohabitation, it would not be immoral or illegal.

For these reasons, I should hold, with great respect, that the decision in Lakshminarayan v. Subhadri Ammal (3) cannot be applied to the present case, and the view expressed in the Bombay decision is clear on the point and I am in full agreement with it. I therefore hold that the consideration for the suit promissory note being immoral within the meaning of S. 23, Contract Act, the claim under it is unenforceable. In the result, the decree of the lower appellate Court is reversed, and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

A press which was a limited concern was leased to a certain person who subsequently subleased it to another at large profits. Numerous shareholders had also to file suits against the company for recovering the dividends to them. The Chairman of the press was found not authorized by the persons whose names appear on the dividend warrants to give an acquittance or receipt on their behalf.

Judgment.—The first point argued in this appeal is a question of law. It has been contended before us by the Chairman of the Sabapathi Press Co. Ltd., who argued the case personally, that this petition for winding up filed by some shareholders who have paid up their share capital fully is not maintainable. Under S. 166, Companies Act, an application to the Court for the winding up of a company shall be by petition presented either by the company or by any creditor or creditors, contributory or contributories etc., S. 156 of the Act runs thus:

"In the event of a company being wound up every present and past member shall, subject to the provisions of this section, be liable to contribute to the assets of the company to an amount sufficient for payment of its debts and the costs charges and expenses of winding up, and for the adjustment of the rights of the contributories among themselves, with the qualifications following. * * * *"

Clause (4) lays down the following qualification:

"In the case of a company limited by shares no contribution shall be required from any member exceeding the amount (if any) unpaid on the shares in respect to which he is liable as a present or past member."

It is therefore contended before us that a member who has fully paid up his share is not liable to contribute anything under this clause and therefore he is not a contributory within the meaning of S. 166. S. 158 defines the term "contributory." It means:

"every person liable to contribute to the assets of a company in the event of its being wound up, and in all proceedings prior to the final determination of the persons who are to be deemed contributories, includes any person alleged to be a contributory."

The corresponding sections of the then English Act were the subject of consideration in English Courts in In re, National Savings Bank Association (1). The question was considered by Knight Bruce and Turner, JJ. in a case which came up on appeal before them from an order of the Master of the Rolls. S. 74, English Act, then under consideration is the same as S. 158. S. 38 corresponds to our S. 155. It was held by Lord Justices that all past members of the company were liable to contribute and the qualification that a member shall not be liable to pay more than the unpaid amount of his share does not make him the less a contributory in the particular case where his share capital is fully paid up. The case follows another decision in In re, Anglesea Colliery Co (2). Following these decisions, we hold that this petition is maintainable. In some cases it has been laid down as a matter of practice that the petition by a single shareholder ought not to be allowed unless it is supported by other shareholders or creditors. In the present case, the petition is supported by no less than 84 shareholders. The petition also alleges that in the event of winding up, the petitioners have a tangible interest in the surplus assets. We therefore do not see any kind of objection to the maintainability of this petition.

The next point relates to the grounds on which the company is sought to be wound up. S. 162, Cl. (6) says that a company may be wound up by the Court if the Court is of opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up. Cl. (1) to (v) of the section do not apply. A similar clause was the subject of construction by the Privy Council in Loch v. John Blackwood Ltd,. (3). Following that case, our brothers Spencer and Srinivasa Ayyangar, JJ. reversed in Sabapaty Rao v. Sabapathy Press Co. Ltd (4), the original order of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., dismissing the petition and remanded the case back for consideration on the ground that the reasons alleged in the petition will, if made out, be enough to sustain an order of winding up as just and equitable. The learned Judge, our brother Beasley, J. has now found that on one occasion, the press was auctioned and leased out to K. V. S. R. & Co. and that on next day it was subleased to Pola Sankariah for Rs. 10,523. Again in another year the same press was leased out to Mr. Ramchander, son of the Chairman, Mr. Venkata Rao. It was then subleased to Pola Sankariah for Rs. 14,300. The learned Judge observes that the very large profits made by intermediaries make the transactions not altogether proper. The next point the learned Judge relied on is that suits had to be filed against the company for the recovery of dividends. Mr. Venkata Rao sought to explain this fact by saying that sometimes the shareholders would not draw their dividends so that they might make this complaint, and various other explanations are given in connexion with the other shareholders. But whatever the explanations may be there is no doubt that there are numerous cases of shareholders having had to sue the company for recovery of their dividends. The learned Judge also referred the matter to the Official Referee on two points, that is, to look into the accounts and also examine certain dividend warrants for the purpose of satisfying himself on the question as to whether dividends had been paid and whether Mr. Venkata Rao was authorized by the persons whose names appear on the dividend warrants to give an acquittance or receipt on their behalf. On both these questions the report of the Official Referee was against Mr. Venkata Rao. It is said that Mr. Venkata Rao had no opportunity of explaining these matters. On the other side, it is stated that his counsel, Mr. Sydney Smith, did not question the correctness of the report. The learned Judge also observes that there are other matters which he need not go into. Having regard to all these circumstances, we think it is not a matter in which we should differ from the discretion of the learned Judge.

We dismiss the appeal with taxed costs on the higher scale of the petitioners. The taxed cost of the Official Liquidator will be recovered out of the estate. The costs of the respondents may be paid out of the sum of Rs. 800 which has been deposited by the appellants as security for costs.

The effect of the omission of Cl. Order.—This Criminal Revision Petition has been posted before us for a decision upon two preliminary points.

The facts are that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Pattukottai in exercise of his powers under S. 144, Criminal P. C., directed the petitioners to vacate the Nagaram palace building forthwith on the ground that the occupation caused annoyance and obstruction to the zamindarni and was likely to cause an immediate disturbance of the public tranquillity and a riot. In accordance with this order that palace was vacated and an application was subsequently made under sub-S. 4, S. 144, Criminal P. C., to the Additional District Magistrate of Tanjore to rescind the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Pattukottai. This application he rejected. The original order was dated 23rd January 1929, and the order rejecting the petition was on 23rd February. The petitioners then presented this revision petition. When it came on for hearing before Reilly, J. in view of the question raised, namely, whether the High Court has power to interfere in revision with orders under S. 144, Criminal P. C., and the importance of that question he directed that the petition should be heard by a Bench of two Judges. Another question raised before him was whether the petition is out of time because orders under S. 144, Criminal P. C., are in force only for two months. This question also has been left for this Bench to decide.

Dealing with the latter question first, on the assumption that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate acted within his jurisdiction in passing the order, it cannot be questioned that, as the two months have now elapsed since the order was passed, the High Court has nothing to revise. The question as to whether or not the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had jurisdiction to make the order is one of the matters raised in the petition but we are not disposing of that question here as that is not one of the preliminary questions we have to decide. In view of the fact that the High Court has now no order to revise the determination of the larger and more important question as to whether such orders are revisable would be unnecessary but for the fact that two petitions which came on recently for hearing before Ananta-krishna Ayyar, J., were ordered to stand over pending the decision by us of this point and we accordingly allowed the matter to be argued.

It is necessary, first of all, to trace the history of Ss. 144 and 435, Criminal P. C. In the Code of 1864 S. 62 corresponds to the present S. 144 and S. 404 corresponds to S. 435. S. 404 reads as follows:

"The Sudder Court may, on the report of a Court of Session or of a Magistrate, or whenever it thinks fit, call for the record of any criminal trial or the record of any judicial proceeding of a criminal Court, other than a criminal trial, in any Court within its jurisdiction, in which it shall appear to it that there has been error in the decision on a point of law, or that a point of law should be considered by the Sudder Court and may determine any point of law arising out of the case, and thereupon pass such orders as the Sudder Court shall deem right."

The earliest decision upon the point we had to decide was under the Code of 1861 and that was Abbas Ali Choudhury v. Illim Meach (1). That was a decision of a Full Bench, of the Calcutta High Court which decided, Phear, J., dissenting, that an order paseed by a Magistrate under S. 62, Criminal P. C. is not of the nature of a judicial proceeding and therefore cannot be interfered with by the High Court under S. 404 of that Code. Couch, C. J., in his judgment on p. 51 in referring to S. 62 says:

"The language of it seems to point out that it was intended to give the Magistrate a power to be exercised with the utmost promptitude; and, if he should make an order which he had no authority to make, and the party on whom that order is made should not obey it, and be convicted, its legality may then be tried. That is the ground upon which I have always been of the opinion that this is not a judicial proceeding."

In the Code of 1872 S. 518 corresponds to S. 144 of the present Code and S. 520 states that orders made under S. 518 are not judicial proceedings. This latter section was obviously the result of the decision of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court already referred to. Under the Code of 1872 we have two decisions upon this point, namely, H. V. Ramanuja Jeeyarswami v. Ramanuja Jeeyar (2), a decision of Innes and Muthuswami Iyer, JJ., in which it was held that proceedings under S. 518 of that Code are not revisable by the Courts as such orders were expressly declared in that Code to be not judicial proceedings and Sundaram v. Queen (3), where at p. 222 Sir Charles Turner stated:

"It should always be borne in mind that orders under S. 518, Criminal P. C., of 1872 are not judicial proceedings, and if the High Court has power to correct them otherwise than indirectly which is doubtful, that power can rarely be exercised in time to prevent hardship. The law in sanctioning this imperfectly controlled power is careful to provide it shall be committed only to Magistrates whose discretion is presumably guaranteed by their responsible position or by selection."

The next decision is one under the Code of 1882 and it is a decision strongly relied upon by Mr. Jayarama Ayyar in support of his argument that proceedings under S. 144 of the Code are judicial proceedings. That is Queen Empress v. Tirunarasimhachari (4) in which it was held by Sir Arthur Collins, C. J., and Parker, J., that a Magistrate making an enquiry before issue of an order under S. 144 of the Code is acting in a stage of a judicial proceeding and has, therefore, jurisdiction to direct the prosecution of witness for giving false evidence before him at such enquiry. Under the Code of 1882, differing from the Code of 1872, proceedings under S. 144 were stated to be not proceedings. In that case Sir Arthur Collins stated:

"The difficulty arises from the variation in language between S. 237 of the old Code and S. 435 of the present Code. Under the old Code powers of revision were granted to the High Court in judicial proceedings only, and the enacting of S. 520 would seem to imply that, but for that section orders under S. 518 would be "judicial proceedings."

Section 435 of the present Code enables the High Court to call for the record of "any proceeding before any inferior criminal Court" and, therefore, orders under S. 144 would certainly be subject to revision, were it not for the proviso in Cl. 3 of the section. Under S. 1 of the present Code "judicial proceedings" is defined to be "any proceeding in the course of which evidence is or may be legally taken."

It seems to us impossible to deny that a Magistrate acting under S. 144 may legally take evidence before issuing an order . . . . . From this it would appear that both under the old Code and under the present Code these urgent orders were regarded as in their nature "judicial proceedings." the only difference being that, whereas under the old Code, S. 520 somewhat inaccurately declared them not to be judicial proceedings for the purpose of ousting the High Court's powers of revision under S. 297, of the present Code equally bars the High Court's jurisdiction without making an illogical declaration.

Sir Arthur Collins therefore took the view that when in the Code of 1872 proceedings under S. 518 were declared not to be judicial proceedings it was not because they were not judicial proceedings but because it was intended to prevent these orders made upon sudden emergencies from being the subject of revision and the Code of 1882 by stating that they were not proceedings more accurately described them. The next Code to be considered is that of 1898 and it is similar to the Code of 1882 in that by sub-S. (3), S. 435, orders made under S. 144 are not proceedings within the meaning of S. 435. On the 1898 Code there is a decision in Arunachalam Pillai v. Ponnusami Pillai (5) of Sadasiva Iyer and Napier, JJ. which is strongly relied upon by Mr. Jayarama Ayyar in support of his argument. In that case it was held that the High Court has no appellate or revisional power to interfere with the orders of a public servant except in so far as they are orders passed by the public servant in his capacity of a Court subordinate to the High Court and that an order passed by a Sub-Magistrate under S. 144, Criminal P. C., is an order made by him in his capacity as a Court and he is also acting as a Court when he grants or refuses sanction for a prosecution for the disobedience of such order. In that case the order passed under S. 144 of the Code had been disobeyed but the Stationary Sub-Magistrate passed an order refusing sanction to prosecute the person who had disobeyed the order and Napier, J., on p. 424, says:

"We are clear that the Stationary Sub-Magistrate in passing this order refusing sanction was acting judicially, for the original order which it was alleged was disobeyed was an order passed under S. 144, Criminal P. C. These orders have always been treated as judicial orders and we cannot separate the authority issuing the order from the authority granting sanction for disobedience of it."

When Napier, J., stated that these orders have always been treated as judicial orders he was referring to the numerous cases to which our attention has been drawn where the High Court has interfered with orders passed under S. 144 of the Code on the ground that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass such orders. The High Court obviously could not in the face of the Code revise those orders but interfered on the question of want of jurisdiction alone under S. 15, Charter Act and S. 107, Government of India Act. As he points out in his judgment the High Court could have no appellate or revisional power if the Magistrate acts administratively and it is only where he acts judicially that the High Court can possibly interfere under the Charter Act or the Government of India Act. We have therefore this position that the High Court has always been acting under its inherent powers and interfering with Magistrates who have acted under S. 144 without jurisdiction but has been expressly prevented from revising the orders of these Magistrates under S. 435. It is argued from this by Mr. Jayarama Ayyar that it was not because such orders were not in the nature of judicial proceedings that the power of the High Court to revise them was ousted but because it was undesirable that the discretion of Magistrates acting very often on a sudden emergency should be revised by the High Court and that whereas in 1872 such "proceedings were said not to be judicial proceedings" in 1882 they were said not to be proceedings within the provisions of S. 435 and the same under the Code of 1898, that bar to the High Court has now been removed by the Code of 1923 where sub-S. (3), S. 435 has been omitted.

We now come to the Code of 1923. But before doing so there is another case to which reference has been made which, although it was decided in 1923, was before the Code of that year came into force. That is Nataraja Pillai v. Rangasami Pillai (6), a decision of Ayling and Ramesam, JJ. The facts in that case were that a Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed an order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., prohibiting certain persons from interfering with a religious ceromony. On disobedience of that order he sanctioned their prosecution for an offence under S. 188, I. P. C., and it was held that the Magistrate was not, when passing the order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., acting as a Court within the meaning of Cl. (7), S. 195, Criminal P. C., but was only acting as a public servant and hence the proper appellate authority to revoke the sanction was not the Sessions Court, but the District Magistrate as provided by Cl. (6), S. 195.

The decision of Sadasiva Iyer and Napier, JJ. in Aruna chalam Pillai v. Ponnusami Pillai (5) was not followed. The Court followed the Calcutta Full Bench case and also relied on Sundaram v. Queen (3). But that was a decision under the Code of 1872 which expressly stated that proceedings under the corresponding section to S. 144 were not judicial proceedings and the Full Bench in that case could not possibly therefore have held the proceedings were judicial proceedings. Moreover the judgment in Nataraja Pillai v. Rangaswami Pillai (6) does not deal with the other aspect of the case presented by Napier, J., namely that such orders must be judicial orders and not administrative for otherwise the High Court could not interfere in those cases when the Magistrate has acted without jurisdiction whereas the High Court has invariably done so under the Charter Act and the Government of India Act. No doubt most of the orders passed by a Magistrate do not in the least seem to be judicial proceedings, and Ayling, J., gives such an instance on p. 59. Then came the Code of 1923 and there sub-S. (3) to S. 435 is omitted and one question to be considered by us is what is the effect of that omission? There have been two decisions with regard to this question under that Code : Vedappan Serrai v. Periannan Serrai (7) and S. Alaga Therar v. G. A. Baker (8). The former decision is one of Ramesam, J., and the latter is one of Reilly, J., following Nataraja Pillai v. Rangaswami Pillai (6) already referred to. In Vedappan Serrai v. Periannam Serrai (7), Ramesam, J., held that no revision lies to the High Court against an order passed under S. 144, Criminal P. C., as the Magistrate acting under that section is not a Court and the amendment of S. 435, Criminal P. C., by the omission of Cl. (3) from that section has not the effect of permitting a revision to the High Court from such an order, though it has the effect of permitting a revision from an order under S. 145. On p. 623, Ramesam, J., states :

" it seems to me that as to S. 144, Cl. (3), S. 436 was somewhat redundant and only made matters clear. Even without it, it is doubtful whether S. 435 applies. There is nothing in S. 144 to indicate that the Magistrate acting under that section is a Court as in the case of S. 145. "

He was referred to a decision of the Privy Council in Clarke v. Brojendra Kishore Roy (9) but in his opinion that case did not help the petitioner because it only showed that in some parts of the Code the words " Courts " and " Magistrates " are used interchangeably and that under S. 96 a Magistrate issuing search warrants was acting as a Court but this did not conclude the matter as to S. 144. The Privy Council case is reported in Clarke v. Brojendra Kishore (9), and, in our view, it is a decision strongly in support of Mr. Jayaram Ayyar's contention. There the District Magistrate issued a search warrant in connexion with the investigation of some offence. A suit for trespass against him was instituted but it was held by the Privy Council that by S. 36, Sch. 3 and S. 96, Criminal P. C., the power of issuing a search warrant was among the " ordinary powers " of the District Magistrate and therefore under S. 105 he had power to direct a search to be made in his presence if he thought it advisable to do so. Lord Macnaughten in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee referred to S. 36, Cr. P. C., which is as follows :

(6) A. I. R. 1923 Mad. 473=47 Mad. 56.

(7) A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 1108=52 Mad. 69.

(9) [1912] 39 Cal. 953=16 I. C. 501=39 I. A. 163 (P. C.).

"All District Magistrates, Sub-Divisional Magistrates and Magistrates of the First, Second and Third classes have the powers hereinafter respectively conferred upon them and specified in Sch. 3. Such powers are called heir "ordinary powers."

Section 36 is in Chap. 3 which is headed "Powers of Courts." When Sch. 3 is referred to it will be seen that under part 4 of that schedule which is headed "ordinary powers of a Sub-Divisional Magistrate" Cl. (6) is power to make orders under S. 144. On p. 966, Lord Macnaughten states:

"For the sake of brevity the Code uses the terms "Court" and "Magistrate" generally if not always, as convertible terms."

It is impossible to avoid the conclusion that this case decides that every act done by a Magistrate in pursuance of the powers given to him by S. 36 and Sch. 3 is done by him as a Court particularly when it is remembered that the chapter is headed "Powers of Courts." The present Code like the Code of 1898 and that of 1882 merely speaks of "proceedings" and not "judicial proceedings" so that it is not necessary really to consider anything more than the power of the High Court to revise a "proceeding before an inferior criminal Court." Although judicial proceedings are defined in the Code as including "any proceeding in the course of which evidence is or may be legally taken on oath" it was admitted in argument before us that it may sometimes be necessary for the Magistrate before issuing an order under S. 144 to take evidence on oath so that even if that test is applied, it would appear that these proceedings may be judicial proceedings. It is quite true that in the Calcutta Full Bench case such proceedings were held not to be judicial proceedings but that decision was not unanimous and it was undoubtedly in consequence of it that the Code of 1872 described such proceedings as not judicial. The decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Sundaram v. Queen (3), could not have been otherwise than it was as we have already stated, because the Code of 1872 stated that such proceedings were not judicial proceedings. There is also the other description to be applied namely "proceedings of an inferior Criminal Court." The Privy Council case, in our view, makes such proceedings, proceedings of a Court, so that that description is also applicable. If this is so, then we are bound to take a different view to that of Ramesam, J., in the case in Vedappan Servai v. Periannan Servai (7), where he says that Cl. (3), S. 435 was redundant. What is the effect of the omission of that clause in the present Code? We cannot say that that omission was unintentional. We have to take the Code as it is. Up to the present Code, from 1872 until 1923, a ban was placed upon the High Court's power of revision with regard to proceedings under S. 144. Now that ban has been removed. It may have been unintentionally removed but we are not concerned with that. We must hold that the effect of that omission is that the ban is removed and that the High Court has now power to revise such orders. We are aware that, if this decision is right, it may lead to most unfortunate consequences. It is obvious that the Magistrate has most frequently to act in an emergency and that it will be a disaster, if, when he does make an order, a criminal revision petition is at once presented to the High Court and a stay order applied for. We come to the decision we have with great regret and only say that, if Cl. (3), S. 435, was omitted by mistake we hope that legislature will as soon as possible restore it at any rate as far as S. 144, Criminal P. C., is concerned. Petition is dismissed as the order expired before the petition was presented.

Beasley, C. J.—The petitioner was convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Rajahmundry and sentenced under S. 171 (f), I. P. C., to a fine of Rs. 50 and in default to suffer simple imprisonment for a month.

The offence of which he was convicted was that of personation at an election. Briefly, the facts of the case are that on 16th April 1928 there was an election to fill vacancies of the Peddapur Taluq Board. There were two vacant seats for Peddapur firka and eight candidates and eight polling stations. The petitioner's name was by mistake on the roll of two different villages, namely Geddanapalli and Bhupalapatam. The petitioner voted once in the morning in the polling station for Geddanapalli and in the afternoon for a second time in the polling station for Bhupalapatam.

The offence of personation at elections is defined in S. 171-D., I. P. C., as follows :

"Whoever at an election applies for a voting paper or votes in the name of any other person whether living or dead, or in a fictitious name or who having voted once at such election applies at the same election for a voting paper in his own name ; and whoever abets, procures or attempts to procure the voting by any person in any such way commits the offence of personation at an election."

In the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's Court evidence was given in support of the complaint against the petitioner by certain witnesses proving that the accused voted twice which is not disputed by the petitioner and that he did so although this conduct was objected to by P. Ws. 1 and 2. The petitioner filed a written statement denying the offence. He, however, admitted that he voted a second time but stated that he had done so in the bona fide belief that he could do so as his name was included in two lists. He also disputed the evidence of the prosecution witnesses as to the objection raised by them at the time of his second voting. Two witnesses were called by the petitioner who were the Polling Officers and they deposed that no objection, oral or in writing, was raised at any time to the petitioner voting on the second occasion. On behalf of the petitioner three contentions were raised, namely: (1) that the accused did not specifically apply for the ballot paper and that the second voting was not an offence in the strict letter of the section;(2) that the accused had a right to vote a second time as his name appeared twice in two polling areas in the voters' list and (3) that mens rea is an ingredient in this offence and no mens rea was proved. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate decided all the three points against the petitioner and, since no argument was addressed to us by Mr. Grant on behalf of the petitioner that his findings on the first two points are wrong we have only to consider his finding on the third point, namely, whether mens rea is an essential ingredient in this offience. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate thought that all that it was necessary to prove was the fact that the petitioner had voted twice and that his motive for doing so, whether corrupt or otherwise, was immaterial. He, therefore, did not come to any finding as to the petitioner's motive or guilty knowledge. He thinks that however genuine the belief of a person may be that he is entitled to vote twice if his name appears twice upon the electoral roll, he none the less commits an offence under S. 171-D, I. P. C. We have been referred by Mr. Grant to the corresponding S. 171-D, I. P. C. in the English Act, namely the Ballot Act (35 and 36 Vic. Ch. 33). S. 24, of that Act is S. 171-D, I. P. C. We have compared the two sections and they are clearly the same. That being so, we were referred to an English decision on that section reported in the Stepney case (1). There, in discussing the offence of personation, Deman, J., stated on p. 46 as follows :

"It is thoroughly understood election law that, unless there be corruption, and a bad mind and intention in personating, it is not an offence. If it is done under an honest belief that the man is properly there for the purpose of voting, it is held in these cases and in other cases analogous that no offence has been committed. . . . . They are enactments which can be really only applicable to an intentionally bad act, because if a man is guilty at all he is guilty of felony, and may be imprisoned as a felon for a considerable time. To suppose that the legislature ever intended to enact that a man, who with perfect honesty but from a mere blunder as to his rights gives a vote, and then (believing that he has a right to do so), gives a second vote, he being on the register, on the same day, is to be deemed guilty of felony, is to impute an intention to the legislature which is absurd though if it had said so in absolutely plain words, we must have carried it out. I do not think that that is the intention of the Act ; I think there is still to be added to the offence of personation a corrupt intention. and where the corrupt intention is absent, the offence of personation cannot have been committed."

(1) 4 O'M. & H. 34.

The facts in that case were that a man's name had been wrongly included in the register of two divisions. He voted twice and it was admitted that he was ignorant of the law and had acted conscientiously by mistake, that he had no corrupt intention and that he had not been corruptly influenced.

It was argued by the Public Prosecutor that there is no such thing as mens rea in India, that, unless an accused person can bring himself within any of the exceptions in the Indian Penal Code, the offence is committed as soon as the acts set out in the section in the code which defines the offence have been committed, that it is not stated in S. 171-D that the personation must be with a corrupt or any other intention and that therefore intention is immaterial. It was contended that the petitioner's plea amounts to nothing more than the plea that he was ignorant of the law which plea could be of no avail to him. But we find ourselves quite unable to agree with that argument. It does not follow that the petitioner's plea was merely one that he was ignorant of the law. His plea apparently is that as his name was twice upon the electoral roll, he believed by a mistake of fact, that he was on that account entitled to vote twice. His plea is not that he thought that a voter could vote more than once at an election. We have no doubt whatever that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was wrong in not applying his mind to that aspect of the case. He should have seen, whether, upon the evidence, the petitioner was able to bring himself within any of the exceptions in the Indian Penal Code. This he has not done. Quite apart from this, we are unable to say that the intention of an offender in the commission of this crime is any different in India to what it is in England.

There can be no question whatever that the legislature in introducing the new chapter, Ch. 9 (a), into the code exactly copied the English statute law with regard to offences relating to elections and we see no reason for saying that, whereas in England the corrupt intention of the voter is to be considered here it is immaterial. We, therefore, set aside the conviction of the petitioner, order the fine inflicted upon him to be refunded and direct that this complaint be reheard by the District Magistrate, Rajahmundry or some other Magistrate whom he may direct other than this Sub-Divisional Magistrate. We ourselves are not prepared to decide this matter on the evidence and we think it is essential that the case should be decided by tho Court before which the evidence is presented.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit filed by the plaintiffs (respondents 1 to 3) for an injunction restraining defendant 1, the Secretary of State for India in Council, from acquiring the plaint-mentioned lands under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act. The suit was instituted before the issue of any notification by the Government under S. 6 (1), Land Acquisition Act. But, as a matter of fact, such a notification was issued by the Government in respect of the plaint-lands soon after the filing of the suit. That is clear from Ex. 1 which is dated 15th May 1923. The trial Court took into consideration the fact of the issue of the notification, Ex. 1, during the pendency of this suit and held that there was no valid ground for the issue of an injunction restraining the Government from proceeding with the acquisition under the Act. But the lower appellate Court was of opinion, that the suit should be decided on the state of circumstances which existed at the date of the institution, without taking into consideration what transpired subsequent to the filing of the plaint. Considering the scope of this suit within this narrow compass, it held that the civil Court could go into the question, whether the acquisition was really for a public purpose or not, conceding at the same time that, if a notification under S. 6 (1), Land Acquisition Act, be issued and proceedings are taken on that basis, it may be conclusive evidence of the purpose being a public one. Regardless of the declaration contained in the notification, the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion upon the materials furnished in the suit, that the purpose could not be deemed to be a public purpose. In this view, an injunction was issued against defendant 1 as prayed for in the plaint.

In this second appeal, it has been fairly conceded by the learned advocate for the respondents. that, if a declaration under S. 6, Land Acquisition Act, be made by a notification in the gazette it would be conclusive evidence of the fact that the land sought to be acquired was needed for a public purpose. It has also been held in Ponnaiya v. Secy. of State (1) that after such a declartion, it is not open to the owner to contend in any civil Court that the land was not needed for public purpose: vide also decision in Veeraraghavachariar v. Secy. of State (2). as to the conclusiveness of the declaration as to the purpose being a public one. That being so, the next question is, whether in deciding this suit, the Court can take into consideration the fact of the issue of such a notification by the Government soon after the filing of the suit as evidenced by Ex. 1. There is no doubt that the Government would take further steps in the matter of the acquisition on the strength of that notification. The relief claimed by the plaintiffs in this case, is an injunction to restrain the Government from proceeding with the acquisition. If an injunction should be granted ignoring the fact of the issue of this notification, it would only lead to an anomaly and also to multiplicity of suits.

The decision in Nuri Miah v. Ambica Singh (3) relied on by the learned Government Pleader, lays down the principles which should be applied to a case of this kind. It is therein laid down that, though ordinarily the decree in a suit should accord with the rights of the parties as they stood at the date of the institution of the suit, that rule need not be followed where it is shown that the original relief claimed, has, by reason of the subsequent change of circumstances, become inappropriate, or that it is necessary to have the decision of the Court on the altered circumstances in order to shorten litigation or to do complete justice between the parties. Adopting the principles enunciated in this ruling, it would be proper in this case for the Court to take notice of the fact of the issue of the notification, Ex. 1, though it was after the filing of the suit, in order to mould the decree in the proper form according to the circumstances which have arisen since the institution of the suit. The relief in this case being an injunction which is in the discretion of the Court to grant or refuse, I think that, for a satisfactory disposal of the case, due weight should be given to the issue of the notification, Ex. 1, in order to see whether, in spite of such a notification there are still reasonable grounds for the issue of any injunction. In the view I have taken, it must be held that the notification is conclusive evidence of the fact that the acquisition in question was for a public purpose. It is unnecessary therefore to canvass the evidence in order to come to an independent conclusion whether it is for a public purpose or not.

I have to consider the contention of the learned advocate for the respondents that there was no substantial compliance with the proviso to S. 6 (1), Land Acquisition Act, and therefore the declaration would be ultra vires. The proviso is to this effect :

"No such declaration shall be made unless the compensation to be awarded for such property is to be paid by a company, or wholly or partly out of public revenues or some fund controlled or managed by a local authority."

In the present case, what has been done is that 20 per cent of the cost of the acquisition should be levied in the first instance from the applicants for the sites and the remaining cost, namely, 80 per cent should first be paid out of the public revenues by the Government, but it should subsequently be recouped from the persons to whom the sites are assigned, in instalments which are spread over a period of 20 years. As I have already said the avowed purpose of the acquisition is to provide sites for the Panchamas and other labourers. It is argued that in view of the avowed intention of the Government to recoup the 80 per cent of the cost from the grantees of the sites in the manner stated above, it should be deemed that no portion of the cost really comes out of public revenues. Without now going into case law as to the interpretation of this proviso, it seems to me at first sight, that all that the proviso requires is, that some portion of the initial cost of the acquisition should come out of the public revenues. It is silent as to what the effect of any future action by the Government in the matter of recouping the amounts advanced by it would be upon the validity or propriety of the notification. There is no doubt that there must be a substantial bona fide compliance with the terms of this proviso. By reason of the stipulation that the 80 per cent of the cost now paid by the Government should later on be recovered from the grantees, it cannot be concluded that the entire amount would surely be recouped by the Government. We cannot forget the other contingency of the Government failing to recoup portion of this amount, in which case, it must itself bear the outlay to that extent. Such contingencies as would arise in future are now problematic and in the face of the clear fact that 80 per cent of the cost is now paid out of the public revenue, we need not speculate as to what would happen in future. I am therefore of opinion that, in spite of the aforesaid stipulation, there is substantial compliance with the condition in the proviso that at least a part of the cost should come out of public revenues at the time of the acquisition. In the case reported in Ponnaiya v. Secy. of State (1) referred to above, there was a payment by Government of only one anna out of a sum of Rs. 3,352 and odd, the cost of the acquisition. It was therein held that this was merely an evasion of the terms of the proviso to S. 6 (1) of the Act. But, on a perusal of the judgments of both the learned Judges in that case, it seems to me that the facts proved in that case led to an inference that the acquisition in question was only a device for private ends under the guise of the Land Acquisition Act, and in all probability, the payment of one anna only out of a very big sum coupled with those special circumstances, was viewed as a mere evasion and not a compliance at all with the requisites of the proviso. Whereas, a divergent view was taken by another Division Bench of this Court in the case reported in Senja Naicken v. Secy. of State (4). It was held, that even a contribution of one anna by the Government, though the cost of the acquisition amounted to a pretty large amount, would be a sufficient compliance with the proviso and that there was no valid reason to question the legality of the notification. This objection is in my opinion unsustainable, and I hold that the declaration under S. 6 (1) of the Act evidenced by Ex. 1 is legal and valid.

Any further steps taken by the Government in pursuance of this notification cannot be arrested by the issue of an injunction in this suit. I therefore disagree with the opinion of the lower appellate Court, and find that it is needless to issue any injunction. In this view, the plaintiffs' suit should be dismissed and this appeal allowed. As for costs, the important fact to be borne in mind is, that the present suit was instituted by the plaintiffs before the issue of the notification, Ex. 1, and therefore it was open to them to question the alleged public purpose for the acquisition and to ask for an injunction. However, the plaintiffs have been throughout contending that the notification itself is ultra vires, and that contention has been found against. Taking all these circumstances into consideration, I think fit to direct the plaintiffs to pay one half of defendant 1's costs throughout and bear their own costs. Leave refused.

Appeal No. 95 of 1925, Decided on 16th August 1929, from decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Coimbatore, in Orignal Suit No. 24 of 1923.

 (a) Mortgage—Consideration—If execution is proved, recital is prima facie proof of passing of consideration against heir or purchaser from executant.

If a suit is between the mortgagee and the mortgagor only and the mortgagor admits the document, the onus of proving want of consideration is on him; but if he does not admit the execution of the document and denies it and therefore denies the whole transaction, the burden of proving execution and the passing of consideration are both on the plaintiff-mortgagee. Generally he discharges his burden by proving execution only and exhibiting the document containing admission by the mortgagor of having received consideration. The moment such a document is proved and exhibited, it is for the mortgagor to rebut the presumption arising out of the recital in it. If further instead of the mortgagor himself the mortgagee has to sue his legal heir who is an infant, there is no greater burden as regards proof of consideration on the mortgagee. In the case of the purchaser from the mortgagee who cannot be expected to admit the execution of the document, if he puts the mortgagee to strict proof of execution and passing of consideration unless in the course of proving the document, certain circumstances have been elicited which throw a cloud of suspicion on any part of the case, the recitals would be prima facie proof of the passing of consideration and it is for the purchaser to meet the presumption arising out of the recital: 6 Cal. 268 and 35 *I. It is only in cases where evidence is meagre and the Court is not in a position definitely to know what happened that the technical rule as to burden of proof is to be observed. [P 256 C 1]

Watrap S. Subramania Iyer—for Appellant.

K. Bhashyam Iyengar—for Respondents.

Ramesam, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit on a mortgage bond dated 17th October 1908, executed by one Venkatasami Naidu. Defendant 2 is the father of the executant. Defendants 3 and 4 are the assignees of a mortgage decree obtained against the suit lands. Defendants 5 and 6 are subsequent mortgagees. Defendants 7 and 10 are purchasers of portions of the mortgage property. Defendants 8 and 9 are purchasers in Court auction of portions of mortgage property in execution of a decree on a prior mortgage. The mortgagor became an insolvent and his property became vested in the Official Receiver who is defendant 1. Defendant 1 pleaded that the mortgagor was not the managing member of the family at the time of the alleged execution of the suit bond. He put the plaintiff to proof of the execution of the mortgage bond and of its consideration. He also alleged that there were misunderstandings between the mortgagor and his father and that they were executing fictitious documents in favour of relations with a view to precipitate a partition in the family. He relied on some other circumstances for showing that the suit document was a nominal one. Defendant 2 contended that the suit document was not binding on him. Defendant 7 raised certain contentions which it is unnecessary to state. The Subordinate Judge granted a decree against defendant 1's share only. The Official Receiver files this appeal and he repeats his contention in the Court below that the suit document was nominal.

Defendant 1 became an insolvent some time in August 1914. He had previously executed two mortgages in favour of his wife's brothers. The were dated 15th February 1913 and 27th February 1913. Soon after the mortgagor was declared insolvent, the Official Receiver took steps to have these mortgages declared void against the creditors under S. 36, Insolvency Act, and they were declared void. The present plaintiff 1 is the brother of the father-in-law of the mortgagor. He died before the case came on for trial and his nephews were brought on the record as his legal representatives. These happen to be the two mortgagees whose mortgages were declared void in the insolvency proceedings. It is contended for the appellant that as his mortgages in favour of the brothers-in-law were found to be collusive documents it is likely that the suit document also was a collusive and nominal document. But it seems to me that the suit mortgage was executed in circumstances quite different from those of the other two mortgages. They were executed in 1913 when the mortgagor was getting heavily involved and as a matter of fact he was declared insolvent soon after.

The suit mortgage bond was executed six years before the insolvency. It does not follow from the fact that the man was getting involved in 1913 and was executing nominal documents, that the document of 1908 should also be regarded as nominal. The suit mortgage is in favour of the uncle-in-law of the mortgagor, a rather remote relation. The other two mortgages were in favour of his brothers-in-law, very close relations. It is next urged that when in the insolvency proceedings the present mortgage bond was summoned for it was produced by defendant 2 before the Official Receiver. Assuming that it was produced by defendant 2, it does not follow that the document was always in the custody of defendant 2 and it had never been with the mortgagee. It is true that, if the mortgagee had never had possession of the suit document, it suggests that it is a nominal transaction. But of this suggestion there is really no evidence. The document was actually produced before the Official Receiver by D. W. 4, son of defendant 7, and he says that defendant 2 gave it to him. I doubt if this oral evidence ought to be believed, D. W. 3 says that there was a partition between the mortgagor and his father in 1909 and that at the time of the partition the suit mortgage bond was with defendant 2 and that it was taken from him. Ex. 4 is the partition deed. There is a clause in it providing that besides the debts referred to in the schedule all other debts should be discharged by the persons who contracted the debts. Now, this is sought to be construed as a statement that all debts other than those mentioned in the schedule are nominal and nominal endorsements of payments should be obtained on the bonds and the bonds handed ever to the other party. I do not see any justification for this construction of Ex. 4. This contention therefore that the suit document was regarded as a nominal document at the time of the partition fails.

The next circumstance relied on by the appellant may be thus stated. Defendant 7 obtained a decree in O. S. No. 28 of 1908 and proceeded to execute his decree by sale of the mortgage properties. In the proclamation the suit mortgage was given in the list of prior encumbrances and a remark was added that it was a nominal document. This is a statement made behind the back of the creditor in proceedings to which he was not a party and it was purely a self-serving statement. A statement of that kind is not even evidence against the plaintiff. Thus, so far as the specific circumstances relied on by the appellant are concerned, I think that they do not go to show in the slightest degree that there is any suspicion attached to the document.

It is next contended that, even ignoring all the circumstances relied on by the defendant, the plaintiff ought to fail because it is said that the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to prove that there was consideration for the suit mortgage and the supplemental plaintiffs have not discharged that burden resting upon them. The document Ex. A mentions five items of consideration. The first item is a sum of Rs. 1,000 due to the Coimbatore Town Bank. That there was such a debt and that it was paid off by January 1909 is proved by P. W. 1. It is not even suggested that the defendants have paid off this debt. There is some evidence that plaintiff 1 paid off the debt vide the evidence of

P. W. 2. Item 2 is a debt of Rs. 1,605 due to one Subramanian Chettiar, and item 3 is a debt of Rs. 567 due to Kumarappa Chettiar. Plaintiff 2 as P. W. 2 swears that these two promissory notes were paid off and that he saw the promissory notes brought back. Unfortunately, the promissory notes are not now produced. But plaintiffs 2 and 3 are not responsible for such non-production. They are only the legal representatives of plaintiff 1 brought on record just two months before trial. The original mortgagee is dead. It may be that if he had been living he would have given a better account of these promissory notes. It cannot be said that the inability of plaintiffs 2 and 3 to explain as to what became of the promissory notes is a suspicious circumstance against them. The payment of the other items is also spoken to by plaintiff 2.

It is argued for the appellant that he is a stranger to the document and therefore the burden lies on the plaintiffs to prove the passing of consideration as against him. The appellant is a stranger to the document only in the sense that he was not an original party to the document. In the sense that he derives his interests from the mortgagor and therefore stands in his shoes, he is not a stranger but it is said that as he knows nothing of the original transaction the burden ought to lie on the person who knows more about it. In this particular case, if the burden of proof is to turn upon a consideration of this kind, the plaintiffs also can be said to be in the same position. The original mortgagee, viz., plaintiff 1 died and his nephews are the legal representatives. They know no more of suit transaction than the appellant and so far as this aspect is concerned both the parties who are now contesting are persons who have no means of knowledge and if the rule as to burden of proof is to turn upon this circumstance it is clear that as both the parties are strangers and as the proof of the execution of the document is prima facie proof of the passing of consideration, the further burden of rebutting this presumption arising from such proof must rest on the defendants and the defendants must fail. But I do not wish to dispose of the case on this narrow ground. An elaborate argument has been addressed to us that wherever there is a mortgage and the mortgagee's interest afterwards passes to a stranger and a suit is brought on the document the burden of proof against the stranger is on the mortgagee and if he fails to show the passing of consideration positively, he must fail even if there is no evidence on the side of the defendants. I agree with a part of this propesition but not with the full extent of the implication in it and, as there are cases either apparently or really supporting the contention of the appellant, I wish to deal with this matter fully.

If the suit is between the mortgagee and the mortgagor only and the mortgagor admits the document, the onus of proving want of consideration is on him but if he does not admit the execution of the document and denies it and therefore denies the whole transaction the burden of proving execution and the passing of consideration are both on the plaintiff mortgagee. Generally he discharges his burden by proving execution only and exhibiting the document containing the admission by the defendant of having received consideration. The moment such a document is proved and exhibited, it is for the defendant to rebut the presumption arising out of the recitals in it. Those last statements of mine are elementary propositions and there can be no conflict of opinion about them. I state them merely to lead to the next step. But suppose that the original mortgagor died leaving, let us say an infant heir who knows nothing about the original transaction and a suit is brought against the infant heir. Naturally he denies knowledge of the transaction and puts the plaintiff to the proof of the execution and the passing of consideration. The burden is of course on the plaintiff to prove both. But suppose the plaintiff proves execution and exhibits the document containing the recitals as to receipts of the consideration by the mortgagor whose heir the defendant is, has he not made out a prima facie case as to the passing of consideration also? I think he has done so and unless in the course of proving execution very suspicious circumstances are elicited in the cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses the mom.

ent the execution is proved, it is for the defendant to meet the plaintiff's case made out by the putting in of the document in evidence containing the recitals. I do not think there is any case, at any rate none has been cited before us, showing that an infant heir is in a better position than the original mortgagor and that there is a greater burden on the plaintiff because the infant heir knows nothing about the original transaction. No Court has yet said that:

Now I take up the next question. Instead of the property passing to the infant heir, suppose the original mortgagor has sold it by private sale or the mortgaged property has passed from him by an auction-purchase to the purchaser. Does this purchaser stand in a better position than the original mortgagor or the infant heir? On principle I do not see why he should. As to one proposition laid down by all the cases I entirely agree, namely, that, where a purchaser who cannot be expected to admit the execution of the document denies such execution and puts the plaintiff to proof of the whole transaction the burden is on the plaintiff to prove execution and the passing of consideration. All the cases lay down this and I agree with this proposition. But this is nothing more than what happens in the case of the mortgagor himself denying execution; and to say this is not to put the purchaser in a better position than the original mortgagor. Now, suppose in such a case the plaintiff mortgagee has proved the execution of the document and has put in evidence the recital therein as to the passing of consideration, i. e., an admission by the mortgagor whose representative the defendant is. In such a case it seems to me that, unless in the course of proving the document circumstances have been elicited by cross-examination of witnesses which throw a great cloud or suspicion on any part of the case, the recitals would be prima facie proof of the passing of the consideration and it is for the defendant who claims under the person who made the admission to meet the presumption arising from the recitals. I do not think it can lie in his mouth to say that he was a stranger to the original transaction; and, if he cannot undertake to meet the plaintiff's prima facie case arising from the recitals, he cannot, it seems to me, insist on the plaintiff proving something more than the recitals so as to make out the passing of the consideration specifically and not by mere admissions. It may be in a particular case, if the plaintiff is in a position to produce better evidence than mere recitals and deliberately abstains from doing so, such as in the case of a merchant not filing his accounts or where it appears that there must have been other vouchers and they are not produced, or some other suspicious circumstances appear, that it is open to the Court to say that it is not satisfied with the presumption arising from the recitals and to require more from the plaintiff before it calls upon the defendant to meet the plaintiff's case. But to say this is not to lay down any rule as to burden of proof. It is merely a question of weighing the evidence. It seems to me that in general, by which I mean where no other suspicious circumstances appear, the plaintiff by merely proving the execution of the document containing recitals must be taken to have made out a prima facie case and it is for the defendant to meet that case by adducing his evidence. The fact that the defendant is a stranger to the original transaction cannot make his position better or the plaintiff's position worse than where he sues the original mortgagor. So far, I have discussed the matter on general principles and without reference to any cases. I will now discuss the cases that have been cited before us.

The first decision cited before us is Brajeswaree v. Bhudamuddi (1). The matter came up on second appeal before Jackson and Macdonell, JJ. The lower appellate Court held that the passing of the consideration was not proved though the execution of the document had been proved. The point raised in second appeal was that, unless there was some evidence for the defendant to rebut the case made out for the plaintiff, the plaintiff ought to get a decree. Jackson, J. agreed with this contention but Macdonell, J. said that it was a second appeal and he could not interfere. The matter came up before a third Judge Garth, C. J., who made certain observations to the effect that the weight of the recitals as against a stranger to the document must be taken to be less than the weight of the same recitals against the original executant. I regret I have to dissent from this proposition. No doubt, the result of that case can be justified if the lower appellate Court had said that, apart from the recitals in the document, there were other circumstances appearing in the plaintiff's case itself or other surrounding circumstances which threw so much suspicion that without further evidence on the part of the plaintiff it was not prepared to accept his case, or in other words, it would not have called upon the defendant to meet the plaintiff's case. If anything in that case rests upon some such consideration, I would agree with Macdonell, J., that it is a matter for non-interference in second appeal; but Jackson, J's judgment shows that there were no such circumstances and I would agree with Jackson, J., that in that case the second appeal ought to have been allowed. In any event, I am unable to agree with the Chief Justice's observation that because the defendant is a stranger to the document the weight to be attached to the plaintiff's evidence varies. The weight of certain evidence cannot vary because of the nature of the defendant but can only vary with reference to the surrounding circumstances.

The recitals in a document may lose their weight on account of other suspicious circumstances surrounding the execution of the document coming out in the evidence; but where there are no such suspicious circumstances I am unable to see how the weight can diminish because the defendant is a person other than the original executant, though claiming under him. The next decision relied on is Bisheswar Dayal v. Harban Sahay (2). So far as the head-note in this case is concerned, I do not see any reason to dispute it. The defendant was a stranger and he denied all knowledge of the bond. The burden therefore was primarily on the plaintiff. It was for him to make out a prima facie case. Whether more was intended by the case does not appear from the judgment. If it was meant to lay down in that case that positive proof of the passing of consideration must be given and that the proof of execution is not enough to discharge the plaintiff's burden and to call upon the defendant to meet the case, I cannot agree with it. It is not clear that the case was intended to lay down any such rule. The words "the transaction was perfectly genuine and free from taint of fraud" suggest not that the plaintiff should prove a huge negative, that he has to imagine some fraud and show that there was no fraud, but that there was some circumstance in the case suggesting fraud or suspicion of fraud and the plaintiff has to clear it up. But it is unnecessary for me to say more about that case. There again the matter came up on second appeal and the appeal was dismissed. Perhaps, there was something in the lower appellate Court's judgment about fraud surrounding the execution of the document. The next case referred to is Saluk Singh v. Ajudhya Pershad (3). Here again, I have no quarrel with the head-note. The burden certainly lay on the plaintiff, but it seems to have been held that even if the plaintiff proved the execution of the document he had not proved the passing of consideration. The last sentence in the judgment seems to suggest that there was so much more which the plaintiff could have proved but he did not and that his not adducing such further evidence as was in his power must be taken to destroy any presumption arising from the recitals of the document. It may be that the decision is right on the facts. All that the Judges say is that the Court of first instance was quite right in primarily placing the onus of proof on the plaintiff and in holding that the onus was not shifted. The latter proposition I do not take as a general rule of law that in every case of a stranger-defendant the burden does not shift merely by proof of execution. If it is merely a statement on the facts of the case, the case lays down nothing in favour of the appellant.

The next case is Krishna Kisore v. Nagendrabala Chowdhurani (4). This case certainly does not help the appellant. Both sides adduced such complete evidence as was in their power and the Court was in a position to adjudicate upon the truth and not upon a technical rule of onus. In such cases it is said that the onus of proof becomes immaterial and no importance should be attached to the question of onus. I entirely agree with these remarks. In a case where all the facts are proved by ample evidence and the Court is in a position exactly to say what happened, no importance need be attached to the rule as regards burden of proof. Other cases occur where evidence is very meagre and the Court is not in a position to know definitely what happened. In such a case the case has to be decided with reference only to the technical rule as to burden of proof. Let us imagine a very elementary case. Suppose that beyond exhibiting the document both sides have adduced no further evidence. In such a case, if the burden is on the defendant, he ought to fail; but if it is on the plaintiff if he has not discharged the burden by exhibiting the document he ought to fail. In such a case the rule as to burden of proof becomes of great importance and it is with reference to such a case that my remarks apply. It is in such a case that I say in general that after exhibiting the document containing the recitals as to the passing of consideration, the burden shifts to the defendant. It is only in certain special cases of suspicious circumstances that it may not so shift.

Certainly the decision in Krishna Kiser De v. Sreemati Nagendrabala Chowdhurani (4), does not help the appellant. There is only one case from our Court cited for the appellant and this is Kumarappa Chettiar v. Narayanan Chettiar (5), I regret to say that I am unable to agree with the observations of Spencer, J., at p. 456. He seems to dissent from the decision in Babbu v. Sita Ram (6), on the ground that the peculiar position of the stranger has not been carefully examined. Now a stranger who purchased a mortgagor's title, whether by private purchase or in Court auction, ought to know exactly the nature of the title he has purchased, and to say that such purchase was without notice seems to be incorrect. Want of notice in such a case can only be the result of sheer carelessness on the part of the purchaser which must amount at least to constructive notice. It is very difficult to imagine a case of a transferee who does not stand in the shoes of the transferrer and against whom an admission of the transferrer cannot be regarded as evidence. Far from dissenting from Babbu v. Sita Ram (6), I am inclined fully to agree with the observations in that case. The observations of Kumaraswami Sastriar, J., at p. 458 are more carefully worded and it is not necessary for me to dissent from them as from Spencer, J's., observations. There he says that, where a person claiming title to the property succeeds in showing that there is no debt, then the property cannot be sold. This of course is perfectly right. In fact, the whole judgment of Kumaraswami Sastriar, J., proceeds on the footing that the fictitious nature of the consideration was actually shown in that particular case and in such a case, unless it is intended to benefit the mortgagee, which is a special case, the mortgagee cannot have a decree for sale. I agree with all this. At p. 457 he agrees with Bisheshwar Dayal v. Harbans Sahay (2). But on reading the rest of the paragraph it seems to me he is not laying down any rule as to burden of proof. He only says that want of consideration may be proved as part of other circumstances going to show that the instrument is a colourable transaction and not intended to convey any interest to the ostensible purchaser or to confer any title on him. In fact, there seems to be in that case very strong evidence to show that the document was colourable. Whether it came out as part of the plaintiff's case or whether the defendant adduced such evidence I am not able to say. The matter came up in second appeal and the crux of the appellant's contention seems to have been that, even if there is no consideration proved he is entitled to a decree for sale. In my opinion this case does not help the appellant. Certainly I am inclined to dissent from Spencer, J.'s disapproval of Babbu v. Sita Ram (6).

In my opinion the observations in Babbu v. Sita Ram (6), are unexceptionable, and I agree with them. In Benoy Bhusan Roy v. Dhirendra Nath De (7), at p. 181 (of 74 I. C.), we have got the following observation:

"The document was executed by his father, and contains a recital that the consideration

(6) [1914] 36 All. 478=25 I.C. 426=12 A.L.J. 806.
(7) A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 415.

had been received by the executant. The burden lies upon the executant or his representative to prove that the recital was untrue and to satisfy the Court how he became a party to a document which contained an untrue recital of this description . . . . . This burden has not been discharged. On the other hand, there is affirmative evidence on the part of the plaintiff to show that consideration was in fact paid."

I entirely agree with these observations and seeing that Mukerjee, J., is a party to this case it seems to me that what is sought to be implied in Bisheswar Dayal v. Harbans Sahay (2), was not really meant by it. It is true that this last case is a case of an heir; but I do not see how the case of an heir differs from that of a transferee. If any relaxation of the rule of law is to be made for the case of a purchaser on the ground that he is a stranger and he knew nothing of the initial facts, surely the same thing ought to be done for an infant heir or even a major heir who knew nothing about the transaction. The truth is that S. 106, Evidence Act, cannot be utilized to help persons who are representatives of other parties and who step into their shoes, as Spencer, J., seems to suggest in Kumarappa Chettiar v. Narayanan Chettiar (5). In my opinion, in the present case after Ex. A has been proved there are no suspicious circumstances compelling the Court not to shift the onus to the defendants. The defendants have proved nothing to rebut the presumption arising from the recitals in the bond.

The appeal fails and ought to be dismissed with costs.

Appeal No. 237 of 1926, Decided on 12th August 1929, from a decree of Dist. Judge, South Arcot, in Original Suit No. 45 of 1924.

(a) Hindu Law—Debts—Father—Money decree obtained against father and properties attached—In execution whole of interest may be proceeded against irrespective of ambiguity in description—Son is bound by such execution unless he shows that debt was immoral—Civil P. C., S. 53.

Where money decrees are obtained against a father and the properties attached, even when there is ambiguity in the description of the properties such as by the use of the words right title and interest of the judgment-debtor, still it must be taken prima facie that the intention in the execution proceedings is to proceed against the whole of the interest that may be proceeded against on account of the Hindu Law rule that a father's debts may be executed against the son. There may be some special circumstances in some cases to show that the execution proceedings were limited to a particular share of interest. Where no such limitation expressly appears, all that the sons can claim is to show that the debt was illegal or immoral or that the debt never existed, and the moment they fail to prove any of the specific circumstances, their claim must fail: 13 Cal. 21 (P.C.); 12 Mad. 142 (P.C.); 17 Cal. 584 (P.C.); 14 Cal. 572 (P.C.) and *A. (b) Hindu Law—Debts—Father—Matter in execution res judicata against father—Plea of res judicata is also effective against son—Civil P. C., S. 11, Expl. 6.

Execution against father is effective enough to bind the son also and if any matter in execution is res judicata against the father, the plea of res judicata is operative against the son too, for practically the father represents the son in execution proceedings even where the suit was not framed against him as manager of the family. Judgment.—In this case we have got a decree against a Hindu father. There were a number of execution petitions in 1916, 1918, 1920 and 1921. In the execution proceedings of 1921 the property was sold. The sale certificate is dated 31st March 1921. The present defendant 1 was the purchaser. He sold the property to the present defendant 2 under Ex. 5 dated 19th September 1921. The present plaintiff brought this suit for the recovery of his share in the property on the ground that the execution proceedings against his father, the judgment-debtor, did not include his own share in the property. Prior to that he had put in a petition for setting aside the sale so far as his interests were concerned: vide Ex. 3 (a). It was dismissed. There was an application for review, Ex 4. That was dismissed. It is clear that all parties thought that the execution proceedings were against the whole of the family property and not against the father's share only. In none of the schedules attached to the proclamation was there any remark made to the effect that only the father's half share in the properties described was intended to be sold. According to a series of decisions of the Privy Council, where money decrees are obtained against a father and the properties attached, even when there is ambiguity in the description of the properties such as by the use of the words right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, still it must be taken prima facie that the intention in the execution proceedings is to proceed against the whole of the interest that may be proceeded against on account of the Hindu Law rule that a father's debts may be executed against the son. There may be some special circumstances.

In some cases to show that the execution proceedings were limited to a particular share or interest. Where no such limitation expressly appears, all that the sons can claim is to show that the debt was illegal or immoral or that the debt never existed, and the moment they fail to prove any of the specific circumstances, their claim must fail. This is the result of the decisions in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (1), Minakshi Nayudu v. Immudi Kanaka Ramaya Goundan v. (2), Mahabir Pershad v. Moheswar Nath Sahai (3), and Simbhunath Pande v. Golap Singh (4). It is perhaps putting the matter too strongly to say that the sale certificate only is conclusive on the matter. It is safer to look at the whole of the execution proceedings. Though the Judges who decided the case in Natesa Pathar v. Ganapathi Subba Pathar (5) have rested their judgment on the sale certificate only, the conclusion in the judgment is one with which we agree and they have referred to all the Privy Council cases. In the present case the learned District Judge attempts to distinguish the case in Subba Rao v. Swamia Pillai (6) on the ground that in that case the son intervened in execution before sale and the Court disallowed his objection. It is true that no such thing happened in the present case ; but the son's objection after the sale in the present case is practically similar to what happened in that case. We, therefore, think that the District Judge is wrong in thinking that only the father's share was proceeded against in the execution proceedings.

It is then stated that the execution petition of 1920 was really barred by limitation and though the proceedings which terminated in a sale are binding against the father the son is not precluded from showing that that application was barred. We do not agree with this contention. The matter is res judicata against the father. If so, as the effect of the cases is that execution against father is effective enough to bind the son also, the res judicata is operative against the son also. Practically the father represents the son in the execution proceedings even where the suit was not framed against him as manager of the family. It is unnecessary to consider the question whether the applications of 1916 and 1918 may not be considered as steps in-aid of execution, to prevent the application of 1920 being barred by limitation. We do not think that there is any decision which compels us to hold that they cannot be such steps-in-aid, though the execution proceedings in the Panrutti Court might have been irregular and, if objected to immediately, would not have been allowed to proceed. We allow the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

(Chairman), Municipal Council, Srirangam—Defendant—Appellant.

Anantha Subramania Ayyar—Plaintiff—Respondent.

Appeal No. 273 of 1929, Decided on 4th September 1929, from order of Sub-Judge, Trichinopoly, D/- 17th July 1929, in I. A. No. 824 of 1929.

(a) Madras District Municipalities Act—Rules for the preparation of electoral rolls, R. 6—Members in waiting are not included in revising authority — Waiting Board is intended to be reserve and can never become anything more than such reserve — Person nominated as member of Revising Board refusing to serve—Collector's new nomination held to be correct.

The rule consists of two distinct parts, first, referring to the revising authority, the second to the Waiting Board. The members in waiting are not included in the revising authority which body shall consist of certain three persons, none of them being a member in waiting. The second part of the rule provides that certain persons may be appointed to the Waiting Board to take the place of any member of the revising authority. The fact that he takes the latter's place does not alter his status and convert him into a regular member. A Waiting Board is intended to be a reserve and can never become anything more than such reserve. Its members are outside the Board and they are to be called out in emergencies to act temporarily as substitutes.

The Collector originally nominated three persons as members of a Revising Board; he also appointed certain members in waiting. On one of the nominated members declining to serve, the Collector nominated another person in his place. It was contended that when a nominated member refused to serve, it was a member in waiting that should have stepped into his place.

Held: that under R. 6 there could not be a proper Revising Board of two members and in appointing the third, the Collector was perfectly right. [P 260 C 2]

(b) Madras District Municipalities Act—Rules for the preparation of electoral rolls, R. 6—Biased chairman is disqualified from adjudicating upon person's claim—Objection of interest can, however, be waived by conduct.

Where the chairman of a Revising Board has a personal interest and bias in the result of a person's name being included in the electoral roll, the chairman is disqualified from adjudicating upon the claim of that person; but that person, aware of the objection of interest, cannot take the chance of a decision in his favour and afterwards raise the objection. Wakefield v. *West Riding Ry. (c). Madras District Municipalities Act—Rules for the preparation of electoral rolls, R. 6—Members of Revising Board differing—All members should endeavour to arrive at unanimous judgment.

T. Rangachariar and A. Srirangachariar—for Appellant.

T. R. Ramachandra Iyer and S. Srinivasa Iyer—for Respondent.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The learned Sub-Judge has been tempted to give way to moral indignation and to exhibit great heat. This is a draw-back that has seriously impaired his judgment.

The question we have to decide is, have the rules for the preparation of electoral rolls been contravened to such an extent, as to render the proceedings of the "revising authority" wholly null and void? We state the question in this form having regard to R. 6(b) which enacts inter alia:

"The orders passed by the revising authority shall be final and shall not be liable to be questioned by any legal proceeding."

The plaintiff has therefore sought to show that the Board which decided against his claim was not properly constituted and that in consequence there was no decision which could become final, within the meaning of that provision. In view of the wording of this rule, we shall refrain, as far as possible, from referring in our judgment, to the various irregularities that have occurred, but do not affect the constitution of the Board or its jurisdiction.

Acting under R. 2, the chairman decided to omit the name of the plaintiff from the preliminary roll on the ground that in regard to residence he did not possess the necessary qualification. R. 3 refers to claims and objections. When a person feels aggrieved by the omission of his name, he prefers what is called a claim; when, on the other hand, a person feels aggrieved by the improper inclusion of another person's name, he may prefer an objection. These are for the present the only parts of the rule with which we are concerned. We shall quote the very words, in so far as they are material, that relate to the preferring of an "objection."

"Any person whose name is on the roll and who objects to the inclusion of the name of any other person whose name is on the roll, may prefer an objection to the revising authority."

Under this rule, the plaintiff preferred a claim and that is quite normal. An objection was also preferred by one Srinivasa Iyengar, an agent or a clerk of the chairman. As the rule stands, how can one object to the inclusion of a name, when that name has not been included? However, what really happened was, that Srinivasa Iyengar filed an objection stating that the plaintiff was not possessed of necessary property qualification. Two questions were thus raised before the revising authority:

(1) Was the plaintiff disqualified by reason of the fact that he was not resi ding within certain limits (the ground taken by the chairman) and

(2) Was the plaintiff disqualified not owning certain property in his own right? (the ground taken by the chairman's clerk).

Before proceeding with the narrative, we shall relate how the revising authority came into existence.

Rule 6 says :

"The revising authority for each electoral roll in a municipality shall consist of the chairman as president and two non-officials who are not members of the Municipal Council to be nominated by the Collector of the District. The Collector shall also appoint two non-officials and two or more officials (specifying the order in which they shall be entitled to act, the non-officials taking precedence over officials) as members in waiting to take the place of any member of the revising authority (including the president) who refuses to attend, or becomes incapable of attending, a sitting or who is personally or pecuniarily interested in, or gives evidence, in respect of, any claim or objection and is thereby rendered unfit to take part in the adjudication of such claim or objection."

The Collector nominated under this rule :

(1) The Chairman of the Municipality.
(2) Mr. Rajagopala Naidu and
(3) Mr. Balasubramania Aiyar,

as members of the Revising Board. He appointed also as required by the rule certain members in waiting of whom two were non-officials and two officials. Of these four, we are concerned with one, namely, Mr. Kandaswami Udayar, a non-official.

Mr. Rajagopala Naidu, on his being informed of the Collector's proceeding, declined to serve on the Board stating that he did not wish "to be drawn into Srirangam politics" a very wise decision indeed, having regard to the facts revealed by this case. The Collector, on being informed of this, nominated Mr. Rangaswami Pillai in the place of the gentleman who declined to serve. The Board that heard the plaintiff's claim consisted, as original members of

(1) The Chairman,
(2) Mr. Balasubramania Aiyar ; and
(3) Mr. Rangaswami Pillai.

The plaintiff objects that the appointment of Mr. Rangaswami Pillai was ultra vires. He puts his case thus. The very object of there being members in waiting is, that they may be called on to act when such a contingency occurs as has now actually arisen. When Rajagopala Naidu refused, it was a member of the Waiting Board that should have stepped into his place. The Collector, had, therefore, no power to make a fresh nomination and the appointment of Rangaswami Pillai was consequently invalid. This objection has been upheld by the lower Court, but is, in my opinion, untenable. The rule consists of two distinct parts, first, referring to the revising authority, the second, to the Waiting Board. The members in waiting, on a true construction are not included in the revising authority. The rule very clearly lays down that that body shall consist of certain three persons none of them being a member in waiting.

The second part of the rule provides that certain persons may be appointed to the Waiting Board "to take the place of any member of the revising authority." The fact that he takes the latter's place does not alter his status and convert him into a regular member. A Waiting Board is intended to be a reserve and can never become anything more than such reserve. Its members are outside the Board and they are to be called out in emergencies to act temporarily as substitutes. If it is borne in mind that a Revising Board is constituted to deal not with a single voter but with voters generally, the scheme of the section becomes quite apparent. For example, when the case of a particular voter is being considered, a member may refuse to attend that sitting. The voter may happen to be his relation, friend or enemy, or, he may have some interest in the property which the voter claims to be his. In such a case, he may very properly refuse to attend a sitting. But, does that fact ipso facto terminate his membership of the Board? He may nevertheless attend its other sittings and take part in them. The members of the Waiting Board are intended to step in at such times, and when the original member returns, they step out and go back into the reserve. Under this rule, there cannot be a proper Revising Board of two members and in appointing the third, the Collector was perfectly right. The plaintiff's objection, therefore, fails.

The plaintiff next objects that the chairman was disqualified by interest from adjudicating upon his claim. He alleges that he has been vice-chairman for some years and that there has been bitter enmity between him and the chairman. The latter was intent on seeing that he was not re-elected and it was with that object that he caused his name to be omitted on the roll. Though the case has been argued very fully and elaborately, still we must not lose sight of the fact that what we are hearing is an appeal from an order granting a temporary injunction. But, on such materials as exist, we must make up our minds, whether the plaintiff has made out this charge. The lower Court in holding in favour of the plaintiff relies on several facts and circumstances, but we propose to confine ourselves to two or three facts which have, in our opinion, a decisive bearing on the question to be tried. The chairman's objection was, as we have already said, based on certain rules in regard to residence, in the soundness of that objection, however, he seemed to have had little faith. The plaintiff thereafter preferred his claim. It was too late for the chairman to change his ground of attack. It was at this juncture that his clerk comes on the scene with what is called an objection. That related to quite a different ground, one based on want of property qualification. We have already pointed out that preferring an "objection" in the circumstances was out of the common. The question of the locus standi of Srinivasa Iyengar was then raised. The Revising Board, by a majority, decided the point against him and held that he had no right to be heard.

The chairman dissented taking a different view. On the material before us, we cannot resist the conclusion that it was at his instance that his clerk preferred that objection. Mr. Rangachari in his eloquent address, while admitting that this is a suspicious circumstance, urges that it may be capable of explanation. True it may be; but the chairman has had an opportunity both in the lower and in this Court and what explanation has been forthcoming? The case has been fought with great bitterness and every point argued very fully and we cannot help concluding that the chairman has failed to remove the suspicion, because he has no satisfactory explanation to offer.

We now pass on to another circumstance which tells against the chairman with equal if not greater force. On 9th June, the ruling to which we have referred, regarding the locus standi of Srinivasa Iyengar was given. Though it was held that he could not be heard, the Board decided to go suo motu into the merits of the objection. Thereafter there were some adjourned sittings with which we are not concerned. On 14th, the chairman makes a reference to the Government on a certain point and seeks its advice. He formulates the question thus: Some persons without title to property seek inclusion in the electoral roll on the ground that the tax bills stand in their names with the consent of the real owner. The transfer of a bill is not a transfer of property in the eye of the law. Attempts are frequently made by persons in such position to get their names improperly included in the electoral roll. He concludes his letter by saying:

"It is necessary to put a stop to such malpractice. The Revising Board feels some difficulty in the matter and it is prayed that the Government may be pleased to favour us with their view early."

A perusal of this leads one to think that the reference has been made by, or at the instance of the Revising Board; but nothing of the sort; this was done as a matter of fact behind its back. Then again, was this reference made to the Government bona fide and in the ordinary course? The essence of the charge against the plaintiff was that the property belonged to his father but that the tax bills stood in his name. He answered it somewhat thus.:

"True, my father's name appears as that of the owner, but I am a member of a joint family. The bills were transferred to my name with the consent of every member of that family. This happened some years ago and since then I have been paying the taxes."

These facts are not mentioned in the reference. The chairman states a hypothetical case having no relation to existing or actual facts. And how does he word his reference?

He, in terms, suggests to the Government the answer which he wishes to get.

The reference is forwarded on 14th and the Government sends its answer promptly on 17th which is very laconic.

"The Government agree with the view expressed in the chairman's letter read above."

Having obtained this answer (which is styled a Government order), the chairman reads it out at the next sitting on 20th. We may here state that ultimately the point was found against the plaintiff by the votes of the chairman and Mr. Rangaswami Pillai, the third member, Mr. Balasubramania Aiyar, dissenting. The plaintiff states that it was the reading of the Government Order at the sitting, that clinched the question, for Rangaswami Pillai would otherwise not have supported the chairman. This may or may not be so ; with that we are not concerned. The question is what does this conduct indicate? It is unnecessary to dwell further on the point. It is clear beyond doubt that from the very start the chairman had a personal interest in the result and his conduct on the Board shows that there was not even a semblance of fairness in his dealing with the plaintiff's claim. If the matter rested there, we would hold the decision as invalidated on the ground of bias.

But the plaintiff is precluded from raising this plea, as, by his conduct, he waived the objection on .the ground of interest. On his own showing, he was aware from the very beginning that he could not hope to get justice from the chairman. It was on 1st June that the chairman's clerk came forward with his "objection." After that date, there were several sittings of the Board and the plaintiff never suggested that the Chairman was unfit to take part. On 20th June the Government Order was openly read out at the sitting of the Board. Even then, the plaintiff failed to urge that the chairman was disqualified by interest. On that day, the case was argued and on a certain point judgment was reserved. It was on the 22nd for the first time that the plaintiff hinted that the chairman was actuated by bias. The truth is, that the plaintiff expected that the decision of the majority would be in his favour and not till he realized that that expectation was unfounded that he demurred to the chairman being a member of the Board.

On the question of interest, Frome United Breweries Co. v. Bath Justices (1), contains a very valuable exposition of the law by the House of Lords. In that case, certain licensing justices referred the question of renewal of a license to the compensation authority and resolved at a further meeting that a solicitor should be instructed to appear before that body and oppose the renewal on their behalf. The solicitor duly appeared and opposed. Three of the justices who sat and voted as members of the compensation authority had been parties to the resolution authorising the solicitor to appear on their behalf. It was held that those three justices were disqualified from sitting on the compensation tribunal on the ground of bias and its decision was set aside. Mr. Rangachari contends that the act of the Revising Board in the present case was not a judicial but an administrative act. This case shows that interest or bias invalidates a decision irrespective of the fact whether the tribunal is performing a judicial act or not. Lord Atkinson thinks that the subject matter of the proceeding was judicial as distinguished from administrative and Viscount Cave seems to agree with this view. Lord Summer, on the other hand, is of the opinion, that the act is an administrative act, whereas, Lord Carson thinks that:

"Magistrates under the Licensing Acts are frequently compelled to mix up what might be called administrative with what might be called judicial action."

Administrative or judicial, the act was equally liable to be set aside if bias was proved on the part of the tribunal. On this point, all the four learned Lords were agreed. Mr. Rangachariar contends that the duties imposed by the rule on the chairman are such that certain amount of bias is inevitable. A very similar argument was put forward in that case. Viscount Cave meets it thus:

"But, assuming this to be so, it by no means follows that a justice who was actively opposing the renewal of a license can adjudicate upon the question of renewal . . . . But the statute nowhere says that justices who elect to appear as opponents of the renewal and take activs steps (such as instructing a solicitor) to make their opposition effective, may nevertheless act as Judges in the dispute; and in the absence of a clear provision to that effect, I think that the ordinary rule, that no one can be both party and Judge in the same cause, holds good."

Lord Carson, expresses himself to the same effect:

"That, however, is not to my mind a reason for saying that the Magistrates are not to abstain from any action which might indicate a likelihood of bias, and the fact that there is no lis or what might be called any case existing between parties, affords no justification for not insisting upon the very elementary rule that a man cannot act as a Judge and as an advocate in carrying out the duties cast upon him."

(1) [1926] A. C. 586.

Rex v. Howard (2), does not lay down a different rule. What the powers and duties of a licensing justice were under certain statutes, was there under consideration. It was held that having regard to those statutes, the standard to be applied in considering the question of bias must be one which admits the right of the justice to be at one and the same time objectors and Judges, in the sense in which they are Judges in such matters; the reason being they are empowered by law to fill the two capacities. This case does not decide that bias or interest on the part of the tribunal does not invalidate its decision. Now turning to the rule, with which we are concerned, it does no more than declare what would have been the law without it. We are not prepared to construe it as laying down that some special kind of interest must be shown, some interest directly connected with the subject matter of the claim or objection. Wakefield v. West Riding Railway Co. (3), is a useful case on the point. The word "justice" was there defined by a certain section and the definition included the words "who shall not be interested in the matter." Cockburn, C. J., observes, that the rule proceeded on the notion that railway officials did not know the law and, therefore, it was important to inform them what the law was. The addition of the words in question did not alter the law, for the legislature inserted them under the belief, that if they did not include what would be implied, they would be taken to exclude it.

Also on the question of waiver, this case is an authority. The judgment lays down:

"Nothing is better settled than this that a party aware of the objection of interest cannot take the chance of a decision in his favour and afterwards raise the objection."

The Chief Justice adds that this is the settled rule, although the law as an exception, may lay down by a positive enactment prohibiting an interested justice from acting in spite of assent. The present case clearly comes within the rule and not the exception.

The last objection of the plaintiff remains to be dealt with. We have already touched on what happened on 20th June. On that day, the question was argued before the Board in regard to the plaintiff's ownership of the property and the case was adjourned to 21st instant, judgment being reserved on the point. The chairman and Mr. Rangaswami Pillai prepared their judgment, holding that the plaintiff was disqualified and forwarded it to Mr. Balasubramania Iyer. He was unable to be present on the 21st and requested that the case might be postponed. The chairman then fixed the hearing to 3 p. m. on Saturday, the 22nd, Mr. Balasubramania Iyer wrote pointing out that he had to attend the Bench Court on each Saturday at that hour and that Monday would suit him. He added:

"I want to go through the notes of evidence in Mr. Ananthasubramania Iyer's case and also examine him on some more points before I come to a decision."

He suggested finally, that, if absolutely necessary, the Board might transact other businesses on that Saturday. What happened subsequently goes to the very root of the constitution of the Board. On 22nd, the Chairman and Mr. Rangaswami Pillai met and they were joined by Mr. Kandaswami Udayar, who, as we have said, was a member in waiting. To the Board so constituted the plaintiff objected. Then Mr. Kandaswami Udayar declined to act recording:

"I am of opinion, after perusing Mr. Balasubramania Iyer's letter, that this case should be heard by him," the only course open to an honest and sensible man; for, how could Mr. Kandaswami Udayar take part in pronouncing judgment on a matter not heard by him? But the other two chose, notwithstanding the absence of the third member, to deliver their judgment. In that judgment, which dealt only with what was known as property qualification, the plaintiff's right was negatived. Thereupon, Mr. Kandaswami Udayar again added a note saying:

"As I have not heard this case, I am unable to express any opinion."

This case was then adjourned to 24th. On that day, all the original three members of the Board met. The plaintiff then objected that the chairman having interest, the Board was not properly constituted. The following ruling was then given by the chairman and Mr. Rangaswami Pillai:

"Further, when the hearing of the case is over and the majority judgment has been delivered, we cannot adjourn it now."

The fact is that after the 20th there was no kind of combined or joint action on the part of the members of the Board. The minds of the first two members had been made up, they had delivered their judgment and so far as they were concerned that judgment was final. What the opinion of their colleagues was mattered little to them. The latter, acting for himself, conducted some further enquiry, examined the plaintiff and wrote out a judgment in favour of the plaintiff. Are these irregularities mere defects of procedure, or do they affect the very constitution of the Board? The observations of Peacock, C. J., in Khelut Chander Ghose v. Tarachand Koondoo (4) quoted by the Court (consisting of three Judges) in Rohilkhand Kumaon Bank Ltd. v. Row (5) are in point. A final decision ought not to be pronounced in a case in which the Judges differ until by conference and discussion of the points in difference they have endeavoured to arrive at a unanimous judgment. To the same effect are the observations of a Full Bench of nine Judges in another case which are also quoted in Rohilkhand Kumaon Bank Ltd v. Row (5). Applying this test, there was no proper judgment or decision in this case. The judgment pronounced was not that of the Board There was no conference and discussion of the points in difference. The other two did not wait to know what the third member's view was. They put it out of their power, to reconsider or alter their decision or to be influenced by the other member's view. This objection of the plaintiff must be upheld. The fact that the plaintiff's claim was formally rejected by a separate order on the 24th is not relevant to the point under consideration. That order is signed by the chairman and Mr. Rangaswami Pillai. Under that appears a note that Mr. Balasubramania Iyer delivered a separate judgment. It is immaterial whether the formal order rejecting the claim was made before or after the delivery of the judgment by the third member. As we have said, it is impossible to regard the decision as that of a properly constituted Board. This objection of the plaintiff therefore prevails.

We may observe before closing that the question of residence, the majority did not think it worth their while to go into at all, although the enquiry arose out of, and owed its origin to this very objection. This, to our mind, is very significant.

In the result, we concur in the conclusion of the learned Sub-Judge, though with many of his reasons we do not agree. The order granting the injunction is confirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 2343 of 1927, Decided on 19th September 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 22 of 1926.

 Civil P. C., S. 11, Expl. 4—Suit to redeem invalid mortgage dismissed — Suit brought to redeem different mortgage on same property is not barred though principal amount of mortgage is same.

Where the first suit is to redeem one mortgage, it does not bar a suit to redeem a mortgage of a different date though the property sought to be redeemed and the principal amount of the mortgage are identical. For instance if a mortgagor, who sought to redeem a specific mortgage fails in the suit, because the mortgage is not proved, he is not thereby precluded from seeking to redeem the same property from another specific mortgage. The dismissal, therefore, of a former suit brought to redeem an invalid mortgage, is really no bar to a subsequent suit in which a different mortgage, which subsequently sprang into existence by the operation of the statute of limitation, is sought to be redeemed. (c) Civil P. C., O. 2, R. 2—All causes of actions relating to subject matter need not be joined.

A. Nagasami Iyer—for Respondents.

Sundaram Chetty, J.—This second appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by the plaintiff (respondent 1) for redemption of the plaint-mentioned othi on payment of a sum of Rs. 300 to defendant 1 and for recovery of possession of the plots marked A and B on redeeming the said mortgage. The facts of this case are set forth clearly in the judgment of the lower appellate Court. The usufructuary mortgage sought to be redeemed in this case has arisen in the following circumstances: In 1885 the plaintiff's deceased grandfather Lakshmana Ayyar received a sum of Rs. 300 from defendant 1 for the purpose of constructing a house on the site maked A and permitted him to occupy the said building and also the terraced room B in lieu of interest due on the sum of Rs. 300. There was thus an oral othi in favour of defendant 1 in November 1885. Defendant 1 and his wife have been in possession of the suit properties since 1885. On the strength of a subsequent hypothecation deed of 1894 executed by the plaintiff's grandfather in favour of defendant 5 (Ex.H) she filed O. S. No. 583 of 1899 and after some contest obtained a decree in her favour. It is admitted that that decree debt has been discharged. In his deposition given in that suit in 1900, the present defendant 1 admitted that he was in occupation of plots A and B on othi right for Rs. 300 (Ex. N). Having been in enjoyment of the property as a mortgagee in lieu of interest due on Rs. 300 for a period of over 12 years, defendant 1 has acquired a possessory mortgage right by prescription after the lapse of 12 years. On the basis of the creation of a prescriptive othi right in defendant 1 by adverse possession, the present suit is filed by the plaintiff for redeeming that mortgage and recovering possession of the suit properties. In O. S. No. 63 of 1915 on the file of the District Munsif's Court, Madura, the present plaintiff sued to edeem the oral othi of 1885 and recover possession of the properties: vide Ex. D. That suit was transferred to the file of the Additional District Munsif of Madura and was numbered as O. S. No. 177 of 1915. Though the first Court granted a decree for redemption holding the oral othi to be true, the first appellate Court reversed that decree and dismissed the suit on the ground that the oral mortgage for Rs. 300 was invalid and therefore incapable of proof (Ex. F.). A second appeal was preferred to the High Court and it was argued that, though the oral othi sued on would not entitle the plaintiff to a redemption decree, as it was invalid, a decree could at least be given for redemption on the footing of an othi right acquired by defendant 1 by prescription. The High Court, however, disallowed that contention, pointing out that the othi right created by prescription in favour of defendant 1 was not referred to in the plaint and was not the mortgage which the plaintiff actually sued to redeem. The second appeal was accordingly dismissed; but the High Court said that if any other othi relationship between the plaintiff and defendants had been created by prescription, he could sue again for redemption alleging it: vide Ex. G. The present suit has thus been brought for redeeming the aforesaid prescriptive othi, which defendant 1 has acquired under the statute of limitation.

The main contention put forward on the defendants' side is, that the present suit is barred as res judicata by reason of the decision in the former suit, namely, O. S. No. 63 of 1915. Reliance is placed on S. 11, Expln. 4, Civil P. C., and also O. 2, R. 2 in support of the plea that the present suit is barred. Both the lower Courts have held that there is no such bar to the present suit and gave a decree in plaintiff's favour for possession of the suit properties. The same contention is now pressed in this Court by the learned advocate for the appellant.

There is no doubt that the former suit was based solely on the oral othi of 1885 and it was dismissed on the ground that the oral mortgage was invalid and incapable of proof. Defendant 1, however, continued to be in possession under an invalid or void mortgage and the quality and extent of the right claimed by him by such possession depended upon the claim accompanying it and upon the nature of animus possidendi. Having been in enjoyment of the properties adverse to full ownership, in the capacity of an othidar for over the statutory period, he should be held to have acquired a limited interest in the properties, to the extent which he prescribed for, namely, a possessory mortgagee's right for Rs. 300. This principle has been clearly laid down in Gopala Dasu v. Rami (1). To the extent of the limited right in immovable property acquired by another by prescription, there is an extinguishment in the title of the full owner and it may not be quite correct to say that there was any statutory transfer of that limited interest in favour of the person who prescribed for it. A mortgage is ordinarily created by a contract and as such it is an act of parties. But such a mortgage right, as for instance, the interest of a mortgagee in possession, may also be acquired by prescription, and when so acquired, after the completion of the enjoyment for the statutory period, he would just be in the position of a usufructuary mortgagee entitled to hold the properties until that mortgage is redeemed by the owner. In this view, we are of opinion that the prescriptive othi sought to be redeemed in the present suit is different from the oral othi of 1885 which was sued on in the former suit and held to be invalid and incapable of proof. The question therefore is whether the dismissal of the former suit brought to redeem an invalid mortgage of 1885 is really a bar to the present suit in which a different mortgage, which subsequently sprang into existence by the operation of the statute of limitation, is sought to be redeemed.

The facts of the present case seem to be on all fours with the facts of the case in Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vythinatha Ayyar (2). In that case, the first suit was brought for the redemption of a mortgage of 1856. The defendants denied the truth of that mortgage setting up another mortgage of 1853 for a portion of the suit properties. That suit was dismissed on the ground that the mortgage sued on was not proved and was in fact fictitious. In the second appeal preferred to the High Court, it was urged that a decree might be given for redemption at least on the footing of the mortgage of 1853 set up by the defendants ; but the High Court declined to grant such relief, one of the reasons for the refusal being, that the plaintiff not having sued in the alternative on that mortgage, no issue could be raised in respect of it in that suit. Thereupon, a second suit was brought for redeeming the mortgage of 1853, which was set up by the defendents in the previous suit. The plea of res judicata and the bar under S. 43 of the old Civil P. C.. were raised. There is an exhaustive discussion of the case law in that decision and the real test according to the opinion of the learned Judges is, whether the cause of action or transaction, on which the two suits are based is the same, and not whether the transaction is sought to be established in different modes or by different means. It is distinctly pointed out that a plaintiff is bound to bring before the Court all the grounds of attack available to him with reference to the title which is made the ground of action, but he is not bound to exhaust in one suit all the different causes of action which he may have at the date of that suit in respect of the property. If the plaintiff who sought to redeem a specific mortgage failed in that suit, because the mortgage was not proved, he was not thereby precluded from seeking to redeem the same property from another specific mortgage. That this is settled law, so far as this Presidency is concerned, is clear from the Full Bench decision in Thirikaikat Madathil Raman v. T. Krishnan Nair (3), which followed the rulings in Ramaswami Iyer v. Vythinatha Ayyar (2), Veeranna Pillai v. Muthukumara Asari (4) and overruled the decision in Rangasami Pillai v. Krishna Pillai (5).

In the face of these clear authorities in favour of the maintainability of the present suit, we fail to appreciate the strenuous contention of the learned advocate for the appellants, which, if we understand him aright, wipes off the distinction between the same right claimed as constituting the cause of action but sought to be enforced on different grounds of title or different modes of establishing it in more than one suit, and the case where the right claimed in one suit is different from that claimed in another suit, or in other words, where the causes of action are different and the plaintiff in both the suits does not litigate under the same title within the meaning of S. 11, Civil P. C. Unless it is shown that in both the suits the plaintiff is litigating under the same title (which is one of the conditions for the bar of res judicata as laid down in S. 11) it would be of no avail to the appellants to merely show that this is a matter which might and ought to have been the ground of attack in the former suit. O. 2. R. 2, Civil P. C., does not oblige a plaintiff to combine in one suit all the causes of action which he may have in respect of the subject matter of the suit, and Ex. 4 to S. 11, Civil P.C. cannot be given effect to to bar a suit, unless all the requisite conditions laid down in the body of the section are also fulfilled. In Muhammad Rowther v. Abdul Rahaman Rowther (6) at pp. 144 and 145 (of 46 Mad.) four propositions have been laid down by Ramesam, J., as deducible from an analysis of the decisions cited in that case. The second proposition is formulated thus :

"Where the first suit was to redeem one mortgage it does not bar a suit to redeem a mortgage of a different date, though the property sought to be redeemed and the principal amount of the mortgage are identical."

The decisions in Ramasami Ayyar v. Vythinatha Ayyar (2), Veeranna Pillai v. Muthukumara Asari (4) and Thrikakiat Madathil Raman v. T. Krishnan Nair (3), are cited as authorities for this proposition. The present case is in our opinion clearly governed by the aforesaid rulings.

The cases cited by the learned advocate for the appellants, namely, Woomatara Debia v. Unnapoorna Dassee (7), Kameshwar Pershad v. Rajkumari Ruttan Koer (8), Moosa Goolam Ariff v. Ebrahim Goolam Ariff (9), Ramiah v. Lakshmi Narayanan (10) and Mahomed Ibrahim Hoosain Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh (11), have really no application to the present case. The scope of the decisions in Woomatara Debia v. Unnapoorna Dassee (7) and Kameswar Pershad v. Rajkumari Ruttan Koer (8) has been clearly explained in Ramasamy Ayyar v. Vythinatha Ayyar (2). In Rangaswamy Patrudu v. Appaswamy (12), it has been held that where the plaintiff did not set up the title which he could have brought forward as an alternative basis of his claim on the last occasion, he could not be allowed to litigate it in a second suit. This principle cannot be extended to the present case, inasmuch as the right claimed in this suit is the right to free the property from a specific mortgage on redeeming it, whereas in the former suit it was a different right in respect of a different mortgage which was sought to be redeemed. We are therefore of opinion, that the present suit is barred neither under S. 11, nor under O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C.

The plaintiff having established his right to redeem the plaint-mentioned mortgage, the lower Courts have, however, freed, him from the liability to pay Rs. 300 to defendant 1 for the redemption of the mortgage, on the ground that defendant 1 disclaimed the mortgage right and disowned any interest in the suit properties, with a view to bolster up the contention of his wife (defendant 5) that she acquired an absolute title to the suit properties by adverse possession. Inasmuch as the plaintiff's suit is for redemption of the mortgage which is found to be true and there is the admitted liability of the plaintiff to pay Rs. 300 to defendant 1, we do not think that the plaintiff should be freed from that obligation on account of the false denial of defendant 1. We think that the decree for possession given in favour of the plaintiff should be made subject to the payment of Rs. 300 by him to defendant 1 by way of redeeming the plaint mentioned mortgage.

In the result, the decree of the lower appellate Court is confirmed with this modification, namely, that if the plaintiff should pay Rs. 300 to defendant 1 or into Court to the credit of defendant 1 for redemption of the plaint mortgage within four months from this date, the plaintiff should be put in possession of the suit properties and if such payment Civil Revn. Petns. Nos. 248, 1024 and 602 of 1928, Decided on 28th Oct. 1929.

(a) Practice — Order intended to take effect in entirety—Order consisting of several parts—Party cannot adopt one part and repudiate another — But if party receives benefit under order under protest, he is not precluded from attacking it—Evidence Act S. 115.

When an order shows plainly that it is intended to take effect in its entirety and that several parts of it depend upon each other, a person cannot adopt one part and repudiate another. For instance, if the Court directs that the suit shall be restored on the plaintiff paying the costs of the opposing party, there is no intention to benefit the latter, except on the terms mentioned in the order itself. If the party receives the costs, his act is tantamount to adopting the order. But if a party receives the benefit reserving his right to object to the order, he will not in that case be precluded from attacking it: A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 1009, not Foll. (Case Law discussed). [P 270 C 1]

(b) Practice — Rule of approbate and reprobate does not apply to order or judgment containing independent directions.

The rule that when an order shows plainly that it is intended to take effect in its entirety and that several parts of it depend upon each other, a person cannot adopt one part and repudiate another, does not apply to a case where the various directions in an order or judgment are intended to be distinct and independent of each other. Thus, if a suit is dismissed, but the plaintiff is awarded costs, he is not precluded from impeaching the judgment by receiving the costs: A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 380, Rel. on. [P 270 C 2]

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—These three Civil Revision Petitions have been posted and argued together, as they raise a common point of law. When an order consists of two parts embodying directions, one against, and the other in favour of a party, can the latter, after taking advantage of that part which confers a benefit on him, object to the other part on the ground that he is not bound by it? This is the point of law which is common to the three cases, although in the application of the principle, each of these cases raises certain different questions. The order under consideration in Civil Revision Petition 248 of 1928 being typical, I shall set that out. A suit was dismissed for default and the plaintiff applied for its restoration. The Judge held that there were no sufficient grounds, but restored the suit as a matter of grace (as the Judge calls it) on the plaintiff paying the defendant's costs. The defendant, after receiving the costs, files the Civil Revision Petition objecting to the order. The question is, is he entitled to be heard? The point is, in my opinion, concluded by authority: but as it is said that our decision will govern several cases in this Court now pending, I shall deal with the question in some detail.

Pearce v. Chaplain (1), is a valuable case on the point. A summons was obtained calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why the judgment signed and execution sued out should not be set aside for irregularity without costs. The Lord Chief Baron directed that the judgment and execution should be set aside. Then followed an argument, whether, as a part of the order, the defendant should be restrained from bringing an action. The plaintiff requested the Court to direct that no action should be brought. The defendant urged, on the contrary that he suffered damage on account of the improper execution levied and that he should not be barred from bringing an action. On this, the Lord Chief Baron made the following order without embodying any decision as to the irregularity alleged:

"I do order that the judgment signed herein, and the execution issued thereon, be set aside without costs."

The defendant, acting upon the order, obtained back the goods taken in execution. The question arose, is he nevertheless entitled to complain against the order? It may be useful to glance at the contentions raised by the counsel in that case, as they may be said to represent the arguments now urged before us. For the plaintiff it was urged :

"the defendant having obtained and acted upon this order, has made himself a party to it, and cannot now move to rescind it."

It was asserted on the other side :

"The defendant unavoidably acted on the order to the extent to which he accepted it, but did not thereby waive his expressed dissent from the residue."

Lord Denman, C. J., the three other members of the Bench concurring, delivered the following judgment :

"I think we must assume on the statements that there was an irregularity. But the Judge set aside the proceedings without costs and without deciding whether an irregularity had been committed or not. Then we find an order made that no action shall be brought, the defendant's attorney protesting against that restriction. But, notwithstanding his protest, he takes, and avails himself of, the order. We are then bound on principle to hold that he took it in its whole extent. There is no case which shows that when a party has acted upon such an order, and had the full benefit of it, he shall not be bound by all its terms."

This case I have set forth in some detail, as it serves to illustrate the principle upon which the rule is based. The English Courts have repeatedly given effect to this principle. The other cases on the point do not add to the reasoning contained in this judgment; but they show in what a variety of cases this rule was acted upon.

In Tinkler v. Hilder (2) the plaintiff having obtained judgment, the Judge made an order to stay the proceedings on payment of the costs of the day. These costs were subsequently taxed and paid. It was contended that the plaintiff could not object to the order, after having adopted it and acted under it, by receiving the costs. This contention was accepted by the Court. It is argued that the order in this case was made by consent; but the report shows clearly that this argument is not correct, although it receives some apparent support from the judgment of Platt, J. Kennard v. Harris (3) is still another instance where the same principle was recognized. Wilcox v. Odden (4) is also an authority for the same position. The facts closely resemble those in Pearce v. Chaplain (1). The defendant, in pursuance of the order, having received the goods from the Sheriff and thus far availed himself of the order, it was held that he could not apply to the Court to rescind that part of it which forbade the bringing of an action. Sparrow v. Reed (5) decides the same point. The case was first tried by the Judge and he ordered a second trial before a jury on the applicant paying the costs of the application to the party opposing it. Held, that whether the Judge had power to make such order or not, the opposing party had by accepting such costs precluded himself from afterwards objecting to the order. In the short judgment of Coleridge, J., the point is treated as settled beyond doubt.

In India also this rule has been almost uniformly acted upon. In Hazari Lal v. Ganga Charan (6) the suit was restored on payment of costs. The defendant having accepted the costs, was held precluded from objecting to the order in appeal. In this case, the learned Judges very aptly refer to the costs granted, as compensation awarded to the opposing party. Rup Chand Prithi Chand v. Hardayal Mal (7), is a similar case. There an ex parte decree was set aside on payment of costs. The revision petition was rejected on the ground that the plaintiff had accepted the costs. Bankuchandra v. Marium Begum (8) is a decision to the same effect of the Calcutta High Court by a Bench of three Judges. A suit dismissed for non-prosecution was restored on payment of the defendant's costs incidental to the application. The latter got his costs taxed and obtained an allocator. Held, that having taken this advantage under the order, he was precluded from appealing against it. In Ramaswami v. Chidambaram (9) Jackson, J., followed the same rule. The case related to an order allowing amendment of the written statement on payment of costs. With this ruling I concur in so far as it is in conformity with English cases on the point. In one respect, it is, in my opinion, wrong and to that I shall advert presently.

What is the principle underlying these decisions? When an order shows plainly that it is intended to take effect in its entirety and that several parts of it depend upon each other, a person cannot adopt one part and repudiate another. For instance, if the Court directs that the suit shall be restored on the plaintiff paying the costs of the opposing party, there is no intention to benefit the latter, except on the terms mentioned in the order itself. If the party receives the costs, his act is tantamount to adopting the order. In other words, payment of costs is, as it were, consideration for the suit being restored; so that, the defendant cannot accept the cost and still object to the order. According to Halsbury, this rule is an application of the doctrine "that a person may not approbate and reprobate" (13 Halsbury. Para. 508.) In Broom's Legal Maxims, it is treated as an illustration of the maxim :

"that no man shall be permitted to blow hot and cold with reference to the same transaction. (Edn. 9, p. 118)."

In other words, to allow a party, who takes a benefit under such an order, to complain against it, would be to permit a breach of faith. From this statement, it is clear that if a party receives the benefit reserving his right to object to the order, he will not in that case be precluded from attacking it. It is in regard to this that I dissent with respect from the observation of Jackson, J., in Ramaswami v. Chidambaram (9) already referred to. That learned Judge thinks that it makes no difference that the party accepts the benefit under protest. In this connexion, of course, the significance of the expression "under protest" must be clearly borne in mind. As pointed out by Langdale, M. R. these words :

"have no distinct meaning by themselves and amount to nothing unless explained by the proceedings and circumstances. Re. Massey (10), cited in Stroud's Jud., Dic. Edn. 2, Vol. 3, p. 2118."

If, for example, the costs are paid into Court and the opposing party draws them out stating that he does so under protest, these words would then be meaningless. To such a case, the observation of Jackson, J, would properly apply. This would be analogous to what happened in Croft v. Lumley (11). The party receiving the rent there said that he did so under protest ; but, in the circumstances, the addition of the words was idle and meant nothing in fact. As Baron Channel said what the man did not what he said, was the all important matter.

To take another example, if the party liable under the order personally hands over the amount to his opponent, who, while insisting on keeping it, asserts that he receives it under protest, in such a case again, his so called protest cannot in the least avail him.

In each case it is a question of fact, whether the costs were paid by the one party, and received by the other, in such circumstances, as show that the latter's right to object is not waived. This I conceive to be the effect of the reservation referred to in the judgment in Banku Chandra v. Marium Begum (8) already cited.

It is next needless to add that the rule in question does not apply to a case where the various directions in an order or judgment are intended to be distinct and independent of each other. Thus, if a suit is dismissed, but the plaintiff is awarded costs, he is not precluded from impeaching the judgment by receiving the costs. Nor, if the suit is for the recovery of, say, Rs. 200 and a decree is passed for Rs. 50, is the plaintiff disentitled to object, by reason of his having received the amount for which judgment was given. Jogendra v. Kodabaksah (12), is a case of this description. The learned Judges, while affirming the principle laid down in decisions such as Pearce v. Chaplain (1) point out that the facts of the case before them do not bring it within those rulings.

Analogous to these are cases where conditional orders are coupled with orders that are executable. An order may run thus:

"I direct the suit shall be restored on defendant paying all costs of suit incurred up to date, fixed at Rs. 150; if this amount is not paid within a week, the petition shall stand dismissed with costs, Rs. 20."

In such a case, the fact that the defendant receives the last menticned sum, does not preclude him from impeaching the order.

(12) A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 380.

I think I have stated the principle with sufficient clearness and shall now proceed to consider separately each of the three revision petitions.

C. R. P. 248 of 1928.—The order in this case is that the suit shall be restored on the plaintiff paying the defendant's costs inclusive of vakil's fee Rs. 20. The costs were paid by the plaintiff and received by the defendant. It is now alleged, however, that while receiving the sum, the defendant reserved his right to object to the order. This seems very doubtful, but it is unnecessary to decide the point. Granting that the petitioner (defendant) has not precluded himself from filing this petition, I am clearly of the opinion that on the merits order of the lower Court must be supported. The learned Judge says that sufficient reasons are wanting, but he is prepared to restore the suit. The order is bad on the face of it, but we find on examining the record that there were sufficient reasons. It is discretionary with the High Court to interfere in revision and it will not use its powers for the purpose of defeating justice. On the assumption made by the learned Judge, his order is wrong, but we find his assumption itself is incorrect. The result is, his order must be supported and the Civil Revision Petition fails and is dismissed but, in the circumstances of the case, without costs.

C. R. P. No. 1024 of 1928.—A petition was filed in the lower Court under S. 47 for releasing certain property from attachment and it was dismissed. The following order was made :

"I shall set aside the order and restore the petition if the petitioners pay the respondent's costs before 2nd August 1928."

The amount was paid into Court and the opposing party drew it out. Applying the principle I have stated, the Civil Revision Petition is incompetent and is dismissed with costs.

C. R. P. No. 602 of 1928.—In this case, an order was made in appeal allowing the plaint to be amended on the plaintiff paying certain costs within a specified date. We find that payment of costs was made under R. 161, Civil Rules of Practice and that the defendant received the amount under protest. In effect, what happened was this. The plaintiff tenders the amount, the defendant offers to receive it without prejudice to his right to impeach the order. The plaintiff nevertheless pays the money and the defendant receives it. The latter has thus not precluded himself from filing this petition.

Now, coming to the merits the petitioner (defendant) does not seriously complain against the order allowing the amendment. If there was any ambiguity in the plaint, that was removed by the amendment made. But the mistake made by the Subordinate Judge really consists in this. In the suit, there was a distinct issue raised regarding the mortgage (issue 1). That issue was tried by the District Munsiff who recorded his finding upon it. The Subordinate Judge ignoring this has remitted the case to the first Court for a finding on that issue. He seems to think that the question has not been tried by the Munsiff, because the latter has not considered the second issue. This is clearly wrong as issue 2, as is now admitted, is merely, a repetition of the first in different words. In the circumstances the lower appellate Court is wrong in directing the Munsiff to retry an issue already tried. Though the Civil Revision Petition is in terms directed against the order granting amendment the petitioner's real grievance is, as I have stated that the Subordinate Judge's subsequent procedure was wrong. We agree with this contention and direct the Subordinate Judge to dispose of the appeal in the light of our observations. We are not to be understood as laying down in advance, that if while hearing the appeal it appears to him necessary to call for findings on any matters he is precluded from doing so. In the circumstances, we make no order as to costs.

Ramesam, J.—I have had the advantage of perusing the judgment of my learned brother with which I entirely agree. I wish to add a few words avoiding the repetition of what is stated by him as far as possible. The true basis of the rule is not estoppel by conduct but that a person cannot both approbate and reprobate. If the facts indicate that the person has adopted the order, he cannot object to it afterwards. The facts may show that receipt of the money is not inconsistent with reservation of the right to question the order by way of appeal or otherwise. The protest, to have the effect of such reservation must give the opposite party an opportunity to withdraw the offer. If at of the time of paying the costs, the party to whom the amount is offered, states that he wishes to appeal and if, therefore, the offeror need not pay him the amount but may deposit it in Court and if still he offers the amount the receipt of it does not amount to approbation of the order. It is in this matter that I respectfully dissent from the opinion of Jackson, J. In Croft v. Lumley (11) the amount was offered as rent. A payer has the right to appropriate a a payment for a particular purpose. The payee has then no right to appropriate it to a different purpose. It is under such circumstances that it was observed that that what the man did and not what he said was the all important matter. In cases of the kind we are dealing with, there is no question of appropriating the amount for a different purpose and the observation in 6 H. L. C. 672, cannot apply.

In Saratkumari Dasi v. Amullyadhan (13) the deposit was made under a compromise decree. The appellant's knowledge and consent were afterwards denied. The appellants having obtained leave to appeal to the Privy Council, it is impossible to attribute to her an intention to adopt the compromise decree by offering the deposit as a security, for the offer as security shows her desire to prosecute the appeal and not to adopt the compromise decree. This case cannot help the petitioner.

In Nalinakha Sinha v. Ram Taran Pal (14), the costs are allowed unconditionally and the payment was not made on condition precedent to the operation of the rest of the order. Nor was there any option to pay the costs. That case illustrates the branch of the rule on the other side of the line. I agree to the orders proposed by my learned brother.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI AND WALSH, JJ.

Malabar Timber Co. Ltd.—Plaintiffs—Appellants.

v.

(Ponnambilath Chathankandi) Prapravan Moidoo and others—Defendants—Respondents.

Appeal No. 306 of 1924, Decided on 24th July 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, Tellicherry, in Original Suit No. 33 of 1920.

(a) Transfer of Property Act, S. 111 (g)—Lessee failing to perform covenant—Lessor demising lease property afresh—Fresh lease clearly shows intention of lessor to terminate first lease.

One of the terms of a lease provided that "if the debts are not paid within one year all the stipulations shall become void and the lessee will have to lose the advance of Rs.8,000 which he had paid." The lessee did not perform the covenant. The lessors demised the lease property again on the footing that the first demise had been determined.

Held : that by giving a fresh lease the lessors clearly showed their intention to terminate the first lease : Quesnel Forks Gold Mining Co. Ltd. v. Ward, (1920) A. C. 222 and Davenport v. The Queen 3 A. C. 115, Ref.

(b) Transfer of roperty Act, S. 111 (g)—No formal notice is necessary where lessor unequivocally takes advantage of forfeiture.

Where the lessors have done an act which unequivocally shows that they took advantage of the forfeiture (leasing the property to somebody else) and that fact comes to the notice of the lessee, there is no reason to hold that because formal notice was not given, his rights under the first document continues and the lessee can go on assigning his lease to somebody else and claim a right which had been put an end to by the lessor. [P 275 C 2]

(c) Transfer of Property Act, S. 107—Lease once forfeited cannot be revived by mere oral agreement—It must be created by registered deed.

A forfeiture having been incurred and a fresh lease having been given, the old lease cannot be revived by simply saying that they agree to be bound by the terms of the old lease. It is difficult to see how a transaction which the law requires to be in writing registered could be created by a declaration of the parties that an extinct lease subsists: 24 M.L.J. 263, Rel. on.; Jones v. Carter, (1846) 15 M. & W. 718; Dendy v. Nicholl (1858) 27 *L. K. S. Krishnaswamy Iyengar — for Appellants.

T.R. Ramachandra Iyer, C. S. Swaminathan, C. V. Hari Hara Iyer, K. P. Ramakrishna Iyer and O. T. G. Namrtyar—for Respondents.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit filed by the Malabar Timber Co. Ltd., now in liquidation, against the defendants for a declaration that the two hills described in the plaint schedule are the jenmom properties of defendants 2 and 3 and of a Devaswom called the Mundayam Paramba alias Tharakkumeethal Bhagavathi Devaswom and that the plaintiffs are entitled to possession and enjoyment of the properties for the unexpired portion of the term of 72 years created by the lease dated 15th April 1915 executed by defendants 2 and 3 in favour of one Sri Manavedan Raja of which lease the plaintiffs claimed to be the assignees, and for an injunction restraining defendant 1, his servants, agents and assigns from interfering with the peaceful possession and enjoyment of the properties by the plaintiffs and for incidental reliefs.

The case for the plaintiffs is that the hills described in the plaint belong to defendants 2 and 3 and to the Devaswom of which defendant 2's tarwad is the manager, that by a registered lease dated 15th April 1915 executed by all the members of the tarwad and by the karnavan as representing the Devaswom the two hills were demised for 72 years on terms and conditions mentioned in the document, that the lessee Manavedan Raja was put in possession, entered upon possession and remained in possession till the 5th September 1919, when the Joint Magistrate of Tellicherry prohibited him from entering on the property and that the leasehold interest of Manavedan Raja was assigned by him on 13th September 1919 to one Govardhana Bhai Girdhar Bhai who in his turn assigned it to the plaintiff. It is alleged that defendant 1 who had a lease of two hills situated in the neighbourhood of the suit property attempted in 1919 to trespass upon item 1 of the plaint schedule taking advantage of the misunderstandings between Manavedan Raja on the one hand and defendant 2 on the other, that a breach of the peace was apprehended and the Joint Magistrate of Tellicherry instituted proceedings under Ss. 144 and 145, Criminal P.C. and by order dated 5th September 1919 prohibited the plaintiffs and defendant 1 from entering upon the two hills, that the Magistrate passed final orders on 20th September 1919 declaring that defendant 1 was in possession of the major portion of the two hills but that order was set aside by the High Court and the case was remanded, and that by reason of these proceedings the plaintiffs have been deprived of the actual possession and enjoyment of the hills to which the company as assignees of the lease are entitled and that the plaintiffs therefore claim the declaration and the reliefs prayed for.

The contesting defendant is defendant 1. He denies the claim of defendants 2 and 3 or the Devaswom to the two hills and their right to demise these hills. He denies also that defendants 2 and 3 are the sole uralans of the Devaswom and contends that their lease of the Devaswom property is invalid. As regards the plaintiffs' lease he says that the lease was determined by forfeiture and that there was no subsisting lease on the date of the transfer by Manavedan Raja to Govardhan Bhai Giridhar Bhai or by Govardhan Bhai Giridhar Bhai to the plaintiffs. He denies that Manavedan Raja was put in possession of these hills or exercised any acts of ownership. Then he says that the plaintiffs are not in possession, that the claim for injunction could not be granted and that the suit for declaration is barred under S. 42, Specific Relief Act, and also that the suit is barred by limitation.

Defendants 2 and 3 admit the plaintiffs' claim. As regards forfeiture which defendant 1 says, occurred, they say:

"2. These defendants also admit that the members of Kanakathitom tarwad leased these hills to Sri Manavedan alias Valia Kunhunni Thampuran on 15th April 1915 and put him in possession.

3. As the said lessee did not pay the consideration as stipulated in the lease deed in time, these defendants and the other members of the tarwad treating the leasehold right as forfeited demised the property on kanom to Kalliyat Nambiar, who paid the consideration as stipulated in the Kanom deed. But Sri Manavedan Raja disputed the title and the right of possession of Kalliyat Nambiar.

4. As subsequently agreed between the parties, Kalliyat Nambiar, surrendered his kanom right to these defendants and these defendants admitted the leasehold right in favour of the Thampuran as valid and subsisting."

Then they say that defendant 1 and his tarwad have no right, title or possession to these hills, that his interference with the possession of their lessee is unauthorized and unlawful and that the plaintiffs are entitled to the declaration and injunction prayed for.

On these pleadings issues of fact and law were raised. The question of title to the hills formed the subject of issues 1 and 2. Issues 3 and 4 related to the contention that defendants 2 and 3 were not the sole trustees of the Devaswom and that even if they were the sole trustees the lease for 72 years was invalid and not binding on the Devaswom. Issue 5 was whether the lease in favour of Sri Manavedan Raja was true, valid, enforceable and subsisting. Issue 6 was whether he had possession. Issue 7 relates to the question whether if Sri Manavedan Raja and his transferees had no possession, the suit for a declaration alone was maintainable without a prayer for possession. Issue 8 is :

"whether the lease to Sri Manavedan Raja was determined by the lessors after 15th April 1916 and became forfeited and, if so, are the plaintiffs entitled to any relief in this suit on the strength of that lease ?"

Then follow issues about limitation and the validity of the assignment to the plaintiff and other issues which I need not consider at present.

The Subordinate Judge found on issues of fact as regards title to the property that the property was not proved to belong to defendants 2 and 3. As regards possession he found that none of the properties now claimed were put in possession of Manavedan Raja. As regards the trustees of the Devaswom he found that defendants 2 and 3 were not the sole trustees but there were other trustees also. As regards the lease his finding was that the lease was put an end to prior to the assignment to the plaintiffs and that on the date of the assignment by Govardhan Bhai Giridhar Bhai to the plaintiff there was no subsisting lease capable of assignment. He has found the other issues against the plaintiffs both of law and of fact. Against the decree of the Subordinate Judge the present appeal has been filed by the plaintiffs.

I think that, before any question of title could be gone into or determined in this appeal, the plaintiffs will have to show that the assignees have a valid or subsisting lease for, unless they can prove that fact, it does not matter in whom the title vests. On this part of the case I have come to the conclusion that the decision of the Subordinate Judge is right. (Their Lordships then discussed the evidence in detail and proceeded). On these facts the question is whether there was a subsisting lease. The Subordinate Judge looks at it from the point of view that Cl. (b), S. 111, applies and that ipso facto the lease became void at the expiry of one year. S. 111 T. P. Act, provides for the determination of a lease and the relevant clauses are Cls. (b) and (g). S. 111 (b) says :

"A lease of immovable property determines where such time is limited conditionally on the happening of some event by the happening of such event."

The Subordinate Judge treats the last clause of Ex. A as conditionally limiting the period of lease on the happening of some event, viz., the failure to *dis*charge the debts within one year, and thinks that the lessee having failed to discharge the debts within one year the lease became void ipso facto. Cl. (g) is as follows :

"A lease of immovable property determines by forfeiture, that is to say, (1) in case the lessee breaks an express condition which provides that on breach thereof the lessor may re-enter or the lease shall become void ; or (2) in case the lessee renounces his character as such by setting up a title in a third person or by claiming title in himself ; and in either case the lessor or his transferee does some act showing his intention to determine the lease."

Whatever doubts there may be as regards treating this case as falling under Cl. (b), it seems to be clear that the case falls under Cl. (g). I have already set out the terms of the lease and the clause that provides that if the debts are not paid within one year all the stipulations shall become void and the lessee will have to lose the advance of Rs. 8,000 and odd which he had paid. It is no doubt true that in such cases the law treats the contract in the lease as voidable and this is borne out by the authorities cited by Mr. K. S. Krishnaswami Iyengar, namely, Quesnel Forks Gold Mining Co. Ltd. v. Ward, (1) and Davenport v. The Queen (2). But that does not make much difference in this case, as it has been avoided by Ex. 24. The lessors demised it again on the footing that the first demise had been determined. It is also clear that they wanted to do some act showing their intention to terminate the first lease and so they gave the fresh lease and according to the plaintiff himself put the lessee in possession of some at least of the properties covered by the demise. I may here refer to the documents Ex. AA series which are put in to show that Nambiar was in possession of some of the properties. So far, there can be little doubt from the evidence. But the contention of Mr. Krishnaswami Iyengar is two-fold. One is that it would not do simply to re-enter or to put an end to the lease or show some intention of putting an end to the lease, but you must also give notice to the lessee of your having done so. So far as the Act itself is concerned, there seems to be nothing to show that notice is to be given. I, for my part, think that, if the lessee comes to know of the fact, it is sufficient. It does not matter when he comes to know of it. No period is fixed for that. Of course, if without the knowledge by the lessee of the lessor's act he creates title bona fide in some third person, it is quite a different question ; or if the lessor has subsequently done something which the lessee wanted to take advantage of as a waiver that might be a different question. They do not arise here.

In this case I think it is perfectly clear from the evidence that Manavedan Raja was aware of the lease Ex. 24 in favour of Chathakutti Nambiar before he assigned his lease in favour of Govardhan Bhai Girdhar Bhai or the plaintiffs. I have pointed out that portion of the evidence on the plaintiffs' side which shows that the Nambiar was in possession of some at least of the properties demised when there were disputes between Nambiar and defendant 1. In para. 6 the plaint distinctly says that misunderstandings arose between Manavedan Raja on the one hand and defendant 2 and Chathukutti Nambiar on the other, that a breach of the peace was apprehended and that the Joint Magistrate of Tellicherry instituted proceeding under Ss. 144 and 145, Criminal P.C., and on 5th September 1919 passed an order prohibiting the parties from entering on the properties and afterwards passed the final order. It does not matter whether these orders were confirmed by the High Court or not. We have the fact that on 5th September 1919 there were disputes between Manavedan Raja and defendant 2 and Chathukutti Nambiar. That these disputes referred only to the lease executed in favour of Chathukutti Nambiar is clear and I have little doubt that by that time Manavedan Raja must have been aware that defendants 2 and 3 put an end to his first lease, or claimed a right to do so, and leased the property to Nambiar. Then we have the fact that O. S. No. 202 of 1919 on the file of the District Munsiff's Court, Kuttuparamba and O. S. No. 9 of 1929 of the Sub-Court, Tellichery, were filed, the plaints in which have been filed as Exs. 25 and 27; and Ex. 36 which is the report of the commissioner in O. S. No. 202 of 1919 shows that Manavedan Raja was actually at the time of the dispute in the locality. I find it difficult to believe that Manavedan Raja during that period was not aware that defendants 2 and 3 claiming to put an end to his lease, because he had not discharged the debts, purported to lease it to Chathukutti Nambiar. If he became aware of it, it is immaterial whether he got notice of it from the lessors or not. Where the lessors have done an act which unequivocally shows that they took advantage of the forfeiture—here they leased the property to somebody else—and that fact comes to the notice of the lessee, there is no reason to hold that because formal notice was not given his rights under the first document continues and the lessee can go on assigning his lease to somebody else and claim a right which had been put an end to by the lessor. It is not contended in this case that the lessee did perform his part. There was forfeiture when the lessee did not perform the covenant and the lessors were entitled to take advantage of the forfeiture.

I may also say that throughout these proceedings it was never asserted that Manavedan Raja had no notice that defendants 2 and 3 had put an end to his lease. He has not himself given evidence in this case although he was managing the properties on behalf of Govardhan Bhai Girdhar Bhai; and it seems to me that throughout the proceedings, although in the written statement it was said that there was this forfeiture and plaintiffs' rights were put on the ground that the first lease was revived after surrender of the property by Nambiar, it was never suggested that the lease in favour of Nambiar was invalid because the first lease was subsisting. If the particular date was in question it was the duty of the plaintiff or Manavedan Raja to have given evidence as to exactly when Manavedan Raja had notice. It seems to me that he must have had notice at least by 5th September 1919 and that will be sufficient for the purposes of this case.

The other question is whether the release by Nambiar and the acceptance by defendants 2 and 3 of the original lease as subsisting would be sufficient to confer a valid right. If the first lease had been put an end to, it seems to me that there can be no question of the parties saying that the lease will subsist. The only way by which they can create a further right would be only by a fresh lease, the first lease having been determined. If any authority is required on this point, I think, I may refer to the case of Chengiah v. Rajah of Kalahasti (3). It is difficult to see how a transaction which the law requires to be in writing registered could be created by a declaration of the parties that an extinct lease subsists. In Chengiah v. Raja of Kalahasti (3), it was held by Sir Charles Arnold White, C. J., and Benson and Wallis, JJ., that where a right of forfeiture accrues to the lessor and he elects to determine the tenancy the election is irrevocable and the parties cannot by any subsequent agreement revive the old tenancy. Wallis, J., observes:

"I agree and will only add, I do not think that the framers of the Transfer of Property Act intended to depart from the well established rule of English law that where a right of forfeiture accrues to the lessor he is put to his election and if he manifests his intention to enforce the forfeiture that is an election to determine the tenancy and the election is irrevocable."

The learned Judge refers to Jones v. Carter (4), Dendy v. Nicholl (5), Grimwood v. Moss (6), Evans v. Wyatt (7), and Clough v. L. & N. W. Ry. Co. (8). Then the learned Judge goes on to say:

"In this case the lessor elected to determine, the election was irrevocable and the lease was at an end and could not be revived."

It is therefore difficult to see how, a forfeiture having been incurred and a fresh lease having been given, the lease could be revived by any act of the parties, simply saying that they agree to be bound by the terms of the old lease. I am therefore of opinion that the lease of Manavedan Raja was determined and the forfeiture was enforced and the plaintiffs acquired no title to the property.

This renders it unnecessary for us to consider the other issues and we say nothing about them. We leave the question of title and possession undetermined. That is a matter which should be fought out between defendant 1 and defendants 2 and 3, nor is it necessary to consider the contention that defendants 2 and 3 are the sole uralans of the temple and the questions whether the suit is barred by S. 42, Specific Relief Act, and whether an injunction could be granted.

It is rather unfortunate that the matter should be left thus; but the difficulty has arisen from the plaintiffs' conduct in not getting a fresh lease when Nambiar is said to have surrendered his rights. The Subordinate Judge held against them. They presisted in their attitude saying that the lease is valid and bringing up the matter here.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with casts of respondent 4.

Walsh, J.—I agree.

(a) Trusts Act, S. 63—Settlement of account cannot be followed.

A book adjustment of accounts between a firm and the insolvent cannot be treated as a passing of trust money, deposited with the firm in the name of insolvent, into the hands of the insolvent; this being merely a settlement of account, it cannot be followed: *In re, Hallett & Co. Judgment.—The applicant, as a co-trustee of the insolvent, asks that an account shall be taken of the amount due to the trust and for a first charge on the assets in the hands of the Official Assignee to the extent of the sum found due. In January 1916 there was a partition between the applicant and his brother on the one side and the insolvent on the other. At the time of the partition it was agreed that the parties should set aside two sums of Rs. 10,000 for each of two charities. The applicant's branch was to contribute 5/8, and the insolvent's share being the remaining 3/8. The applicant accordingly drew two hundis in favour of the insolvent on a firm styled O. R. M. O. M. S. P. The money realized on these hundis was left on deposit with that firm, an account being opened in the name of each of the charities, and was to carry interest at the nadappu rate. There it remained until February 1920, when the two accounts were transferred to the insolvent's own business. In 1925 he was adjudicated.

There can be no doubt but that in 1916 two trust funds were constituted. The agreement of that year is silent as to the manner in which the insolvent was to deal with the money, but it is now common ground that he was to pay interest on it at the nadappu rate and conduct the charities out of the income so realized. On this it is argued that the case is merely one of creditor and debtor and that the act of the insolvent in mixing the trust funds with his own money was not wrongful, for he was authorized, to invest them in his own business. A similar argument was negatived by Kumaraswami Sastriar, J., in Krishnajee Bhat v. Sadasiva Tawker (1). For the reasons given by that learned Judge, I negative the argument here also.

A more serious contention is based on the decision in In re., Hallett & Co. Ex parte Blane (2). On the evidence I am satisfied that what happened in February 1920 was this—that there was merely a book adjustment between the the firm of O. R. M. O. M. S. P. to which the insolvent owed money and the insolvent. Nothing really passed, but certain credit and debit entries were made in their respective accounts. No doubt the result was that a debt of some Rs. 18,000 which the insolvent owed to the other firm was wiped out, but I do not think that a book adjustment of this kind can be treated as a passing of trust money into the hands of the trustee. In the words of Lord Esher :

"All that can be shown is a settlement of account and a settlement of account cannot be followed."

Following the decision above cited, I must uphold the contention of the Official Assignee.

A further contention of the Official Assignee is that the fund in his hands is one on which the applicant can "in any event" have no claim. The legal principle is clear :

"that, if a man mixes trust funds with his own, the whole will be treated as the trust property except so far as he may be able to distinguish what is his own. Firth v. Cartlame (3)."

The Official Assignee has in his hands two funds. One consists of a sum of Rs. 5,000 which was not derived from the business in which the trust moneys were invested. The other consists of a sum of about Rs. 40,000 which represents a rebate of income-tax. The tax was paid in 1919, at a time when the trust funds were still in deposit with O. R. M. O. S. P. That being so, it seems to me clear that the money in question cannot be treated as trust property or as anything but the trustee's own property.

The application is dismissed with taxed costs.

Civil Misc. Appeals Nos. 310 to 313 of 1925 and C. R. P. Nos. 627 and 628 of 1924, Decided on 17th January 1929 against order of Dist. Judge, Guntur.

* (a) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920) Ss. 37 and 43—On annulment insolvent's property does not necessarily revert to him—In proper cases his property may be vested in Official Receiver—Petition under S. 54 by Official Receiver can be continued even after annulment—Provincial Insolvency Act S. 54.

On an annulment of adjudication under S. 43 owing to the failure of the insolvent to apply for his discharge within the specified time the property of the insolvent does not necessarily revert to him. Under S. 37 the Court should, in proper cases, order the property to vest in the Official Receiver. In this way the insolvency proceedings not having come to an end, the proceedings started before the annulment by the Official Receiver to set aside a mortgage under S. 54 must be deemed to be pending, and, therefore, can be continued after the annulment : Ex parte Lennard, (1875) 45 L. J. B. K. 49 and A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 157, Rel. on. [P 281 C 2, P 282 C 2]

(b) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), Ss. 27 (2) and 43—Application for discharge must be by debtor only—Application for extension of time can however be made by one interested and may be granted—To this extent S. 43 is not imperative.

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J.—From S. 27 and S. 43 read together it is clear that the party who can make the application for discharge is the debtor and no one else. It is equally clear that the Court has power to extend the period and it may be so done not merely at the instance of the debtor but on the application of anybody interested. S. 27 (2) merely requires sufficient cause shall be shown, but it does not say, that the debtor alone may apply for extension or shall show suffiicient cause. If then before the expiry of the term fixed, an application is made under S. 27 (2), it is obvious that it is not obligatory upon the Court under S. 43 to annul the adjudication. To this extent it is plain that the word " shall " is not imperative : In re, Lord Thurlow, Ex parte Official Receiver, (1895) 1 Q. B. 724, Foll. [P 280 C 1]

(c) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), Ss. 27 (2) and 43—Before annulment under S. 43 Court may, on application, extend time under S. 27 (2) even after period fixed.

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J.—It is open to the insolvency Court under S. 27 (2) to extend the time, on a proper application, to that effect, made at any time before the adjudication is annulled under S. 43. This it can do, even though the application is made after the expiry of the period originally fixed: (Case Law Referred.): [P 280 C 2] (d) Provincial Insolvency Act, S. 43—S. 43 is mandatory.

Per Reilly, J.—It is one thing to provide that on a certain thing happening or not happening the next step shall be such and such; it it quite another thing to provide that if a certain order of the Court is not carried out within a certain time a certain consequence shall follow. The latter provision is much more clearly mandatory than the former. It is very difficult to suggest any reasonable explanation why the words " shall be annulled " are used in S. 43, if something other than their plain meaning is intended, and it is not disputed that the plain meaning is mandatory. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar, B. Somayya, V. Suryanarayana and Kasturi Seshagiri Rao—for Respondents.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—Several connected appeals and revision petitions have been argued before us, but, in my opinion, C. M. A. Nos. 310, 311 and 312 of 1925 really raise the question of substance which presents itself for decision. If we decide these appeals in favour of the apellants there, our decision in them governs the other cases and the contentions raised in the latter by the respondents seem beside the point. Shortly stated, the question we have to decide relates to the construction and effect of Ss. 43, 37 and 27, Provl. Ins. Act of 1920.

The facts are undisputed and I shall briefly state them. Three brothers were adjudicated insolvents, first on their own petitions and subsequently on petitions filed by certain creditors. The orders of adjudication were passed on the debtors' petitions by the Official Receiver on 25th November 1921 and he fixed 18 months, as the period within which the debtors were to apply for their discharge. The same debtors were subsequently adjudicated by the District Judge on 12th December 1921 and the period fixed by him was 12 months. Pausing here for a moment, one fails to understand how two such sets of parallel orders came to be made; but this curious irregularity has no bearing on the question we have to decide.

The total liabilities shown amount to over $2\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs. The insolvents had, on 10th January 1921, executed a mortgage in favour of certain creditors, whom I shall, in this judgment, call the mortgagees, for about Rs. 60,000 and it is said that the mortgage deed comprises the bulk, if not the whole, of the insolvents' property. In the insolvency petition, a proceeding was commenced by the Official Receiver under S. 54 for the annulling of the mortgage, He filed his petition under that section on 20th April 1922. Its trial began on 1st February 1923 and became a protracted one, the evidence being recorded piecemeal from time to time. In fact from 1st February 1923 to 1st May 1924, that is for 15 months, witnesses were examined off and on, but the trial was not even on the last mentioned date, concluded. I may mention that the evidence of 10 witnesses for the petitioner and 3 of the respondent had by then been taken. On 30th April 1924 a creditor by name Krishnayya applied under S. 43 that the orders of adjudication might be annulled, on the ground that the debtors had not applied for their discharge within the time fixed. The date chosen for making the application is significant. On 24th April the petition under S. 54 was adjourned to 1st May. The application to annul the adjudication was made, as I have said, on 30th April, that is, the day previous to the date fixed for the hearing of the substantive petition. On 1st May, I have already stated, the Judge heard the petition for annulling the mortgage. Curiously enough, on that very date, without notice to, or knowledge of, the creditors, an order appears to have been made on Krishnayya's petition directing the Official Receiver to submit a report. This petition came on 3rd May 1924 and the District Judge made an order annulling the adjudication. It must be noted that the petition under S. 54 stood adjourned from 1st May to 28th July. It was between these two dates, that, is on 3rd May, that the adjudication was annulled.

It is surprising that when this order was made without notice to creditors, the fact was overlooked that there was pending on the file of the Court, the petition under S. 54 which was being hotly contested. So far as the record goes, the Official Receiver does not appear to have taken any steps to safeguard the interests of the general body of creditors. This led to the strange result that the adjudication was unconditionally annulled. I use the words "strange result" advisedly. The order under S. 43 was made presumably to punish the debtors. But in this case the persons who are prejudicially affected, are not the debtors but the creditors generally. Another unexpected result of that order is, that the petition under S. 54 was held to have lapsed automatically and the mortgage, which was the subject of attack, became, for the time being, valid and final. The very object of the insolvency petitions, so far as the creditors collectively were concerned, became frustrated for it cannot be gainsaid that the creditors started the proceedings mainly, if not solely, for the purpose of getting rid of the mortgage. The rest of the story may be briefly told. Several creditors applied to the District Judge for review of the orders made under S. 43 and the review petitions were dismissed. As a necessary result, the Judge held that the petitions to annul the mortgage under S. 54 lapsed and that petition was accordingly dismissed.

The general body of creditors (whom I shall refer to as appellants) attack these orders of the learned District Judge whereas Krishnayya and the mortgagee support them. It is contended for the appellants that the word "shall" in S. 43 is not used in a mandatory sense, but must be held to be directory only. The argument is put thus: Generally, no doubt, it is the debtor that is punished by the annulling of the adjudication. The very terms of the section show that what is intended is in the nature of a penalty to the insolvent. If the adjudication is annulled, the section provides that the Court may re-commit the debtor to his former custody and that he shall be subject to all the processes that had previously been in force against him. But there may be cases where, if no discretion is left to the Court the very opposite of what is intended may result. In this case, it is asked, how are the insolvents really prejudiced by the orders? The parties who profited by them are the mortgagees, that is to say, the creditors fraudulently preferred. The honest ereditors, on the contrary, have been seriously prejudiced. Can this be the intention of the section?

I shall now deal with this contention. S. 43 provides that if the debtor fails to apply for his discharge within the period specified by the Court, the order of adjudication shall be annulled. The learned Advocate General contends for the appellants, that the word "shall" is directory and the expression "shall be annulled" means "shall be liable to be annulled." S. 43, is, in my opinion, controlled by S. 27 which reads thus :

"27 (1) If the Court does not dismiss the petition it shall make an order of adjudication, and shall specify in such order the period within which the debtor shall apply for his discharge.

"(2) The Court may, if sufficient cause is shown, extend the period within which the debtor shall apply for his discharge and in that case shall publish notice of the order in such manner as it thinks fit."

From these two sections read together, it is clear that the party who can make the application for discharge is the debtor and no one else. It is equally clear that the Court has power to extend the period and it may be so done, not merely at the instance of the debtor but on the application of anybody interested. The section merely requires that sufficient cause shall be shown, but it does not say, that the debtor alone may apply for extension or shall show sufficient cause. If then, before the expiry of the term fixed, an application is made under S. 27 (2), it is obvious that it is not obligatory upon the Court under S. 43 to annul the adjudication. To this extent' it is plain that the word "shall" is not imperative. In re Lord Thurlow, Ex parte Official Receiver (1) is an authority on this point. In that case, the Court of appeal held the expression "shall adjudge" in S. 20, Cl. (1), Bankruptcy Act, 1883, to be directory and not mandatory on the ground that a discretion was left to the Judge under the words of another section, namely, S. 105 (2) which contained a provision to the effect that the Court may at any time adojurn any proceedings before it upon such terms, if any, as it may think fit to impose.

Then comes the question, supposing the Court is moved under S. 27 (2), after the expiry of the time originally fixed, but before the adjudication is annulled under S. 43, has the Court the power, to extend the period, within which the debtor could apply for his discharge? In the first place, I must observe that the adjudication does not get automatically annulled under S. 43 on the expiry of the original period. The words of the section show that the Court must make an order of annulment. This is the correct interpretation of the section and Abraham v. Sookias (2) supports this view. Next S. 27 (2) while saying that the Court may extend the time, does not say in express terms, that it may be extended either before or after the expiration of the period originally fixed. S. 148, Civil P. C., enacts that the rule to be applied under that code is that the time may be enlarged, irrepective of the fact that the application is made either before or after the expiry of the period originally specified. It is unnecessary to decide whether by reason of S. 5, Prov. Ins. Act, S. 148 of the Code is attracted or not for Badri Narain v. Sheo Koer (3) establishes clearly that the power of the Court is not fettered in the way suggested. That case was decided under the old Code which did not contain a provision similar to S. 148.

I am therefore disposed to hold that it is open to the Insolvency Court under S. 27 (2) to extend the time on a proper application to that effect, made at any time before the adjudication is annulled under S. 43. This is the view taken by Krishnan, J., in Arunagiri Mudaliyar v. Kandaswami Mudaliyar (4), by Devadoss and Wallace, JJ., in Abbi Reddi v. Venkata Reddi (5) and by present Chief Justice in Manikam Pattar v. Nanchappa Chettiar (6). The Lahore High Court has taken the same view in Lakhi v. Molar (7) and Fateh Muhammad v. Mayadas (8) the Burma Court in K. S. A. R. A. Chettiyar v. Maung Myat Tha (9) and the Calcutta High Court in the case already cited, Abraham v. Sookias (2). A different view was taken by Waller, J., who differing from Krishnan, J., held in Arunagiri Mudaliyar v. Kandaswami Mudaliyar (4) that the Court has no such power. To the same effect are the decisions in Venu Gopala Chariyar v. Chinnu Lal Sowcar (10), Thirumala Reddi v. Thamasu Reddi (11) and in Ram Krishna Misra, ex parte (12). There is thus a conflct of authority on this point. But I am in favour of holding that, on the right construction of the two setions S. 43 and S. 27 (2) in the light of Badri Narain v. Sheo Koer (3) the Court may enlarge the time, even though the application is made after the expiry of the period originally fixed. Thus, in this case again, the terms of S. 43 are not imperative or obligatory.

I have so far dealt with two classes of cases but over and above these, there remains a third, namely, that has actually arisen in this insolvency. If, before the District Judge made his order under S. 43, there was before him an application to extend the time, he would have, as I have said a discretion to enlarge the period, and in the circumstances of this case, he would have exercised it properly by granting an extension. There are other provisions in the Act under which the debtor can be punished while an adjudication still remains in force. For one thing, his protection may be revoked while the proceedings may be continued for the benefit of the creditors. In this case, I cannot help remarking that the Official Receiver failed in his duty by not asking for an extension. However that may be the question is: is S. 43 to be construed as peremptory, in the absence of an application before the Judge under S. 27 (2)? In other words can the Judge suo motu refuse to make an order under S. 43 if he thinks there are sufficient reasons for adopting that course? The learned Advocate General argues that even in such a case, the sanction is not mandatory. There is no authority and I wish to reserve my own opinion on the point for I can rest my judgmeut for the appellant on a much firmer ground.

Section 43, after saying that the order of adjudication shall be annulled, adds that provision of S. 37 shall apply. That section runs thus :

"37. (1) Where an adjudication is annulled all sales and dispositions of property and payments duly made, and all acts theretofore done, by the Court or receiver shall be valid but subject as aforesaid the property of the debtor who was adjudged insolvent shall vest in such person as the Court may appoint, or in default of any such appointment, shall revert to the debtor to the extent of his right or interest therein on such condition (if any) as the Court may by order in writing, declare."

Under this section it was open to the Court to have directed the insolvents' property to vest for the creditor's benefit in some person named for the purpose. This is not disputed. That is the order that in the circumstances, ought to have been made. Had such a conditional order been made though it would have revoked the status of the debtors as insolvents, it would not have proprio vigore put an end to the insolvency proceedings by legal implication. The District Judge held that as the annulment of adjudication had the effect of terminating the insolveney petition the proceedings instituted by the receiver under S. 54 in that petition lapsed as a matter of course. But this result could have been avoided. For, if as I have said action had been taken under S. 37, the annulment would not have been unqualified or absolute and in that case the Court would still retain control over the insolvent and his assets. The scheme of the Act shows that, in certain cases, the annulling of adjudication does not necessarily lead to the finally putting an end to the insolvency petition. This, in my opinion is the correct view and I am supported by Ex parte Lennard (13) and Thimmappa v. Devasi Harpal (14). In the last mentioned case the question arose, what was the effect of an order under S. 39 annulling adjudication which was made consequent on a scheme of of composition, approved by the Court under S. 38? It was held that the order did not bring the insolvency petition to an end and that the Court, although the adjudication was annulled continued to retain control over the insolvent's assets. I entirely agree with that decision, and the point is fully dealt with in the judgment of Wallace, J. But there is one observation made by the learned Judge, an obiter dictum with which I do not agree. While holding that an order of annulment under S. 39 does not terminate the petition (that was the point that directly arose) the learned Judge incidentally observed that under S. 43 the case would be different. If what Wallace, J., meant was that an unconditional annulment under that section would bring an insolvency to an end that is a proposition to which no exception can be taken ; and in my opinion that is all that the learned Judge could have meant.

(10) A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 942=49 Mad. 935.
(11) A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 265=51 Mad. 830.

(14) A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 157.

Now, turning to Ex parte Lennard (13) the facts are these : A composition scheme provided for the annulment of the bankruptcy and the assignment by the debtor of all his personal property to the trustee to secure the composition. The scheme having been approved and the bankruptcy annulled, a question arose whether the rights of an execution creditor under an execution that was void in the bankruptcy revived upon the annulment. The registrar granted an injunction restraining the creditors from proceeding with their execution. It was contended that the Court had no jurisdiction the bankruptcy having been annulled. The Court of appeal overruled the objection. James, L. J., observes :

"I am of opinion that under Ss. 28 and 72, Bankruptcy Act, 188), the Court of Bankruptcy has jurisdiction to determine all questions which may arise in the case of a scheme of arrangement . . . . But here, though the bankruptcy has been annulled, the composition was made in bankruptcy by the Court itself as a part of a scheme which was approved by the Court . . . . The order was therefore made in what continued to be a matter of bankruptcy and the question was a question to be decided under S. 72 for the purpose of making a complete distribution of the property."

At this point, a passage from Williams" Bankruptcy, Edn. 13, may be quoted. The learned author while commenting on S. 29, English Bankruptcy Act (which contains a sub-clause on which S. 37 of our Act is modelled) says thus :

"Although in cases where the annulment is on the ground that the adjudication ought never to have been made the Court will in all respects try to remit the bankrupt to his original position, yet in cases where the annulment is, as it is under S. 21, a continuance of the bankruptcy in another form the rights of and against the bankrupt or the person in whom the bankrupt's estate becomes vested by the order of the Court in respect of that estate will remain as they were under the Bankruptcy." (p. 135).

Assuming then that in the events that have happened S. 43 was mandatory the District Judge ought to have made an order under S. 37.

I would therefore in C. M. A. Nos. 310, 311 and 312 of 1925 set aside the order of the District Judge and under Ss. 32 and 37 annul the adjudication of the insolvents, subject to this condition, that their property shall remain vested in the Official Receiver.

The result of the view I have taken is, the insolvency petition not having come to an end, the proceeding started by the receiver under S. 54 must be deemed to be pending; and the lower Court is directed to complete the enquiry and dispose of the petition according to law in the ordinary course.

It only remains to add that S. 37, which deals with the consequences of annulling, validates all acts done previously by the Official Receiver. The word "acts" is wide enough to include receiver's act of avoidance under S. 54 "Void" in that section has been held to mean "voidable," that is, it is open to the Official Receiver, as representing the creditors, to disaffirm the transaction (the fraudulent preference). The effect of the saving in S. 37 is, to preserve the validity of the receiver's exercise of his option of avoidance. The result is, now that I have held that the insolvency petition has not been brought to an end, the proceeding under S. 54 subsists and can be continued.

I make an order accordingly in C. M. A. No. 314 of 1925. This is scarcely an independent order, for as a matter of fact, it follows as a consequence from the orders already made in C. M. A. Nos. 310, 311 and 312 of 1925.

These orders will really suffice to dispose of all the matters before us. In that view, I make no separate orders on C. R. Ps. No. 627 and 628 of 1924 and 173 and 174 of 1925.

In regard to costs, though collusion between Krishnayya and the mortgagees may be suspected, it cannot be said that either of them acted wrongly. I therefore direct that each side shall bear its costs of these appeals and petitions.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Ayyangar says that his client was brought on the record as alienee who acquired the interest, at a Court sale, of the mortgagees, Bhadri Narain and Soorja Narain. He contends that he is protected by S. 54 (2). This is a question which must be left to be decided by the lower Court when it disposes of the petition under S. 54.

Reilly, J.—In these cases the insolvents did not apply for their discharge within the time specified; nor was any application made either before or after the expiry of that time for its extension. That being so, I do not wish to express any opinion on this occasion on the question whether the time specified can be extended by the Court after expiry. But in the circumstances stated, the District Judge was bound in my opinion under S. 43, Prov. Ins. Act to annul the adjudication. In the decisions of this Court on the question culminating in Thirumala Reddi v. Kolakulu Thomasu Reddy (11), the weight of authority is clearly in favour of the view that the words "shall be annulled" in S. 43 of the Act. are mandatory. But in Manikkam v. Nanchappa (6), where the question was not decided, the learned Chief Justice suggested that another view was possible and referred to In Re, Lord Thurlow, ex parte Official Receiver (1), as deciding that a similar provision in the English Bankruptcy Act was not mandatory. The learned Advocate-General has relied strongly on Lord Thurlow's case (1), in support of his contention that the expression "shall be annulled" in S. 43, Prov. Ins. Act is not mandatory, but directory, and that in this case the adjudication should not have been annulled. But, when we examine In re, Lord Thurlow, ex parte Official Receiver (1). I doubt with great respect whether the learned Chief Justice was right in suggesting that the Court of appeal was there interpreting an exactly similar provision of the English Bankruptcy Act. In that case the statutory meeting of creditors eventually passed no resolution, and it was contended for the appellant (the Official Receiver) that under S. 20 (1), Bankruptcy Act, 1883 in those circumstances it was obligatory to adjudge the debtor bankrupt forthwith. The Court of appeal decided that it was not obligatory on the Registrar to make the order of adjudication forthwith but that he had power to adjourn the matter. It was not explicity set out in S. 20 (1), Bankruptcy Act, 1883 that, if the meeting of creditors passsed no resolution, the debtor should be adjudged bankrupt forthwith, and even taking that section by itself I doubt whether "shall adjudge" was a mandatory provision which left the Court no discretion to do anything except to adjudge the debtor bankrupt forthwith; it appears to me rather to set out that the next step in the procedure was to make the order of adjudication. However, all the members of the Court of appeal called to their aid another section of the Bankruptcy Act, S. 105. which provided that the Court might at any time adjourn any proceedings before it, and reading that section with S. 20 (1) they had no doubt that the Registrar was not bound by S. 20 (1) to adjudge the debtor bankrupt forthwith. And it must be noticed that Rigby, L. J. indicated that he would have regarded the provision in S. 20 (1) by itself as obligatory and was only saved from doing so by reading it with S. 105; and even Lord Esher, M. R., eventually came to the conclusion that it was obligatory subject to the power of adjournment. Although it appears to me that, even taking S. 20 (1) of that Act by itself, the provision "shall adjudge" was not mandatory in the sense that, in the circumstances stated, the Registrar was bound to adjudge the debtor bankrupt forthwith.

It is clear that the Court of appeal did not decide that by themselves, the word "shall adjudge" were not mandatory in that sense. But in my opinion, in S. 43. Prov. Insl. Act, we have a different provision. It is one thing to provide that on a certain thing happening or not happening the next step shall be such; and such; it is quite another thing to provide that,if a certain order of the Court is not carried out within a certain time, a certain consequence shall follow. The latter provision is to my mind much more clearly mandatory than the former. It was very difficult to suggest any reasonable explanation why the words "shall be annulled" were used in S. 43 Provl. Insol. Act, if something other than their plain meaning was intended, and it is not disputed that their plain meaning is mandatory. The learned Advocate General has suggested that what the legislature meant by using those words was "shall be liable to be annulled," but he has not been able to suggest any satisfactory reason why, if so, the legislature did not say what it meant. If anything less than mandatory provision was intended, it would have been the simplest matter to express the real intention. I am very averse to accepting suggestions, which are not infrequently made in this Court when the plain language of a statute appears to lead in particular circumstances to incovenient consequences, that the legislature has done its work carelessly, inefficiently and has not said what it meant or has said what it did not mean.

On the contrary we have no right to depart from the plain meaning of a statute except for some compelling reason, and our own view of what is convenient can seldom provide such a reason. In this instance, the use of the words "shall be annulled" becomes more marked when we conrast it with the provision "may be annulled" in S. 41, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. It would be extravagant to assume that when framing S. 43, Provl. Ins. Act, the legislature had forgotten the wording of S. 41, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, on the same subject; and if the latter provision had not been entirely forgotten, the words "shall be annulled" in S. 45, Prov. Ins. Act, can hardly have been chosen otherwise than advisedly and deliberately. But the learned Advocate-General has suggested that, even if the legislature used the words "shall be annulled" advisedly and deliberately, it would be possible for us to soften them by a kind of equitable interpretation, if experience showed that in certain circumstances they led to gross and uncontemplated hardship or to some unexpected conflict with the general purpose of the Act. In very exceptional cases it may be necessary for us to modify by interpretation even the most unambiguous words deliberately used by the legislature in a particular passage of a statute if we are convinced that in the circumstances under consideration they lead to consequences wholly uncontemplated by the legislature and repugnant to the purpose of the statute. The plainest words most deliberately chosen in a particular passage cannot be allowed to defeat the unquestionable intention of the legislature in framing a statute. But that is only one aspect of the fundamental rule that we must enforce a statute "according to the intent of them that made it." Before we depart from the plain meaning of particular words deliberately chosen by the legislature, we must be very sure of our ground; we must be convinced that we have to deal with circumstances which the legislature never foresaw and to which it never intended its words to apply, and of that we can hardly ever be convinced except by the clearest repugnancy to the purpose of the statute. It is true that our Insolvency Acts are intended not only for the relief of debtors but also for the fair treatment of their creditors and that, if the plain meaning of a particular passage, though deliberately adopted, led to the infliction of gross and obviously uncomtemplated hardship on a debtor or his creditors, which the legislature could not have intended, we might be driven to depart from the language used in order to do what the legislature clearly intended, not what it actually said.

But can it be said that there is any such compelling reason to depart from the plain language in this case? The annulment of his adjudication can inflict no such hardship on a debtor, as S. 10 (2), Provl. Ins. Act indicates that, if he has been prevented from making his application for discharge by some reasonable cause, the Court will permit him to present a new insolvency petition on the same facts as before. The hardship, which the learned Advocate General has pressed upon us is, hardship to the creditors or some of them, if the adjudication is annulled on account of the debtor's default, when it is clearly profitable to them that the realization and distribution of the debtor's assets should go on in the insolvency proceedings or disastrous to them that his property should again vest in the debtor. But it is to prevent any such hardship that the legislature has by the terms of S. 43 made the provisions of S. 37 applicable in such a case. It is not necessary, when the adjudication is annulled because the debtor has failed to apply for his discharge within the specified time, that his property should revert to him; it may be vested by the Court in some other person. In a case such as the present one the obvious course is that the Court should order the property to vest in the Official Receiver. It has not been contended before us for the respondents that that would not be a proper order in this case or that, when the debtor's property, has so vested in the Official Receiver, he would not be able to realize it by sale and suit and to distribute it rateably among the creditors. In my opinion the annulment of the adjudication in these cases was correct and must stand, as the District Judge had in the circumstances no discretion to refuse to make an order of annulment, but he should have made use of the provisions of S. 37 and should have ordered the debtors' property to vest in the Official Receiver, which order we should now make. That order we can make in C. M. A. Nos. 310, 311 and 312 of 1925. But it will not serve the purpose of the appellant in C. M. A. No. 313 of 1925, another creditor, who objects to the dismissal of I. A. No. 402 of 1922 on the file of the District Court. That was a petition by the Official Receiver originally under Ss. 53 and 54, Provl. Ins. Act, but apparently pressed only under S. 54, for the annulment of a mortgage of almost the whole preperty of the debtors concerned as made with a view of giving the mortgagees a preference over their other creditors, and was dismissed by the District Judge as having abated when the adjudication was annuled.

It is contended by Mr. Srinivasa Ayyangar, who has argued the case for respondents 2 and 3 in this appeal, that, even if a debtor's property is ordered to vest in the Official Receiver under S. 37, Provl. Ins. Act, proceedings under S. 54 cannot go on after the adjudication has been annulled. He first argues that under the wording of S. 54 such a petition can only proceed while the debtor continues to be an adjudged insolvent, which he is no longer when the adjudication has been annulled. But that is not be found explicitly or implicitly in the section. It is true that, unless the debtor is once adjudged an insolvent, the receiver cannot move under the section. But apart from that essential, the words " if such person is adjudged an insolvent on a petition " are of grammatical effect in the section only to fix the identity of the petition from the date of which the period has to be calculated within which a transfer, etc., made comes within the scope of the section. There are no words in the section to express or imply that the petition, once properly preferred, can be prosecuted only while the adjudication is in force. And there is nothing incongruous in a receiver, if the property of a debtor has vested in him under S. 37 for realization and distribution, continuing to prosecute a petition under S. 54. It is the duty of the receiver in such circumstances, as before the annulment of the adjudication, to distribute the property rateably. A petition under S. 54 is only an incidental proceeding by which the receiver ensures a fair distribution by making the creditor to whom preference has been given disgorge what he has got in excess of his fair share. Such a creditor is not prevented from getting his fair share with the other creditors; in effect it is only the excess he must give up. But the objection of substance raised by Mr. Srinivasa Ayyangar is that the jurisdiction to annul the preferential transaction and to make the preferred creditor disgorge is peculiar to insolvency proceedings and it is only in the course of those proceedings that it can be exercised. That proposition is sound so far as it goes.

Outside its insolvency jurisdiction, the Court has no power to annul a preferential transaction merely because it gives preference to one creditor over others. But Mr. Srinivasa Ayyangar goes on to contend that immediately an adjudication is annulled, the insolvency proceedings came to an end. As a general proposition that is not so. Certainly it cannot be suggested that in this country annulment of adjudication puts the clock back as if the adjudication had never been. The opening part of S. 37, Provl. Ins. Act, which validates what has been done while the adjudication has been in force, is enough to dispose of any such suggestion. But apart from that, I think it is clear that the insolvency proceedings do not always stop at the moment of annulment. Ss. 39 and 40 show that insolvency proceedings continue after adjudication has been annulled on a composition or scheme being approved, so much so that on the debtor's failure to pay an instalment due in pursuance of the composition or scheme, the Court can re-adjudge him insolvent, without any fresh insolvency petition being put in, which it could not do if the insolvency proceedings were at an end. That the insolvency proceedings continue in such a case was decided recently in Timmappa v. Derasi Harpal (14). And see Ex parte Leonard (13). It is true that in the former case, Wallace, J., said that an annulment of adjudication under S. 43 is evidently intended to put an end to the insolvency proceedings as a whole. But that statement was obiter dictum. It was not necessary for that case, and the question was not before him; and with great respect I doubt whether he considered fully all the consequences of his proposition. Mr. Srinivasa Ayyangar urges that we must infer from the fact that an annulment of adjudication under S. 43, a debtor, as indicated by S. 10 (2), is able in certain circumstances to present a fresh insolvency petition, on the same facts as before, that the previous insolvency proceedings came to a complete end when his adjudication was annulled. No doubt all such advantages as he got by adjudication then came to an end; but that does not necessarily imply that the whole insolvency proceedings came to an end. And, when once we reach the conclusion that under S. 37 the Court may order the property of the debtor to vest in a receiver for the purpose of realization and distribution among his creditors and that is admitted by Mr. Srinivasa Ayyangar—it is only by going out of our way that we can suppose that the receiver, who has been appointed by the Court in the exercise of its insolvency jurisdiction, is to be controlled and directed by the Court, as he must be controlled and directed, in the exercise of some other jurisdiction.

In a large proportion of the cases in which an adjudication is annulled otherwise than under S. 35 or S. 36, there will be further proceedings to be taken or superintended by the Court, and that must be done in the exercise of its insolvency jurisdiction. The Act does not say that insolvency proceedings cease in all cases with the annulment of adjudication, and Ss. 37, 39, 40 and 50 show that proceedings may continue, which must be proceedings before the Court in its insolvency jurisdiction. In my opinion, if the Court orders under S. 37 that the property of the debtor shall vest in a receiver, the insolvency proceedings will continue while the receiver's work goes on. That being so, there is no difficulty in the receiver continuing to prosecute in those circumstances a petition under S. 54 after the adjudication has been annulled under S. 43. Moreover, if, as in this case, the receiver has initiated proceedings under S. 54 before the adjudication is annulled, the position is still simpler. S. 37 validates acts done by him after the adjudication is made and before it is annulled. Even if we do not go so far as to say that the presentation of any petition to the Court in his capacity as receiver is an 'act' within the meaning of S. 37, the presentation of a petition under S. 54 must, I think, as the learned Advocate-General contends, be such an act. By presenting a petition under S. 54 the receiver exercises his option to treat the transaction concerned as void. The formal exercise of that option is an act within his competence. If, as can hardly be denied the institution of a suit in the interest of the debtor's estate by the receiver after the adjudication is made and before it is annulled, is an act which will remain valid under S. 37 after the adjudication is annulled for the benefit of the debtor or anyone else concerned, the formal exercise of his option to avoid a transfer must surely be an 'act' which under S. 37 will remain valid. If it remains valid after the annulment of the adjudication, then it is unreasonable to suppose that the receiver cannot continue to pursue the remedy provided by S. 54. I agree therefore that C. M. A. No. 313 of 1925 must be allowed and the dismissal of I. A. No. 402 of 1922 must be set aside and that petition must be remanded to the District Judge for fresh disposal. I agree also that C. R. P's. Nos. 627 of 1924, 628 of 1924, 173 of 1925 and 174 of 1925 against the District Judge's refusal to review his order annulling the adjudication should be dismissed as unnecessary and that in those revision petitions and in the four appeals each party should bear his own costs.

Mr. Srinivasa Ayyangar's contention that his client, as auction-purchaser in execution, is protected by S. 54 (2), Provl. Ins. Act as a purchaser in good faith for valuable consideration, is clearly one which should be urged before the District Judge, when I. A. No. 402 of 1922 is reheard.

Second Appeal No. 250 of 1926, Decided on 7th October 1929, from decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Bapatla, in Appeal Suit No. 89 of 1925.

(a) Hindu Law—Marriage—No obligation on mother to marry her sons by borrowing on security of property inherited from her father—(Obiter).

In the case of a mother there is no obligation at all to get any of her sons married by borrowing money on the security of the property inherited by her from her father : 50 M. L. J. 221, Not shaken by 54 M. L. J. 618. [P 289 C 2]

 (b) Hindu Law—Widow—Alienation—Setting aside—(Mitakshara)—Daughter's son is not member of last male holder's family — Widow of last male holder is not liable for daughter's son's maintenance. etc —Alienation by widow for such purposes is not justifiable.

Under Mitakshara, the daughter's son is not a member of the last male holder's family, he belongs to the family of the daughter's husband. Nor could the daughter's son be a dependent member of the last male holder's family when his father is living and able to maintain him. Therefore the last male holder is not bound to maintain the daughter's son, and on his death his estate in the hands of his widow is not liable for the maintenance, education, upanayanam and marriage. Any alienation by the widow for such purposes is not justifiable : (Case Law Discussed.) [P 291 C 1]

G. Lakshmanna—for Appellant.

P. Satyanarayana—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The lands described in the plaint belonged to the last male holder Lakshmayya, who died about 20 years prior to the suit, leaving his widow defendant 2 and a daughter Subbamma, the mother of the plaintiff and defendant 3. On Lakshmayya's death, defendant 2 inherited the property. The daughter of defendant 2 (the mother of the plaintiff and defendant 3) died a year after Lakshmayya's death. The plaintiff and defendant 3 as the daughter's sons of the late Lakshmayya are the nearest reversioners to the estate of Lakshmayya. On 20th November 1918, defendant 2 sold the suit properties to defendant 1 for Rs. 1,500 ; the chief item of debt incurred by defendant 2, to discharge which she sold the properties to defendant 1, was thus described in the sale deed :

"Rs. 885-1-3, being the debt contracted by me and by my eldest grandson Suryaprakasa Rao (defendant 2) for our family expenses and for the upanayanam and the marriage of Ananda Rao (the plaintiff), one of my daughter's sons under my protection."

The plaintiff was a minor at the time of the sale, and he instituted the present suit on 22nd September 1922, for a declaration that the sale deed would not in any way affect his reversionary right in the property.

Defendants 2 and 3 did not appear. Defendant 1, the alienee, pleaded that the sale was made for legal necessity and was binding on the plaintiff, that the plaintiff and defendant 3 were under the protection of defendant 2, and that the plaintiff was even at the time of the suit living with defendant 2. He contended that the property was sold to him by defendant 2 for discharging the debts incurred by her for the maintenance, education, upanayanam, and marriage expenses of the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff equally with defendant 3 was estopped from questioning the same.

Both the lower Courts came to the conclusion that the debts incurred by defendant 2 for the discharge of which the properties were sold to defendant 1 were incurred by defendant 2 for the maintenance, education, upanayanam and marriage expenses of the plaintiff, that after the death of the plaintiff's mother (which event took place about one year after the death of defendant 2's husband) the plaintiff and defendant 3 were living with defendant 2 and were being maintained by her. The plaintiff's allegation, that the amounts were spent for debts contracted by defendant 3 in connexion with his gambling and other vices, was not proved. In these circumstances the first Court decreed the suit in plaintiff's favour, holding that the daughter's son had no legal claim for maintenance, etc., from the estate left by their maternal grandfather and that the widow was not justified in alienating the properties for meeting the upanayanam and marriage expenses of the plaintiff. On the appeal preferred by defendant 1, the learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Bapatla reversed the Munsiff's decision and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. As already remarked, the lower appellate Court also held that the substantial portion of the debts incurred by defendant 2 to discharge which she sold the properties to defendant 1, was incurred for the maintenance, upanayanam and marriage expenses of the plaintiff, and it agreed with the trial Court in that respect.

The trial Court specifically remarked that the estate left by the last male holder (20 acres of land at Battibrolu and 13 acres at Chemudubad) yielded much more than was necessary for the maintenance, etc., of defendant 2. Unless therefore the widow was justified under Hindu Law in incurring debts for the maintenance, education, upanayanam and marriage expenses of daughter's sons, she could not validly sell lands forming part of the corpus of the estate. She is, of course, complete master of the income from the lands forming the estate and could utilize the same as she pleased and for any purpose she liked. But the question is whether she could legally sell a portion of the estate for such purposes as are proved in this case, and whether the sale would be binding on the ultimate reversioners.

The learned Subordinate Judge relied on the decision reported in Chumum Lall v. Lalla Gunput Lal (1) and Rustome Singh v. Moti Singh (2) and Baijnath Rai v. Mangala Prasad Narayan Sahi (3) in support of his view that the alienation was binding on the reversioners. I regret, I am unable to agree with him. In Chumum Lall v. Lalla Gunpat Lal (1), the facts of the case do not fully appear in the report. The only sentence relied on is that at p. 53 :

"We fail to see how the Munsif's grounds are imaginary, for he proceeds on grounds admitted by the Hindu Law to be grounds of necessity for such alienations, namely, the shradh of the widow's husband, the marriage of his daughter, the maintenance of his grandsons and the payments of the husband's debts. All these grounds are acknowledged by the Hindu Law as legitimate causes for raising money by a widow, and they have been found to be proved by the first Court."

We are now concerned only with the question of maintenance of the grandsons of the last male holder, and we are not concerned here with the other grounds of necessity mentioned by the learned Judges. No authority is quoted in support of the proposition in so far as the maintenance of grandsons is concerned as a justifiable ground of necessity for such alienation. Unless there be something peculiar in the Bengal Law, I do not feel justified in accepting that case as an authority justifying the sale in the case before me. In Rustom Singh v. Moti Singh (2), it was held by the learned Judges as follows :

"Ordinarily it is the duty of the father in a Hindu family to provide for his daughter's marriage; but where the father was not possessed of sufficient means to do so, and the mother in order to raise money to meet the expenses of the daughter's marriage, mortgaged property of her own which had come to her from her father, it was held that the mortgage was made for legal necessity and was a valid mortgage."

The only relevant portion is that contained at p. 475:

"There can be no doubt that it was the father's duty in this instance to get his daughter married . . . . The father was unable out of his resources to effect the marriage of his daughter, and thereupon the mother of the girl was obliged to have recourse to the property that came from her father to her. There is no doubt of its being the pious duty of the father to effect the marriage. He was unable to do so; so under these circumstances we think that the money, the consideration of this marriage was borrowed for necessary purposes, namely, the marriage of the daughter."

It is enough for our purpose to say that the case before me is not the case of the marriage of daughter's daugher. As there is no discussion of the principle of law on the point in the judgment, the same affords no help to me to dispose of the case before me, which is the case of maintenance, upanayanam and marriage of a daughter's son. The case in Chudammal v. Nadamuni Naidu (4) was a case exactly similar to the case in Rustom Singh v. Moti Singh (2). The Court remarked that it was not argued that the case in Rustom Singh v. Moti Singh (2) was not correctly decided. That also was a case of the marriage of a daughter's daughter, which is not the case before me. Ramakoomar Mitter v. Ichamoyi Dasi (5) related to the marriage of a (deceased) son's daughter. The statement in the decision in Baijnath Rai v. Mangala Prasad (3) referred to by respondent is to this effect :

"Under Hindu law, the liability of a woman who takes property either by inheritance or survivorship, to maintain those whose maintenance was a charge upon it in the hands of the last holder, is the same as that of a man who inherits or succeeds to property."

In the present case it is not stated that the maintenance of the daughter's sons was a charge upon the estate in the hands of the last male holder during the lifetime of the last male holder. At that time, the daughter and the daughter's sons were living with the daughter's husband and not with the last male holder. No question of "dependent members" or of "maintenance being a charge upon the estate in the hands of the last male holder," therefore arises in the present case. At p. 355 of Baijnath Rai v. Mangala Prasad (3) it is mentioned that

"Ramsumaree Kuer would easily come within the description of such members as were dependent on the male coparceners when they were alive."

The decision in Baijnath Rai v. Mangala Prasad (3) also does not therefore really help me in deciding the present case. In Norton's Leading Cases on Hindu Law, Vol. 1. p. 48, I find it stated that

"Daughters and daughter's sons are entitled to maintenance in undivided families, under the Mitakshara: Sutherland's Full Bench Rulings p. 70 M. Koomud Chunder Roy v. Sotakant Roy,"

On referring to Sutherland's Full Bench Rulings p. 75 at p. 77, I find that the Court decided that "the claimant who is granddaughter of Issur Chunder Roy cannot inherit any share of the estate."

The claimant's suit was dismissed, but there is an observation that "she is entitled to maintenance and nothing more." It is only an obiter dictum, and even that is with reference to granddaughter and not to grandson. So the authority quoted does not support the statement.

The learned advocate for the respondent referred to the case reported in V. Tatayya v. G. Rama Krishnamma (6) where the learned Judges Benson and Krishnaswami Iyer, JJ., upheld the gift of a very small portion of land inherited by a Hindu daughter from her father, made at the time of performing her father's sradha ceremony on the occasion of a peculiarly holy event among Hindus (the pushkaram at Rajahmundry occurring once in 12 years). Gifts made for similar spiritual benefit of the last male holder have been held to be valid by the Privy Council in the case reported in Sardar Singh v. Kunj Behari Lal (7) where their Lordships approved of the decision in Tatayya v. Rama Krishnamma (6). But I fail to see how those cases really help the contention raised by the learned advocate for the respondent in the preseut case. On the other hand there is some authority against the contention of the respondent. In Rajagopalachariar v. Sami Reddi (8), Devadoss, J., held that:

"under Hindu Law a daughter who inherits the property of her father is not entitled to alienate the same for the purpose of getting one of her sons married."

At p. 224 (of 50 M. L. J.) this is what the learned Judge observed:

"The question therefore arises whether a limited owner is entitled to charge the reversion with a debt contracted for the marriage of her son. No authority is shown for the position that a mother could alienate the property inherited from her own father for the purpose of getting one of her sons married. Mr. Viswanatha Ayyar's contention is that there is a moral obligation to get her son married and therefore she is entitled to borrow for the purpose of getting her son married. There is no obligation under the Hindu Law on the part of a mother to get any of her sons married. The case of a daughter stands on a different footing altogether. It is one of the duties of the father to get his daughter married. In the case of a mother there is no obligation at all to get any of her sons married by borrowing money on the security of the property inherited by her from her father. In Rustome Lall v. Lalla Ganpat Lal (2), the alienation by the mother was held to be good on the ground that the father was too poor to provide the marriage of the daughter, and the mother was obliged to find the money for celebrating the marriage of the daughter. This is quite in consonance with the principle of Hindu Law that a daughter should be married before she comes of age, and it is the duty of the father to see that she is married. If the father is too poor to do his duty, the mother could under the circumstances alienate her property for the purpose of getting her girl married. This would not support the contention of the respondent that the mother could also do the same thing for the son."

The learned advocate for the respondent rightly pointed out that this decision of the learned Judge Devadoss, J. was reversed on appeal in Srinivasaraghavachariar v. Rajagopalachariar (9). The decision of the appellate Court, however, proceeded on the ground of estop-pel on the part of the plaintiff, the reversioner. The appellate Court did not consider the question of Hindu Law discussed by the learned Judge. The learned advocate for the respondent referred me to certain Hindu Law texts under which poor relations and other dependent members, whom a person used to maintain as being morally bound to do so, would after his death, be legally entitled to the maintenance from his heirs, provided he left sufficient property. He drew my attention tc Chap.11 of Sirkar's Hindu Law, where the text of Manu and Brahaspathi are quoted. The text of Manu is to the following effect:

"The father, the mother, the Guru, (an elderly relation worthy of respect), a wife, an offspring, poor dependents, a guest and a religious mendicant, are declared to be the group of persons who are to be maintained."

Elsewhere Manu has declared that:

"the aged mother and father, the chaste wife, and an infant child, must be maintained even by doing hundred misdeeds;"

Manu cited in Mitakshara II, 177. The case, therefore, of the aged mother and father, the chaste wife and infant child, stands on a different "footing from the poor dependents, a guest and a religious mendicant" mentioned in the text quoted. Bhrahaspathi's text is to the following effect:

"A widow inheriting her husband's estate should honour with food and presents (for their benefit) the husband's paternal uncle (and the like) venerable elderly relations, daughter's sons, sister's son and maternal uncle as well as aged and helpless persons, guests and females of the family."

In Vyavahara Madhaviyam, the text is translated as follows:

,'Let the widow honour the paternal uncles, preceptors, daughters'. sons and sister's sons of her husband, his maternal uncles, the old and the helpless, and the guests with food and drink: Setlur, Vol. 1, p. 389."

One is inclined to ask whether the above provisions are not merely advisory relating to moral duties, or whether they are legal duties which could be enforced in a Court of law. The reference to guests and helpless elderly persons would seem to indicate the former. As remarked by the Privy Council in the case reported in Balwant Singh v. Rani Kishori (10), at p. 285:

"Old Hindu Law text books and commentaries are apt to mingle moral and religious considerations not being positive laws, with rules intended for positive laws:"

see also the remarks of the Privy Council in "the-only-son-adoption case" reported in Sri Balusu Gurulingaswami v. Sri Balusu Ramalakshmamma (11), at p. 415.

In Mayne's Hindu Law S. 624, the passage from the judgment of the Privy Council in the case reported in Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavali Venkata Narainappah (12) at p. 550 is quoted:

"for religious or charitable purposes or those which are supposed to conduce for the spiritual welfare of her husband, she has a larger power of disposition than that which she possesses for purely worldly purposes; to support an alienation for the last she must show necessity."

In Trevelyan's Hindu Law it is mentioned at p. 206 that:

"an heir is legally bound to provide, out of the estate which descends to him, maintenance of such persons as the person from whom he inherits is legally or morally bound to support"

At pp. 463 and 466, the learned author notes certain matters as proper objects for the alienation of the property by a Hindu widow one of which is:

"to provide for the maintenance of dependent members of her family, whom her husband or other last full owner (as the case may be) was legally or morally bound to support, and for their marriages or other necessary religious ceremonies, on a reasonable scale having regard to the amount of the property and the position of the family."

At p. 205 it is pointed out that:

"grandsons have not as such, any right to be maintained by their grandfather, but apparently they have a right to be maintained out of his property if unable to maintain themselves, and granddaughters must be so maintained until marriage."

My attention has not been drawn to any reported case in which any Court has decreed maintenance to a daughter's son against the estate of the maternal grandfather in the hands of his widow (maternal grandmother) i. e., widow of the last male holder. As regards the texts quoted:

"Their tone is only preceptive, and the injunctions they contain are rather of ethical than of legal obligation," so far as daughter's sons are concerned. In the case before me there is the further circumstance that the plaintiff's father is a pleader possessed of sufficient property to maintain the plaintiff.

As regards the contention raised by the learned advocate for the respondent that the widow was bound to maintain "dependent members" as observed by the learned author (Sirkar Sastri) in his

Hindu Law, that principle would apply only to persons who were actually residing with the last male holder and were in fact dependent on him. In the present case as I already remarked, it is not anybody's case that during the lifetime of the last male holder Lakshmayya, the plaintiff and defendant 3, or even their mother Subbamma were dependent of Lakshmayya in the sense described above. They were all living with Subbamma's husband in his family and, therefore, that principle has no application to the present case. Again there is the significant statement made by the District Munsif in para. 8 of his judgment, viz., that:

"the plaintiff's father is a pleader practising in this Court and it is admitted that he has sufficient property to maintain his sons."

In these circumstances, I do not think that any legal grounds are shown justifying defendant 2, in selling a portion of the lands belonging to the estate of defendant 1, to meet the expenses of the plaintiff's maintenance, upanayanam and marriage. The cases that decide that an indigent daughter, though married, is entitled to be maintained from her father's estate, in case her husband's estate is not able to maintain her, are not really relevant to the point.

The daughter's son is not a member of the last male holder's family, he belongs to the family of the daughter's husband. Nor could the daughter's son in the present case, be said to be a dependent member of the last male holder's family. Therefore the last male holder was not bound to maintain the daughter's son, and on his death his estate in the hands of his widow is not liable for the maintenance etc., of the daughter's sons. The Patna High Court in the case reported Mt. Narainbali Kumri v. Ramdhari Singh (13) decided, that "outside Bengal, expenses for marriage of daughter's daughter whose father's father is alive and is in a position to arrange for the marriage, do not constitute such a legal necessity as will bind the estate left by a maternal grandfather."

The widow could not by her own voluntary act in bringing the daughter's son, the plaintiff, to her own house, contend that he is a dependent member and then claim to alienate part of the estate for expenses incurred in connexion with him. We have here no 'purpose connected with the husband's spiritual welfare'; nor, having regard to the circumstances of the plaintiff in relation to his father's wealth and position, have we to consider any moral claim on the last male holder's estate, which could be said to have assumed the form of legal obligation attached to the estate when the estate descended from the last male holder to defendant 2.

Defendant 2 was naturally anxious, after the death of her only daughter, to have the daughter's sons (plaintiff and defendant 3) live with her. One can understand her conduct in that respect. One can understand also her anxiety to start her daughter's son well in life by giving him proper education, etc. But I am bound to administer the law as I find it. Under Hindu Law, as at present administered, I do not feel justified in upholding the right claimed on behalf of a Hindu widow to alienate a portion of the estate for the purpose of the maintenance, education, upanayanam and marriage of her daughter's son, when his father is admitted to have sufficient property to do so himself.

The result is one which I should like to avoid if possible. The daughter's sons are the reversioners to this estate, and would be entitled to possession on the death of defendant 2 even now. The debts were incurred for the benefit of the plaintiff. The plaintiff's elder brother, defendant 3, has signed the agreement which preceded the sale and is the writer of the sale deed in favour of defendant 1. Defendant 3 is surely bound by the sale deed. If the plaintiff had not been a minor at the time, most probably he too would have joined in the agreement and the sale; but his minority at the time has practically furnished him with a ground for impugning the sale deed, though, as already remarked he was the person benefited by the same. The grandsons may often find the estate of their grandfather more useful to them for purposes connected with their education, etc. and they may not be fully benefited when the estate comes to them when they are old. But those are not matters by which I should be guided when I am called upon to apply principles of Hindu law as administered by Courts. I am therefore driven to the conclusion that the alienation in question is not binding on the plaintiff. Some arguments were advanced by the learned advocate for the respondent about the details of some of the debts mentioned in the sale deed. I, however, accept the findings of both the lower Courts that the debts were substantially incurred for the purposes mentioned by me.

I reverse the decision of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the District Munsif. The declaration will be granted that the alienation by defendant 2 in favour of defendant 1 evidenced by Ex. 4, dated 20th November 1918, would not be binding on the plaintiff and other reversioners of defendant 2's husband, late Lakshmayya, besides defendant 3 and other persons claiming under him. As regards defendant 3 and persons claiming under him, the same will be binding. In the particular circumstances, I award no costs to the plaintiff in any of the Courts; but I direct the parties to bear their own costs in all the Courts.

Appeal No. 108 of 1921, Decided on 18th July 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, Bellary, in Original Suit No. 3 of 1920.

(a) Religious Endowments Act (20 of 1863), S 3—Public officer means public officer under Government of Madras.

The words "public officer" must, having regard to the other sections of this Act and to the provisions of Regulation 7 of 1817, mean public officer under the Government of Madras and not a public officer anywhere even outside British India, or a public officer outside the control of the Government of Madras. [P 294 C 1]

(b) Religious Endowments Act (20 of 1863), S. 3—Essentials for invoking S. 3, laid down.

Before S. 3 can be invoked, there should be two conditions satisfied, namely, that not only Regulation 7 of 1817 should be applicable, but also that at the time of the passing of the Act the nomination of the trustee, manager or superintendent should be vested in or exercised by the Government or any public officer, or such nomination should be subject to the confirmation of the Government or public officer. [P 294 C 1]

(c) Religious Endowments Act (20 of 1863), S. 3—To authorize temple committee to appoint trustee or to file suit for accounts case must come under S. 3.

To give jurisdiction to a temple committee to appoint a trustee or to file a suit requiring accounts from the trustee or directing transfer of property to trustee appointed by them, it must be shown that the case fell under S. 3. [P 294 C 2, P 295 C 1]

P. R. Ganapathi Aiyar—for Appellants.

V. S. Narasimhachari—for Respondents.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J. — This appeal arises out of a suit filed by the temple committee of Kudligi for a declaration that the suit temple which they say was called Hude Kampli Devaru is subject to the control of the plaintiffs, for directing the defendants to return to the manager who they allege was appointed by them, the properties of the temple, for accounts and other reliefs. The contesting defendants deny the plaintiffs' claim. Their case was that Kampli Devaru had no temple, that they had no concern with Kampli Devaru temple at Hude and the inam, that the right of appointing the pujari is in Mesa Naiks, that Kampli Devaru idol is permanently in Mysore territory and that the Court has no jurisdiction.

The suit was instituted in 1911. It came up twice to the High Court, as the suit was decided on preliminary questions. The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit, after both orders of remand, has found that Kampli Devaru is a Narasimha Saligrama image, which is the deity of the Mesa Naik caste, that it has no permanent shrine, that it is always on tour and that it has a temple and inam at Hude. He finds that the temple committee has or had no jurisdiction over this temple, that the temple was never under the control of the Board of Revenue and that the power of appointment of trustees was at least from 1800 to 1890 exercised by the Mysore Government and that no dharamakarta was ever appointed or confirmed by the Board of Revenue and dismissed the suit. Hence the appeal.

It is clear from the evidence that in 1810 the previous trustee or pujari was dismissed by the Dewan of Mysore and a fresh trustee was appointed. The order of the Dewan is on p. 30, Ex-P (printed documents in appeal No. 186 of 1914). It refers to the dismissal of the first pujari's grandson, Dosa Gopaya and the appointment of Dasaya. Then it proceeds as follows :

"In future if to instal the patta of Gosi God, Kampli God, or any other God, they should come and inform you as well as the Sircar of it; a hachada and paga should be presented from the Sircar and when the relatives come and inform, you should have the patta installed ; when you instal patta you shall receive the najar usually payable, therefore, by them to the Sircar. When making the patta installation, careful enquiry should be held in the presence of respectable persons of the place and after a decision hachada and paga should be presented from the Sircar and the patta should be conferred."

This is dated 28th March 1810. The first person appointed continued in office until 1853. His son was the second pujari from 1853 to 1874. It appears that in accordance with the order of 1810, he was recognized as the trustee and the customary honours were given to him. Then his son Obaya was the pujari from 1874 to 1879 and was succeeded by his elder brother from 1879 to 1907. In 1907, disputes arose as to the successor. Several members of the community did not want the sons of Peddanna to be appointed, owing to the alleged immorality of their mother and there were various proceedings, civil and criminal, in the Courts of Mysore. The Subordinate Judge has found on the evidence that for nearly a century no sort of control was exercised by the Board of Revenue, or by any officials in British India, as regards the management of the temple and the appointment of trustees, that till 1890 the Mysore Government officials were informed of the persons who were selected by the community as trustees and they were recognizing them, that in 1890 the Dewan thought the Mysore Government did not concern itself with this endowment, as it was not one of the temples which had any grant from or subject to the control of the Mysore Government. Therefore, the question for determination in this case is whether on these facts which the Subordinate Judge has found and which we see no reason to differ from. the temple committee have got any right in the matter. The Subordinate Judge has given reasons for holding that the temple committee has no right. He deals with this question in para. 25 of the judgment onwards. We think that the decision of the Subordinate Judge on this point is right.

Act 20 of 1863 was an Act passed for the purpose of enabling the Government of India to divest itself of the management of religious endowments. It begins by saying :

"Whereas it is expedient to relieve the Boards of Revenue, and the Local Agents in the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal, and the Presidency of Fort St. George, from the duties imposed upon them by Regulation 19, 1810 of the Bengal Code and Regulation 7, 1817 of the Madras Code, so far as those duties embrace the superintendence of lands granted for the support of mosques or Hindu temples, and for other religious uses, the appropriation of endowments made for the maintenance of such religious establishments, the repair and preservation of buildings connected therewith, and the appointment of trustees or managers thereof ; or involve any connexion with the management of such religious establisments."

Section 3 enacts that :

"In the case of every mosque, temple or other religious establishment, to which the provisions of either of the regulations specified in the preamble to this Act are applicable, and nomination of the trustee, manager or superintendent thereof, at the time of the passing of this Act, is vested in, or may be exercised by the Government or any public officer, or in which the nomination of such trustee, manager or superintendent shall be subject to the confirmation, of the Government or any public officer, the Local Government shall as soon as possible after the passing of this Act, make special provision as hereinafter provided."

The provisions are, inter alia, for the appointment and constitution of temple committees as provided for by S. 7. S. 4 enacts that:

"in the case of every such mosque, temple or other religious establishment which, at the time of the passing of this Act, shall be under the management of any trustee, manager or superintendent, whose nomination shall not vest in, nor be exercised by, nor be subject to the confirmation of the Government or any public officer, the Local Government shall, as soon as possible after the passing of this Act. transfer to such trustee, manager or superintendent, all the landed or other property which, at the time of the passing of this Act, shall be under the superintendence or in the possession of the Board of Revenue or any local agent and belonging to such mosque, temple or other religious establishment, except such property as is hereinafter provided.".

and on such handing over, it enacts that the power and responsibility of the Board shall cease. It has been found by the Subordinate Judge, and we accept the finding that the Board of Revenue never exercised any control over this ndowment, nor was the power of appointment of trustee, manager or superintendent vested in or exercised by the Government of Madras, or by any public officer under the Government of Madras. The contention of Mr. Ganapathi Aiyar for plaintiffs is that a "public officer", does not mean a public officer, under the Government of Madras, but means any public officer, wherever a public officer may exercise his function. He goes to the length of arguing that a public officer outside British India would also be a person in the contemplation of S. 3 and that any institution, the appointment of whose trusteeship is vested in or controlled by any public officer, whether in British India or outside, would fall under Act 20 of 1863 and give jurisdiction to the temple committee appointed under S. 7. I am unable to agree with this contention. I find it difficult to see how the Act can apply, so as to give jurisdiction to the Board of Revenue or the temple committee, in cases where a public officer subject to the control of another Government, presidency or province has been exercising the powers of of appointment or control. The words "public officer" I think must, having regard to the other sections of this Act, and to the provisions of Reg. 7 of 1817, mean public officer under the Government of Madras and not a public officer anywhere, even outside British India, or a public officer outside the control of the Government of Madras. I have already referred to the preamble and it refers to cases to which Reg. 7 of 1817 applied; and before S. 3 can be invoked, there should be two conditions satisfied, namely, that not only the Reg. 7 of 1817 should be applicable, but also that at the time of the passing of the Act the nomination of the trustee, manager or superintendent should be vested in, or exercised by, the Government or any public officer, or such nomination should be subject to the confirmation of the Government or public officer.

In the preamble to Reg. 7 of 1817, we find reference to the provinces immediately dependent on the Presidency of Fort. St. George. S. 2, vests in the Board of Revenue the general superintendence of all endowments, etc., in the several provinces dependent on the Presidency of Fort St. George. S. 3 says that it is the duty of the Board of Revenue to take measures to ensure that religious establishments are properly maintained and that other trusts are properly carried out. S. 7 enables the Board of Revenue to have local agents. S. 8 says that the Collector shall be one of the local agents and powers will be given to the Government to appoint other local agents if it so desires. S. 11 says that the local agent shall report to the Board of Revenue the vacancies and casualties as they may occur and other particulars as to whether the line of descent is by hereditary right or by election. S. 12 refers to cases where the nomination is vested in Government or public officer and S. 13 says what is to be done on the receipt of the report. It is clear from a perusal of the various sections referred to that the Madras Reg. 7 of 1817 was confined to the Government and territories administered by the Government of Fort St. George, and the "public officer" there was a public officer, subject to that Government and not any public officer, and in construing S. 3, I think it is clear that we must take "public officer" there to be a public officer who was exercising his functions under Reg. 7 of 1817.

Section 4 simply says that where S. 3 does not apply, i. e., where the Government would not have any power to transfer the management to local committees, any endowment which then belonged to such trusts shall be made over to the trustee in charge of the endowment and the Board shall divest itself of all concern in the management. The scheme of this Act, therefore, is that in all cases where Reg. 7 of 1817 applied, or in cases where the appointment of trustee was either made by the Government of Madras or one of its officers, or where the confirmation of such appointment had to be made by Government or by its officers, such powers were transferred to temple committees; in all other cases, property which was subject to the endowment was transferred to the then legally entitled trustee and the Board of Revenue had no other control, over such property. It is therefore clear from the scheme of this Act that to give jurisdiction to temple committees, they must show that the case falls under S. 3, otherwise it is difficult to see how a temple committee can either appoint a trustee or file a suit like the present one, requiring property to be handed over to the trustee whom they had no power to appoint. I am, therefore, of opinion that the decision of the Subordinate Judge is right as the temple committee had no right to institute this suit.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs of respondents 1, 5 and 6.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of Original Suit No. 18 of 1925 on the file of the Sub-Court of Tellichery, which was a suit for an account of the management of the Payyanur Devaswam by defendants 1 to 6 in their capacity as uralers from 1909, for the recovery of the sum that might be found due as a result of the accounts from the defendants personally and from their family property and for an injunction restraining them from interfering with the management of the devaswam by plaintiff 11 who was appointed samudayi by plaintiffs 1 to 10. The claim in respect of plaintiff 11 was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge, but the relief in respect of the account was decreed. Defendant 1 filed the appeal. During the pendency of the appeal he died and his successor, the present karnavan of the Thazhekkat mana, has been added as his legal representative, appellant 2.

The suit devaswam is known as "Grama Kshetram" i. e. village temple, and is a famous temple of North Malabar. It was originally managed by the village council consisting of the karnavans of 16 Nambudri manas and 15 Poduval Karalars, 10 of them being Mootha Poduvals and 5 Elaya Poduvals. Ten Poduval families of the village are each entitled to send one Mootha Poduval to the temple council, the nominees being the karnavans thereof. Five of the said families have the further privilege of sending their representatives, the senior anandravans, to the same council who would be styled as "Elaya Poduvals." The first seven plaintiffs in this suit are Mootha Poduvals and plaintiffs 8 to 10 are Elaya Poduvals. Plaintiff 11 also claimed to be an Elaya Poduval. After the suit was filed plaintiff 4 became a Mootha Poduval after having performed the Moopu Thozhal ceremony and his place as Elaya Poduval devolved upon plaintiff 12. Defedants 1 to 6 are karnavans of six of the Nambudri manas and they are admitted to be uralers. Defendants 7 to 13, are, some of them, Mootha Poduvals and some Elaya Poduvals have not performed the Moopu Thozal and Elama Thozal ceremonies. The plaintiffs claimed that defendants 1 to 6 should render them an account in respect of the management of the devaswam from 1909. The defendants pleaded that defendant 1 acquired the hereditary right of samudayam by prescription. They also pleaded that there were seven other manas who have co-uraima right in the temple and the suit is bad on account of their non-joinder. They denied the right of plaintiff 11 to manage the temple and the liability of defendant 1 to render an account. As already mentioned, the Subordinate Judge found that the appointment of plaintiff 11 could not be upheld and dismissed that portion of the suit. In appeal the appellant urged several objections; (1) that the karnvans of the Tazhekkat mana are perpetual and hereditary samudayis, (2) that the suit is had for non-joinder on account of not having impleaded at least two Nambudris, namely, the karnavans of Thavath and Thattiyeri manas, (3) that a suit for accounts by a uraler against a co-uraler without an allegation of breach of trust or a threatened breach of trust is not maintainable, (4) that the tarwad of defendant 1 is not liable for the misfeasance of defendant 1 unless the tarwad is in possession of the assets of defendant 1 or unless it is shown that the tarwad was directly benefited by getting possession of the funds belonging to the trust, and (5) that, in any event, as defendant 1 became karnavan only in December 1922 the relief for an account should not extend beyond the period from December 1922 to October 1924 when defendant 1 died.

There have been continuous litigation between the Poduval karalars on the one hand and the Nambudri Tirumumpus (uralars) on the other for a number of years in respect of this devaswam. For a long time the karnavans of Thazekkat mana were claiming to be the perpetual samudayis of the devaswam under a document which has been found not to be genuine and latterly defendant 1 has been asserting the right by reason of adverse possession. Though some of the Nambudri manas became extinct, attempts to revive some of the extinct manas by adoptions into those manas seem to have been made. One such attempt in respect of the Tayara Mangalath mana seems not to have been questioned and to have been recognized even by the Poduvals. The karnavan of that mana is defendant 2 in the present case. In respect of two other manas, the Thavath and Thattiyeri manas, similar adoptions were set up and the persons so affiliated into these manas having married female members of the Thazhekkat family were allowed to take part in the management of the trust. They were joined as parties in Exs. 1, 2, and 3 which were kanom deed and in Ex. 11, a kuzhikanom deed, and in fact wherever the document did not stand in the name of defendant 1 alone but in the name of several uralers they seem to have been allowed to come in. But the Poduvals never admitted their rights. On one occasion while not admitting their rights, the Poduvals impleaded these two individuals as defendants. That was a suit for defining the ceremonies which a karnavan has to undergo for becoming a Mootha Poduval and for an injunction against the uralers. The judgments in connexion with that litigation are Exs. HH, JJ and KK (AAA being the decree). It came up on second appeal to the High Court. In another litigation the suit was by some of the uralers impleading the karnavans of the Thavath and Thattiyeri manas as defendants. The other defendants pleaded that these two had no uraima right and the District Munsiff found against the right (Ex. 7). On appeal by them the Subordinate Judge of North Malabar found that there was a usage according to which their adoption into the Nambudri families of Thavath and Thattiyeri manas should be recognized as valid and allowed the appeal (Ex. 8). We are now invited to consider the question of the validity of the adoption of these two individuals into their respective manas aud if we find them valid, to dismiss the suit on the ground of non-joinder. It is even suggested that we should first implead them as parties so as to avoid the inconvenience of deciding the question behind their back. We may at once say that we do not see any reason to follow the latter course and as we think that the case can be disposed of on other grounds, we do not feel it necessary to decide on the status of these two individuals. They have given evidence as D. Ws. 4 and 9 showing that they were recognized. Ex. DD is another judgment in a suit in which they joined as plaintiffs, but nothing was decided. In our opinion this question of non-joinder among other questions in the case need not be disposed of in this suit as we think that the suit can be decided on simple grounds.

It is contended for the appellant that a mere suit for accounts against a trustee by a co-trustee without an allegation of breach of trust or threatened breach of trust is not maintainable. Para. 5 of the plaint alleges that the uralers :

> "have neither increased funds nor acquired property to the devaswam . . . . . On demand being made of defendants 1 to 6 to render accounts and to hand over to the devaswam the money on hand for the period the uralers exclusively conducted the management without the junction of the karalars, they have not done so. They have not even sent a reply for the registered notice sent to them."

Defendants 2 to 6 say that for a long time, i. e., from the time when the temple was restored after its destruction during the invasion of Tippu Sultan, defendant 1's mana was practically looking after the management and conducting the affairs of the temple and therefore they are not liable. The Subordinate Judge has found that defendants 2 to 6 have never taken part in the management of the devaswam though they are nominally uralers. There is a general allegation in para. 5 of the plaint that :

"As defendants 1 to 6 and their predecessors . . . . . appropriated the devaswam funds to their tarwads, the said defendants 1 to 6 are liable to the devaswam even in the capacity of karnavans of their manas."

This is very general allegation for the purpose of making not only defendants 1 to 6 personally liable but also liable in the capacity of karnavans. It is not an allegation made for the purpose of making out a breach of trust or a threatened breach of trust justifying a suit for an account. The allegation is too general and vague and does not relate to any particular period or particular amount and it is not clear whether any one of the defendants is charged or their predecessors are charged with the appropriation of funds. It is true that it has been held by this Court that a suit by a trustee against a co-trustee does not require the sanction of the Advocate General of the Collector under S. 92, Civil P. C.: vide Appanna Poricha v. Narasing Poricha (1), approving Meenakshi Achi v. Somasundaram Pillay (2). But it was not decided in those cases that any suit by a trustee against a co-trustee on any cause of action whatever is maintainable. In the present case the cause of action is said to be the appointment as samudayi of plaintiff 11 on 14th June 1924, by a Yogam consisting of the plaintiffs and defendants 7, 8 and 9 and other karalars and the obstruction of the plaintiff 11. The appointment of plaintiff 11 was not upheld by the Subordinate Judge. The question arises whether there is any other ground for maintaining a suit by the other plaintiffs against the defendants. In the Full Bench decision in Appanna Poricha v. Narasing Poricha (1), the right of the plaintiff as co-trustee was denied. The plaintiff was in possession of the mutt only; but the defendants got possession of the lands and the plaintiff had to incur expenses in connexion with the management of the mutt out of his own pocket. He had therefore to sue for a declaration that he was a co-trustee entitled to joint possession of the lands belonging to the mutt, for reimbursement of the moneys spent by him, for a scheme for the future management and incidentally for an account. In Meenakshi Achi v. Somasundaram Pillay (2) also, the suit was for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to share in the management and for joint possession of the trust properties, the plaintiff's right being denied by the defendants. In fact there was an alternative claim in that suit that the plaintiff was solely entitled to the management.

The respondent also relied on unreported judgments of Wallis, C. J., and Oldfield, J., in Appeals Nos. 323 and 368 of 1919. In Appeal No. 323 the parties were entitled to possession of the properties because his turn fell in. In Appeal No. 368 also the facts were similar. I do not see how these cases can help the respondents. In the present case there is no allegation of any specific breach of trust or threatened breach of trust on the part of the uralers so as to justify an apprehension on the part of the plaintiffs that they would also be held liable for the breach on the ground that they did not take proper action against their co-trustee who was himself not guilty of the breach and it therefore justifies an action by one co-trustee against another to prevent such a breach : vide Lewin on Trusts, p. 304, and Underhill, Edn. 7 397. These authorities relate to private trusts. But apparently the same principles would apply to public trusts also. In the case of public trusts one mode of investigation provided in England into the conduct of one trustee at the instance of a co-trustee is by applying to the public trustee for an investigation and audit of the conditions and accounts of the trust : vide Art. 441, 28 Hals. 217. Even in the case of a public trust it is said that any single trustee, when aware that his co-trustees are about to commit a breach of trust, may apply to the Court to prevent it : vide Tudor on Charities and Mortmain, p. 249. Where a breach has been committed no doubt he can also sue. Where his own position as co-trustee is denied he can also sue. But a mere suit asking the defendants to render an account of their management without any allegation of breach of trust which has been committed or is about to be committed does not seem to be maintainable and to hold that such a suit is maintainable will be to allow any trustee wantonly to sue his co-trustees for accounts. The moment the litigation in respect of one period is finished another litigation in respect of another period will commence and so on ad infinitum. I do not think the policy of the law is to allow such a state of things. In Jamnadas Gordhan Das v. Damodaradas Chunilal (3), it was held by the Bombay High Court that a trustee cannot be regarded as accountable to a co-trustee and all that a co-trustee can require is that he should have inspection of all the papers, documents and accounts relating to the trust estate in the hands of his co-trustee. We agree with this decision. We think that a suit for a bare account which is the character of the present suit after the right of plaintiff 11 was negatived without any further allegation is not maintainable. On this ground we allow the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Memorandum of Objections.

The respondent filed a memorandum of objections questioning the finding of the Subordinate Judge about the validity of the appointment of plaintiff 11. When the appeal was argued, it was argued on the footing that the finding of the Subordinate Judge about plaintiff 11 should stand. No indication was given by the respondents that they proposed to question that finding. Nor was any argument addressed on the memorandum of objection. Apart from this we think the finding is right. Defendant 2 having succeeded to the karnavanship of his mana, ipso facto becomes a uralar, no ceremonies being necessary for the Nambudris. It is for the Poduvals to give notice to the uralers and to find out who the uralers are at their risk. The notice to the predecessors of defendant 2 ceases to operate with his death. The memorandum of objections is dismissed with costs.

Appeals Nos. 33 to 36 of 1926, Decided on 29th January 1929, from decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Kistna, in Original Suit No. 11 of 1925.

(a) Limitation Act, Art. 134— Transfer under Art. 134 must be valid transfer—Time runs from such valid transfer.

(b) Transfer of Property Act, S. 51 — Principle underlying S. 51 explained.

The main principle of S. 51 is that a person must show that he believed that he was entitled to the land in such a way that he is not to be disturbed, whether it is a sale or perpetual lease he claims under : Attorney General v. Davey 19 Beav 521 ; Attorney General v. Prattyaman 19 Beav 538, Rel. on.; 6 *M.  (c) Part performance—Doctrine of part performance is only used to complete intended transfer—It is not operative against third persons.

The doctrine of part-performance is only ussd to complete an intended transfer between the transferrer and the transferee, where there is no other objection to complete the transaction ; it cannot be used to complete a transaction against a third person such as the idol of a temple of a cestui que trust or a minor against whom it cannot be regarded as operative. [P 301 C 2]

(d) Evidence Act, S. 115 — Fraud committed upon creditors — Judgment-debtor cannot claim ownership of house (subject of fraud) or equitable interest in sums spent for building it.

Where the creditors have been successfully defeated by showing that the attached house did not belong to the judgment-debtor, the judgment-debtor cannot claim either the ownership in the whole house and site or the equitable interest to the extent of the sums spent in building the house. (e) Limitation Act, Art. 134 — Property belonging to idol transferred—Rent reserved being only eight annas — Such rent is not valuable consideration.

P. R. Ganapathi Iyer and A. Venkachalam—for Appellants.

G. Lakshmanna and B. T. M. Raghavachari—for Respondent.

Ramesam, J.—These appeals arise out of the same original suit, O. S. No. 61 of 23, on the file of the Principal Subordinate Judge's Court of Masulipatam. The plaintiff sues as the trustee of Sri Veeranjaneyaswamuluvaru temple at Gudivada. Defendant 1 is in possession of item 1, defendant 2 is in possession of item 2 and defendants 3 and 4 are in possession of items 3 and 4, these being the four items which are the subject matter of the suit. The plaintiff's adoptive father Kameswara Pakayya and his father one Brahmaraju, endowed certain lands belonging to them in Gudivada for the purposes of the temple. They built the temple in 1886 and conducted it for three years. In 1889 they executed a gift deed Ex. A, by which they endowed the suit land for the purposes of the temple, making themselves dharmakarthas. The document shows that some portions were intended to be built upon. A thatched house was built upon item 1 in 1893. Afterwards, some time in 1905 it was replaced by a tiled house: vide D. W. 1. The evidence shows that from the beginning there was an intention on the part of Brahmaraju and Kameswara Rao to give item 1 to defendant 1 who is the brother's daughter of Kameswara Rao. A house was built upon item 2 in 1892. The evidence shows that it was intended originally for a sister of Brahmaraju, defendant 2 being her grandson. Item 3 was given to defendants 3 and 4 by means of a rent letter Ex. V (c), which purports to grant a perpetual lease of that item reserving an annual rent of Rs. 2. This was in March 1913. Item 4 is a vacant site placed in the possession of defendants 3 and 4 by a letter Exs. V (b), dated March 1910. It appears that there was a scheme suit in respect of the temple, and after that suit was disposed of the present plaintiff filed this suit to recover the various items from the respective defendants in possession. The lower Court granted a decree against the defendants and each of the defendants has filed a separate appeal. Appeal 33 is by defendant 2, Appeal 34, is by defendant 3, Appeal 35 is by defendant 4 and Appeal 36 is by defendant 1.

Each of the items will now be taken up for consideration. In the case of item 1, as I have already stated, a tiled house was built upon it in 1905. In 1913 Kameswara Rao applied to the chairman of the union to transfer the house to the name of defendant 1. In that document he says:

"It had been assigned by my father himself to my sister's son Boddapati Ponniah (husband of the said Ambamma) . . . The said house and site stand nominally in my name in the accounts and the tax is being paid through me and the entry in the accounts stands in my name but neither I nor my heirs, have any right in respect to it. It belongs to the said Boddapathi Ambamma herself."

The chairman ordered the change of name by an endorsement Ex. 1 (b), on 26th January 1914. There was no registered instrument transferring the right to the house to defendant 1 nor is it possible to regard such possession as defendant 1 and her husband had up to 1913 as adverse to Brahmararaju or his son Kameswara Rao. Under Art. 134, Lim Act, assuming for the present that the article applies to the case of a temple, there must be a transfer and time runs only from the date of transfer. This means that there must at least be a valid transfer between the transferrer and the transferee though it might not be operative as against a trust or any other person. Here we have nothing of the kind. The present suit which was filed in 1923 is within 12 years from Ex. 1 (b). It cannot be said that the transfer was made for any necessity binding upon the trust. The result is this appeal must fail so far as item 1 is concerned.

Taking up item 2, we find from the account books Exs. 3 and 3 (a) that some money was spent on the construction of a house by defendant 2's father who was then employed elsewhere and used to remit money to Brahmararaju and Kameswara Rao. The genuineness of these accounts is attacked by the respondents but we think it is unnecessary to say anything on this question. Assuming they are genuine and assuming that some money was spent by defendant 2's father and by defendant 2's grandmother: vide Ex. 4 series, on the construction and upkeep of the house we find that some time prior to 1906 the house was attached by certain creditors of defendant 2 and then a claim petition was filed by Kameswara Rao claiming that the site belongs to him and the house was constructed by him and that defendant 2's father had nothing to do with the house. This claim petition was allowed. Obviously, the claim petition was instigated by defendant 2 himself. The creditors having been successfully defeated, it does not lie in the mouth of defendant 2 to say now that he possessed any kind of interest in the house after the order on the claim petition. He cannot claim either the ownership in the whole house and site or the equitable interest to the extent of the sums spent in building the house. In 1906 Ex. C was executed by Kameswara Rao in favour of defendant 2 in which these facts are set forth, and the house was purported to be transferred by the document. This document is registered and therefore there is no question of there being a valid transfer as between the transferrer and the transferee. The document reserves a rent of 8 annas a year payable to Sri Veeranjaneyaswamuluvaru and the transferee is to pay the Government revenue himself which comes to about 7 annas proportionately to the area of the site.

Now, by 1906 the town of Gudivada had altered. In 1886 it was a mere village. Some time about 1892 the District Munsiff's Court was opened and other public offices also have been existing there. A number of houses were built. As I have already said there was already a tiled house on item 2. It cannot be said that the only rent of 8 annas reserved in favour of the idol of the temple is a valuable consideration within the meaning of Art. 134. In Vidya Varuthi v. Baluswami Ayyar (1) it was observed by the Judicial Committee in respect of lands which were the subject matter of that case that an annual rent of Rs. 24 could not be regarded as a valuable consideration. In that case the land was six kulis in extent and the rent reserved was Rs. 24 at the rate of Rs. 4 a kuli. The permanent lessee afterwards sub-leased them for Rs. 1,250 In the present case on the footing that by the date of Ex. C the whole of the items belonged to the temple it cannot be said that a rent of 8 annas a year is other than a mere cloak to cover what was really intended to be a gift to defendant 2. Therefore, the terms of Art. 134 of the Act are not satisfied. The respondent argued that Art. 134 does not apply to a temple at all relying on the decision in Vidya Varuthi v. Baluswami Ayyar (1). That question has been very elaborately argued before us but we do not think it necessary to decide in this appeal whether Art. 134 applies generally to temples. The plaintiff's case is that there is a specific trust under Ex. A. It is argued that Art. 134 would apply. Though Art. 134 may apply to a specific trust for a temple, the other conditions are not satisfied here. Mr. Ganapathi Iyer appearing for the appellant argued at the end of the case that if Art. 134 does not apply Art. 144 may apply. But we think if the conditions were satisfied, Art. 134 is the proper article because we find there is a specific trust and if the conditions are not satisfied there is no limitation at all. On this ground the appeal in respect of item 2 fails.

The next item is item 3. A house was built upon this item and an account book was produced as Ex. 8 in respect of this item by defendant 3's husband. The evidence including even the plaintiff's evidence shows that defendant 3 was not a poor woman and however much Kameswara Rao wanted to help his daughters it does not follow that we must assume that defendant 3 was unable to incur the expense of building a house. We have no reason to suspect the genuineness of Ex. 8. It is true that defendant 4 does not appear to be a well-to-do lady ; but defendants 3 and 4 were acting together, their interests were never separated except in filing the appeals and even if one of them is not well-to-do we must find that defendants 3 and 4 were together able to incur the expenses of building a house on item 3. Ex. 8 shows that a sum of Rs. 1,470-15-0 was spent in building the house. There is no question of the title of defendants 3 and 4 in respec of this item being completed by prescription. The only question is whether we should not allow the value of the building in favour of the appellants before the plaintiff can get a decree. The respondent relied on three decisions of this Court Perumal Gramani v. Mahamad Kasim Sahib (2), Govindswami v. Ellinajammal (3) and Venkatappier v. Ramaswami Iyer (4), in which it has been held that the word "absolutely" in S. 51, Transfer of Property Act shows that the person entitled to the equity under that section must show that he believes he has absolute and not limited interest in the property. In the of course of the argument it was pointed out by my learned brother (Jackson, J.) that this section was based upon Act 11 of 1855 which applied only to cases governed by English Law. In that Act the words used are :

"If any person shall erect any building or make an improvement upon any lands held by him bona fide in the belief that he had an estate in fee simple or other absolute estate."

This shows that the main principle of this section is that a person must show that he believed that he was entitled to the land in such a way that he is not to be disturbed, whether it is a sale or perpetual lease he claims under. There are a number of English cases referred to before us in which tenants were held entitled to such improvements. I will only refer to one decision in Attorney General v. Davey (5), though this decision was reversed by the House of Lords on another point. Another is Attorney General v. Prattyaman (6), in which it was held that the lessee was entitled to the improvements though the lease was not actually completed. The case of a lease is therefore an a fortiori case. In Mahalatchmi Ammal v. Palani Chetti (7), and Kunhammad v. Narayanan Mussad (8), it was held that a tenant was entitled to improvements. A similar view was taken in Dattatraya Rayaji v. Shridhar Narayan (9), and Dattaji v Kalka (10), and two decisions of this Court, namely, Gopalakrishna Ayyar v. Suhirtha Theenathara (11), and Tharasi Ammal v. Solai Ammal (12), also take the same view. We prefer these cases to the other cases relied on by the respodnent and hold that before the plaintiff can eject defendant 3 he should pay to defendants 3 and 4 the present cost of the improvements effected on the site by way of the construction of the house. We direct the lower Court to estimate the cost of building the house now existing on the item. The plaintiff must pay the value of the improvements before taking possession of the house.

We now come to item 4. This item was placed in the possession of the appellants in March 1910; but there was no deed of transfer beycnd Ex. 5 (b) which is a mere letter and was not registered. Even Art. 144 cannot help the appellants so far as this item is concerned because the whole oral evidence does not show that anything was done upon this item so that there is not even adverse possession so far as this item is concerned. The appeal therefore fails in respect of item 4 also.

One argument is addressed by Mr. Ganapathi Ayyar, namely, that in the case of items 1, 3 and 4 though there is no registered instrument, as possession was given the doctrine of part performance as has been laid down in the Full Bench case in Vizagapatam Sugar Development Co. v. Muthurama Reddy (13) might be applied. But that doctrine is only used to complete an intended transfer between the transferrer and the transferee, where there is no other objection to complete the transaction. It has never been used to complete a transaction against a third person such as the idol of a temple or a cestui que trust or a minor against whom it could not be regarded as operative.

The result is Appeals Nos. 33 and 36 are dismissed with costs. In the lower Court, they will be liable only for the plaintiff's costs referable to the items separately. In Appeals Nos. 34 and 35 we call for a finding from the lower Court as to the present cost of the

v.

A. L. A. R. R. M. Arunachalam Chettiar—Defendant—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 88 of 1926, Decided on 19th September 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, Devakotta, in Appeal Suit No. 18 of 1925.

Madras Local Boards Act (14 of 1929). Ss. 235 and Sch. 10, R. 13—Union Board not validly constituted on date of suit—Union Board has no locus standi to maintain suit with regard to matters that vest in it under new Act.

The phrase "same Local Board" implies that there must have been a Local Board of the nature under the old Act, and since there was no Union Board under old Act, unless the Union Board was validly constituted on the date when particular suit was filed, the Union Board has no locus standi to maintain a suit in regard to matters which vest in it under the new Act. [P 302 C 2]

K. Bhashyam Iyengar—for Appellant.

V. Rajagopala Iyer—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The question for decision in this second appeal is whether the plaintiff has a right to sue. The plaintiff is the Union Board of Devakotta and sues to have it declared that the decision of the Survey Department that a certain plot of ground is the property of the defendant and is not public road vested in the plaintiff is a wrong decision, and for consequential reliefs. Both the lower Courts dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff has no locus standi to maintain it and the plaintiff appeals.

The decision of the Survey Officer was on 12th May 1920. The plaint was presented on 6th June 1921 and is in time, but the ground for the lower Court's decision is that on the date of the plaint there was no Union Board validly constituted in which the right of action vested, and therefore no Union Board which could validly maintain the suit. The party who represented before the Survey Officer the claim of the public to the plot was the Taluk Board. The question for decision is whether between the date of his decision and the date of the plaint the right of action which was vested in the Taluk Board on the date of the decision had validly passed to the present plaintiff.

The old Local Boards Act (5 of 1884) set up the classes of Local Boards, the District and the Taluk Board: see definition of "Local Board" in S. 2 (5). These under S. 27 were corporate bodies in whom public property could be vested. They could make contracts and sue and be sued. The Act also set out rules for the appointment of Panchayats, that is, bodies of persons constituted for a Union: see S. 3 (vi) in areas declared by the Act to be Unions, but these Panchayats were not incorporated Local Boards, nor was public landed property vested in them. The new Act 14 of 1920 sets up three classes of incorporated Local Boards, District Boards, Taluk Boards and Union Boards: see (S. 6). S. 60 thereof vests in the Union Board all public roads in its area. The Union Board of Devakotta, the present plaintiff, was constituted under this Act on 1st April 1922 (see Ex. CCC). Consequently it was not so constituted on the date of the plaint.

The appellant contends that the situation is saved by the transitory provisions attached to Act 14 of 1920, particularly Ss. 235, 237, 238 and Sch. 10, Rr. 4 and 13. S. 235 says :

"all property, all rights of whatever kind, used, enjoyed, or possessed by a Local Board as constituted under the Madras Local Boards Act of 1884 . . . . shall pass to the same Local Board as constituted under this Act."

Under that section, the right to sue which belonged to the Taluk Board under the old Act will pass to "the same Local Board as constituted under this Act." What is "the same Local Board?" It may be the Local Board which has the same designation or the Local Board which has the same jurisdiction. There is no indication which it means. But the use of the phrase "same Local Board" to my mind implies that there must have been a Local Board of that nature under the old Act. Under the old Act there was no Union Board, so that the section in my view cannot apply to Union Boards. There is nothing improbable in this. It is just as likely that the legislature intended during the transitory period to continue the machinery of the old Act in working as that it intended to introduce the machinery of the new Act before the new Union Boards were actually constituted and set up.

It is argued that R. 13, Sch. 10, itself contemplates that the old Union Panchayats should be erected into new Union Boards during the transitory period, but I do not so read the section. Whatever it may have been intended to mean, it does not speak of the powers of the Union Board as such. It is only dealing with the powers and duties "of the president and members respectively" of such a Union Board. Now the powers of the president or members respectively do not include the power of suit by the incorporated Union Board. Hence R. 13 will not avail the appellant.

Rule 4, Sch. 10, is called in aid but I do not think that helps either. It says that "notwithstanding anything contained in S. 4 the Local Government may, before the commencement of this Act, declare that any Union constituted under the old Act shall, from the commencement of this Act, be deemed to be a Union under this Act."

Now a Union under the old Act was an area and not an incorporated body, and all that the rule means to my mind is that such areas as were union areas under the old Act were continued to be union areas under the new. Nothing is said in R. 4 (1) about the new Unions having powers which the old ones did not have; rather the contrary in fact. If the rule was intended to mean what the appellant argues, it would have said: "any Panchayat constituted in respect of any Union shall be deemed to be a Union Board."

No notification has been brought to my notice which takes away, during the transitory period, the vesting under the old Act of the Union Boards in the old Taluk Boards. This also is significant.

The phrase "before the commencement of this Act" in R. 4 and in other rules is a very ambiguous one, not easy to understand or to apply. S. 237 apparently enables Government to bring the Act into operation piece-meal. By notifications Exs. ZZ and YY the Government brought R. 4 (1) into force on 25th and 26th January 1921, and by Ex. WW it brought the rest of the Act into force on 1st April 1921 although, as pointed out, the present Union was not constituted until 1st April 1922 under Ex. CCC. However, as R. 4 in any case has not been shown to assist the appellant, he cannot derive any support for his case from Ex. YY.

Section 60 of the new Act has been mentioned, but even if that section, the moment the Act came into force and before the Union Board of Devakotta was constituted under Ex. CCC, availed, to divest the old Taluk Board of the roads within the jurisdiction of the Union Board, that will not avail the plaintiff Board unless it was at the same time in being and able to take over the roads of which the Taluk Board had been divested. I have held that during the transitory period the plaintiff Board was not constituted a Union Board with the legal powers conferred on such a Board by the new Act.

It appears to me therefore that the plaintiff had on the date of the plaint no locus standi to sue. The lower Courts have therefore in my opinion committed no error of law. I dismiss this appeal with costs.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 57—Objections to execution must be made at earliest opportunity and cannot be allowed to be brought piece-meal.

Judgment-debtors odjecting to proceedings in execution must state at the earliest opportunity all their objections to the execution and cannot be allowed to delay proceedings by putting their objections forward piecemeal at whatever time they think most convenient to themselves. Wallace, J.—This appeal is presented in the following circumstances: A decree for Rs. 17,000 and odd passed by the High Court on its original side dated 20th September 1912 was transfered for execution to the Chingleput District Court on 29th January 1917, and the sale of certain property was asked for. The execution in that Court (under E. P. No. 40 of 1917 dated 28th February 1917) was opposed by the judgment-debtors on the ground that there had been no attachment of the property in execution. The District Judge on 28th November 1917 overruled the objection on the ground that an attachment effected before judgment enured. On appeal the High Court on 20th November 1918 confirmed that view. During the pendency of the appeal, the District Court, following a practice which has been condemned many times: see Patannayya v. Pattayya (1) and Munisami Mudali v. Meenakshi Ammal (2) "recorded" the execution petition "with permission to the decree-holder to renew." On 7th December 1922, the decree-holder put in the present E. P. 21 of 1923, again asking for sale of the property, and the judgment-debtors were served in person. Only defendants 4 and 6 put in any counter. On 13th December 1923 arguments were heard and the sale was ordered for 20th February 1924. On that date, a petition by the decree holder for leave to bid had not been disposed of and the sale was adjourned to 27th February 1924. On that date, what are styled claim petitions were filed by several of the defendants and the sale was postponed until they had been disposed of. These have been heard on three preliminary points by the District Court and the execution petition has been thereon dismissed. The decree-holder comes up in appeal.

Now the first and the most obvious remark to be made is that the judgment-debtors ought never to have been allowed to raise these preliminary points at all. They contain no new matter which could not have been made matter of objection by way of counter before the hearing on 13th December 1923 and heard at the time of the arguments on that date. This Court had laid it down more than once and in emphatic terms that judgment-debtors objecting to proceedings in execution must state at the earliest opportunity all their objections to the execution and cannot be allowed to delay proceedings by putting their objections forward peicemeal at whatever time they think most convenient to themselves. The latest ruling on this point is in Govindas Krishnadoss v. Raja of Karvetnagar (3). If these judgment-debtors did not put forward the present points at the hearing on 13th December 1923, they cannot put them forward now. If they put them forward then, they were overruled. In either case, the order for sale passed by the Court on 13th December 1923 is a final order binding on the Court as on the parties. It is not open to the Court to review that order on material which was available at the time it was passed. The three preliminary points treated by the District Judge are clearly points which could have been, ane apparently were not, put forward on 13th December 1923. Therefore they cannot be put forward now.

The first point is merely one of clerical omission. The second is treated by the District Judge in a surprising way. If we understand him aright, he holds that because the judgment-debtors were ex parte in the earlier proceedings, although they were personally served, that somehow gives them the right to be heard later. The very fact that they were served in the earlier proceedings and did not choose to put forward their objections then, is sufficient ground for not allowing them to put them forward now. As to the third objection, it is also on the merits untenable. There was no dismissal by the Court of E. P. 40 of 1917 for default of prosecution. Therefore the attachment did not come to an end by virtue of O. 21, R. 57. The attachment before judgment therefore did not cease (see the Full Bench ruling in Meyyappa Chettiar v. Chidambaram Chettiar (4). The order of the District Court in E. P. 40 of 1917 already quoted clearly meant that a fresh execution petition would be continuation of the previous one: see Krishnayya v. Puttannayya (5) and Pattannayya v. Pattayya (1) and the High Court has already held that the attachment before judgment was sufficient. The point is really res judicata and unarguable, and we find it difficult to understand the judgment of the District Judge. We may note that the objection now taken under O. 21, R. 57 was not taken before him. Obviously, the argument before him proceeded on the conceded position that E. P 21 of 1923 was a continuation of the former petition.

The order of the District Judge must therefore be reversed. As he has dealt only with certain preliminary points in the claim petitions we cannot dispose of these petitions finally here. They must be sent back for disposal there, but that disposal must be on the lines already indicated, namely, that the order for sale is final and binding on the Court and on the parties unless some fresh objection which was not available on or before its date is now put forward by these petitioners. The appeal is allowed with costs and the case sent back to the District Court for further proceedings.

Appeal No. 406 of 1924, Decided on 3rd October 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, South Kanara, in Original Suit No. 56 of 1921.

1930 M/39 & 40

(a) Transfer of Property Act, S. 60—Clog—Suit for possession by usufructuary mortgagee—Rajinama decree embodying inter alia that mortgagor after depositing mortgage money should get possession of properties from mortgagee failing which mortgagee to continue in possession as mortgagee—If possession not delivered mortgagor to take out possession by execution proceedings—Execution proceedings dismissed as barred by limitation—Suit to redeem mortgage—Mortgage held to be subsisting and liable to redemption, condition reducing period of limitation being clog on redemption—Suit was held not barred by Civil P. C., S. 47.

A usufructuarily mortgaged his properties to B under a registered mortgage deed and himself remained as a tenant after the mortgage. A having fallen into arrears of rent, B brought a suit for recovery of possession of the properties and arrears of rent or in the alternative for recovery of the mortgage amount. But the suit was compromised between the parties and a rajinama decree was passed on 2nd January 1899, to the effect that if Rs. 31,000 which was fixed as the amount due on the mortgage, was paid within three years from the date of the decree, the mortgagor was to redeem the properties from the mortgage, that in default of such payment the mortgagee was to recover possession of the properties in execution of that decree and enjoy the same on usufructuary mortgage right, and that if Rs. 31,000 was paid at any time thereafter, possession was to be given up to the mortgagor together with all the mortgage right, failing which the mortgagor should take possession by taking out execution, that for three years after the date of the rajinama decree the mortgagor should be enjoying the properties and pay an annual rent of 2,000 paras of paddy to the mortgagee. The mortgagor having failed to pay the rent, the mortgagee obtained possession of the properties on 16th March 1900. A applied in execution proceedings to get back possession of the properties as mentioned in the rajinama decree, but this application was dismissed under Limitation Act. Art. 181, as it was filed after more than three years from the date of the decree. The mortgagor brought a suit to redeem the properties in 1921.

Held : that there was nothing in the compromise decree which put an end to the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee and that the provision to take possession by execution in the compromise decree necessarily reduced the period of sixty years allowed by law for redemption to a period of three years and hence was invalid being a clog on the equity of redemption. [P 312 C 1, 2]

Held also : that the rajinama decree did not render the present suit res judicata and that Civil P. C., S. 47, was no bar to the suit ; 19 Mad. 249 and A. I. R. 1925 *P. (b) Practice—Terms of consent decree being against provisions of statute—Court in subsequent suit can give relief—Compromise.

decree are against the provisions of any statute. 24 Mad. 265 ; 26 Mad. 31 and 31 Bom. 15, Rel. on. [P 314 C 1]

An illegal term in an agreement consented to by parties and embodied in consent decree does not make that term enforceable or a defence in a subsequent suit. Judgment.—Defendant 1 is the appellant. This appeal arises out of a suit filed by the plaintiff to redeem a mortgage. The plaintiff prays that defendant 1 may be directed to surrender possession of the properties mentioned in Sch. A to the plaint to the plaintiff on payment by him within a time to be fixed by the Court of such amount as may be found due to defendant 1 towards the usufructuary mortgage referred to in the plaint on taking an account of the amounts received by defendant 1 and the amount which he is liable for in respect of damages for waste committed on the properties and to hand over to the plaintiff all the title deeds, rent deeds and other documents connected with the property. The plaintiff also claims mesne profits at the rate of 2,000 paras of paddy per year.

The case for the plaintiff is that the properties described in Sch. A to the plaint originally belonged to defendant 2's tarwad, that the said properties along with two other items of property held by the tarwad on arwar or mortgage right were usufructuarily mortgaged by the tarwad to defendant 1's tarwad for Rs. 21,157-2-2 under a registered mortgage deed dated 8th December 1892 but that the properties were being enjoyed by defendant 2's tarwad as tenants after the mortgage, that defendant 2's tarwad having fallen into arrears of rent, defendant 1's tarwad filed O S. No. 22 of 1898 in the Sub-Court of South Kanara for recovery of possession of the properties and arrears of rent or in the alternative for recovery of the mortgage amount, that O. S. No. 22 of 1898 was ultimately compromised between the parties and a rajinama decree was passed on 2nd January 1899 to the effect that if Rs 31,000 which was fixed as the amount due on the mortgage for principal and arrears of rent and costs is paid within three years from the date of the decree, the mortgagor was to redeem the properties from the mortgage, that in default of such payment the mortgagee was to recover possession of the properties in execution of that decree and enjoy the same on usufructuary mortgage right, and that if Rs. 31,000 was paid at any time thereafter, possession was to be given up to the mortgagor together with all the mortgage right, that it was also provided that for 3 years after the date of the rajinama decree the mortgagor should be enjoying the properties paying assessment thereon and pay the defendant 1's tarwad and annual rent of 2000 paras of paddy, that defendant 2's tarwad having failed to pay the rent as mentioned in the rajinama decree, the mortgagee obtained possession of the properties on 16th March 1900, that there was a second mortgage for Rs. 1675, on which the mortgagee obtained a decree for sale of the equity of redemption in O. S. No. 44 of 1912, that in execution of a personal decree against defendant 2's tarwad the right of the mortgagor was purchased by one Subraya Kamathi in 1909 subject to the usufructuary and simple mortgage rights held by defendant 1's tarwad over the said properties and Subraya Kamathi conveyed his right to the plaintiff on 22nd April 1913, that the plaintiff who has thus become absolutely entitled to the equity of redemption deposited Rs. 6,115-12-0 being the amount due to defendant 1 as per decree in O. S. No. 44 of 1912 and redeemed the simple mortgage dated 7th December 1901, that as regards the two items of property submortgaged under the deed dated 8th December 1892, they were redeemed and a portion of the mortgaged properties was acquired by the Local Fund Department and the mortgagee received two sums of Rs. 490 and 450 towards the mortgage for which credit has to be given, that the mortgagee has been committing waste by cutting timber trees and pulling down buildings etc., that he is liable for damages to the extent of Rs. 6,700 as per particulars given in the plaint which amount also is to be deducted from the amount due under the mortgage and that when the plaintiff applied in execution to get back possession of the properties as mentioned in the rajinama decree, the defendants contended that execution was barred by limitation and this contention was upheld both by the lower Court and the High Court. The plaintiff, therefore, files this suit to redeem the properties.

Defendant 1 (mortgagee) who is the contesting defendant admits the mortgage set out in the plaint and the decree in O. S. No. 22 of 1898. He admits having taken possession of the properties covered by the decree in execution of it. He also admits that the plaintiff became the purchaser of the equity of redemption but disputes that the sale certificate relied on by the plaintiff covers the entire mortgage property. He denies, however, that the plaintiff has any subsisting right to redeem on the ground that the original mortgage had been superseded by the decree in O. S. No. 22 of 1898 and that the plaintiff's only remedy is by execution which having become barred, the right to redeem is extinguished. He admits that he got a decree in O. S. No. 44 of 1912 on the simple mortgage of 7th December 1901 and that the mortgage has been redeemed. He denies that his getting the decree saves the plaintiff's right to redeem or gives him any cause of action. He denies that the property acquired by the Local Fund Department under the Land Acquisition Act formed any portion of the mortgage properties. He denies also that some other items which he specifies in para. 9 of the written statement formed part of the mortgage. He raises certain objections to the schedules in paras. 10 and 11. He denies that he committed any waste but on the contrary states that he and his ancestors effected improvements for about Rs. 30,000 of which sum he claims payment before redemption.

Defendant 3 who is the younger brother of defendant 2 filed a written statement admitting the plaintiff's claim.

The plaintiff as the karnavan of his Echekan tarwad sues defendant 1 as the karnavan of the Kodath tarwad and defendants 2 and 3 as representing the Beloor Maloor tarwad.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for redemption. He held that the present suit was maintainable and is not barred by reason of the judgment to the effect that the execution of the rajinama decree in O. S. No. 22 of 1898 was held to be barred by limitation. He was of opinion that the rajinama decree having been kept alive the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee and the mortgagee having entered into possession in such a character under that decree the right of redemption is not put an end to and that the provision in that decree that execution might issue only gives a speedy and less expensive method of redemption and does not take away the right of a suit to redeem after three years which is the period of limitation for execution.

As regards the other issues relating to the various items, the parties put in a joint statement which the Judge refers to in his judgment the effect of which was that the objections to certain properties were not pressed, the plaintiff did not press his claim for damages and defendant 1 did not press his claim for improvements. As regards mesne profits, the correctness of the claim was not disputed, the Judge found that the plaintiff was entitled to mesne profits at 2000 paras of paddy a year. Hence the appeal.

The main contention of the appellant is that the present suit is maintainable as the plaintiff's only remedy is to obtain relief by execution of the decree in O. S. No. 22 of 1898 within the period of limitation prescribed by law and that as he has not done so the right to redeem has become extinguished. It is also contended that the suit is barred under S. 47, Civil P. C., also by res judicata by reason of the decree in O. S. No. 22 of 1898 and that there was no admission of the plaintiff's right by the defendant to prevent the bar of limitation.

For the respondents it is contended that on a proper construction of the decree in O. S. No. 22 of 1898 which was founded on the rajinama put in by the parties the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee was not put an end to by that decree, that as the mortgagee admittedly entered into possession under the clause entitling him to possession as mortgagee the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee was not extinguished by the decree and that the right given to execute the decree has simply the effect of giving the mortgagor an alternaitve remedy of a suit for redemption. It is contended that as the effect of the clause in the rajinama limiting the rights of the parties to execution is to curtail the period of limitation of 60 years prescribed by Art. 148, Lim. Act, to three years which is the period prescribed for execution proceedings by Art. 182, there is a manifest clog on the equity of redemption and that such a clause in an ordinary mortgage document would be invalid and the consent decree puts it in no higher position. Under Cl. 2 of the rajinama decree as the sum of Rs. 31,000 had to be deposited in Court before an application for possession can be made by the mortgagor, there is no question of keeping the decree alive by steps-in-aid of execution and under S. 48, Civil P. C., the decree can even in such cases be kept alive only for 12 years. It is also contended that the mortgagee having got a second mortgage and sued on the second mortgage on the basis that the first mortgage was subsisting and having obtained a decree on that basis it is not open to him to repudiate his position as mortgagee especially as that suit was long after the right of execution under Art. 182, Lim. Act, became barred by limitation.

In order to appreciate these contentions it is necessary to set out the terms of the mortgage deed, rajinama, and the consent decree in O. S. No. 22 of 1898 in some detail. There is practically no dispute on the facts. The mortgage which is dated 8th December 1892 is filed as Ex. A in the suit. It purports to be a deed of illadarwar i. e., a usufructuary mortgage deed. The main terms are as follows:

"We have hereby usufructuarily mortgaged to you all the under mentioned entire properties. . . . .for Rs. 27,157-2-2 and we have received the amount of consideration as detailed below. . . . .we have received the sum of Rs. 27,157-2-2 in full as detailed above. Therefore, for the said entire amount you shall enter into the under-mentioned entire property and enjoy the same on illadarwar right by paying the tirva every year to the first of us. We shall pay the sum of Rs. 27,157-2-2, the kanam amount, to you whenever we get the same in one lump sum on the vishuday of that year and get back the said properties, the original documents and this document also together with your receipt for such payment."

Then follows the schedule of the properties.

It is admitted that although the deed purported to be a deed of usufructuary mortgage entitling the mortgagee to immediate possession, possession was not given. In such cases the law gives the party two remedies. One remedy is to sue to get possession which the party is entitled to under the terms of the mortgage deed and the other is to sue to get back the mortgage money. S. 68, Cl. (c), T. P. Act, gives the mortgagee the right to sue for the mortgage money in case where the mortgagee being entitled to possession of the property, the mortgagor fails to deliver the same to him or to secure the possession thereof to him without disturbance by the mortgagor or any other person. There was some doubt as to whether this entitled the mortgagee to claim a charge on the property but it has now been held that he can apply for sale and we need only refer to Subbamma v. Narayya (1).

Suit No. 22 of 1898 was filed by the plaintiff, the main relief asked for being to recover possession which was wrongly withheld and the alternative relief was for sale if for any reason possession could not be given. This appears from the rajinama decree passed in that suit (Ex. C). It recites that the suit was for a decree either to get delivery of the mortgaged properties described in the plaint Sch. A and three years' mesne profits and further profits till date of delivery or in the alternative to recover the mortgage money with interest at six per cent per annum by sale of the mortgage properties. The main relief was a relief which flowed from the rights created by the mortgage document and was to enforce such rights which necessarily kept the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee alive. The alternative relief was to extinguish that right and to get back the mortgage money which was asked if the first relief could not be granted. So that it is clear that the primary object of the mortgagee in filing that suit was to get possession as mortgagee. The rajinama was on the footing that possession was to be given as mortgagee and that the rights were to subsist. This is clear from the terms of the rajinama decree which simply embodies the terms entered into by the parties. The decree, after setting out the scope of the suit and the parties who appeared, says :

"upon perusing the rajinama put in by the parties and given below it is ordered that the terms of the said rajinama be and the same are hereby passed into a decree."

The rajinama which is set out in the decree runs as follows :

"1. We should pay in one lump sum to plaintiff within three years from this date on the liability of the plaint property mentioned in Sch. A of the plaint, Rs. 31,000 settled to be paid to plaintiff by us in respect of the plaint kanam amount and the arrears of rent due for this year, that is, due up to this 1074, Kollum and also for costs of suit and redeem the said property from plaintiff's arwar and take possession of the same together with the documents. If we fail to pay the amount on that vaide (due date), plaintiff should take possession of the plaint property from us by taking out execution of the decree which will be passed in terms of this raji, and should enjoy the same on payment of tirva by arwar right. When the property is being enjoyed taking possession of the same in that manner if we pay the said kanam amount of Rs. 31,000 to plaintiff on any year on the vishusankramana vaide, he should immediately relinquish his arwar right on the said property and deliver the same to us. If he fails to deliver the same to us in that manner we should take possession of it by taking out execution.

2. We ourselves should enjoy the said property on payment of tirva thereof till the above mentioned vaide of three years and pay to plaintiff rent fixed at the rate of 2,000 paras of paddy per annum every year from the ensuing 1075, Kollum before the end of Vrichika month, that is before 15th December conveying the same to Thilayipallayapore of Kollutu village and measuring the same by geni phara and obtain his receipts. If we fail to pay the said fixed rent or any portion thereof within the vaide in that manner, plaintiff should take possession of the plaint property by taking out execution, and enjoy the same on payment of tirva by arwar right and he should recover from us the said arrears of rent, that is, the price amount of the said paddy at the then rate by taking out execution. When he takes possession and enjoys the property in that manner if we pay the kanam amount of Rs. 31,000 mentioned in para. 1 on the vishusankaramana vaide of any one year in one lump sum, he should relinquish his arwar right and deliver the said property back to us. If he fails to deliver the same in that manner, we should take possession of it by taking out execution.

3. We ourselves should bear our costs of this suit. We should withdraw the suit No. 27 of 1898 filed by Nos. 5 to 51 among us. In that suit the plaintiff should bear his costs and we should bear our costs. To this effect we have agreed to the settlement made in the presence of the grihastas.

4. Number 1 among us is the karnavan of our tarward, No. 2, Kelu is the next karnavan. Defendants 6, 25 and 20 are dead. They have no other heirs except ourselves.

Therefore it is prayed that a decree may be passed in the manner stated above. Khauli submitted on the said date by the plaintiff Kodatha Kora Nair. It is true that the raji was effected between me and the defendants in the presence of the grihastas as stated above by them. I have consented to pass a decree in that manner."

It is admitted that under this raji the mortgagee took possession under Cl. 2 which provides that if the mortgagor did not pay the rent of 2,000 paras of paddy per annum as provided for in that clause, the plaintiff in that suit should be entitled to take possession of the plaint property by taking execution and enjoy the same on payment of tirva by arwar right i. e., mortgage right. The right under this clause of the mortgagor was to get back possession if he desired on payment of Rs. 31,000 on the vishu day of any one year. The mortgagee having taken possession under this clause, it is clear that his possession is possession as mortgagee on the footing that the mortgage between the parties subsists and there is nothing in the decree which puts an end to the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee. As we said before, the main object of the suit was to recover possession under the mortgage deed and the decree only effectuates that possession. The mortgagee is to enter as mortgagee under the covenant for possession ; the mortgage deed and even if the rajinama decree should be taken to be the creation of a fresh right and the extinguishing of the one created by the mortgage propria vigore it creates the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee with all the incidents of a mortgage with possession. In fact the position which both the parties took up till we come to the suit was that the relationship was only that of mortgagor and mortgagee.

On 7th December 1901, defendant 1's tarwad, who were already the mortgagees under the first deed of mortgage dated 8th December 1892 and the rajinama decree dated 2nd January 1899, took a second mortgage of the properties from defendants 2 and 3's tarwad for Rs. 1,675 and O. S. No. 44 of 1912 was filed by the mortgagee to enforce his right under the mortgage. The plaint in that suit is filed as Ex. K and in para. 2 of the plaint it is stated that the second mortgage was taken on the responsibility of the equity of redemption of the immovable properties described in the plaint schedule which were held by the plaintiff's tarwad on a usufructuary mortgage for a sum of Rs. 31,000. It appears from the plaint that in the meantime the equity of redemption was purchased by one Subraya Kamathi who was defendant 3 in that suit. Para. 7 of the plaint runs as follows :

"Defendant 3 had lately purchased the equity of redemption of some of the hypothecated properties in execution of a money decree obtained by him against defendant 1 subject to the suit hypothecation bond and the usufructuary mortgage referred to above and he is therefore made a party."

It is prayed that in default of payment of the sum of Rs. 3,931-9-6 which is claimed as being due on the second mortgage sued on the property may be sold and the sale proceeds applied :

"in payment of what may be found due to plaiutiff subject to or free from the previous usufructuary mortgage in favour of the plaintiff's tarwad as the Court deemed fit."

The judgment in that suit is filed as Ex. L. It appears from the judgment that all the parties admitted that the prior usufructuary mortgage was subsisting (see para. 8 of the judgment). This second mortgage seems to have been taken in the name of defendant 2 in that suit. The question was raised as to whether it was benami for the plaintiff and whether the plaintiff could sue and the Judge held that it was taken benami. In para. 15 of the judgment the Judge passes a decree and directs that the decree amount should be paid by the sale of the suit mortgage property :

"subject to the previous usufructuary mortgage in favour of the plaintiff's tarwad if defendant 1 and his tarwad do not pay the amount in six months from this date."

The decree Ex. M follows these directions and Cl. 2 of the decree runs as follows :

"that if such payment is not made on or before 22nd May 1913, the undermentioned plaint properties be sold subject to the previous usufructuary mortgage in favour of plaintiff's tarwad and that the proceeds of the sale (after defraying thereout the expenses of the sale) be paid into Court and applied in payment of what is declared due to the plaintiff's tarwad as aforesaid together with subsequent interest and subsequent costs and that the balance, if any, be paid to defendant 1."

It is clear therefore from these proceedings that in 1912 i. e. about 20 years after Ex. A the deed of mortgage and over 12 years after the rajinama decree the mortgagee treated the first mortgage as subsisting and got a decree on the second mortgage on that basis.

It appears that during the pendency of this suit the equity of redemption was sold and was purchased by defendant 3 in that suit. Ex. D is the sale certificate issued to Subraya Kamathi and it shows that the property was sold in execution of the decree in suit No. 184 of 1900 which was filed by Subraya Kamathi against the mortgagors on a personal debt. The sale certificate shows that on 20th December 1909 the property was purchased for Rs. 210. The sale was subject to the two previous mortgages and this accounts for the very small sum of Rs. 210 paid for this very valuable property. Subraya Kamathi assigned this sale certificate to the plaintiff's tarwad on 22nd April 1913, by Ex. F. This sale is for Rs. 1,250 and specifically states that it is subject to all equities, which means, we take it that it is subject to all the rights created by the previous mortgages.

There seems to have been litigation as regards the purchase by Subraya Kamathi as appears from Ex. G, judgment dated 22nd November 1915 in O. S. No. 330 of 1914 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Mangalore, where the District Munsif upheld the purchase by Subraya Kamathi and the assignment by Subraya Kamathi. It also appears that this judgment was confirmed in appeal by the Subordinate Judge in Appeal No. 5 of 1917 and by the High Court in S. A. No. 1,423 of 1917.

So far as the suit on the second mortgage is concerned, the mortgagors rather than have the property sold paid the amount due under that decree. It appears from Ex. Q that on 17th December 1918 the person representing judgment-debtor paid into Court Rs. 6,115-12-0 due under that decree. In prayer 2 of the execution application it is prayed that the amount may be paid to respondent 1 (plaintiff) in full satisfaction of the decree in O. S. No. 44 of 1912. In the remarks column this is what is stated :

"That out of Rs. 31,000 made payable in raji decree in O. S. No. 22 of 1908 some amounts have been paid to the Kodath tarward and the petitioner reserves his right of tendering the balance amount after deducting the above-named payments and the damages caused by the Kodath tarwad by a separate petition."

Upon this notice was ordered and ultimately we find that on 12th March 1919 the following order was passed :

"By consent it is ordered that the amount in deposit shall be paid to respondent 1 (plaintiff) in full satisfaction."

Ex. S which is dated 27th August 1913 is a notice sent on behalf of Kelu Nair (plaintiff) to Ambu Nair who is defendant 1 in the suit. It states that certain trees on the mortgage properties were cut down and that the mortgagee who was in possession of the properties under the mortgage deed had no right to cut down the trees or authorize the cutting down of the trees. The letter winds up as follows :

"You shall therefore immediately make enquiry about this unlawful act which is being done through your want of vigilance and take the necessary steps in the matter, and inform me or Kelu Nair in writing of it. If you will not do so, you are hereby informed that since this act is causing great damage, the lawful value of the timber which has been cut till now and which may be cut hereafter will be appropriated from the kanom amount due to you under the above compromise decree."

This letter is clearly written on the footing that the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee subsists as also the right of redemption and that if any act of waste is committed or is allowed to be committed, the amount of damages would be deducted from the mortgage money due on redemption. To this, the reply Ex. T dated 8th September 1913 is sent by the mortgagee. It runs as follows :

"I am in receipt of your registered letter dated 27th August 1913 on behalf of Echikana Charakere Kelu Nair. As mentioned therein I am not aware of the fact that the properties mortgaged to my tarwad were sold in auction and that they were assigned to the said Kelu Nair. I had not empowered anybody to cut trees from the properties mortgaged to me. The trees were not cut even. I did not cause any loss even."

There is no repudiation here of the allegation that the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee subsists. It is not alleged that the mortgagor has lost his rights to redeem. These notices were in 1913. It is therefore clear that from 1892 till 1917 there was no question raised that the possession of the mortgagee under the mortgage dated 8th December 1892 and the compromise dated 2nd January 1899 was possession under a subsisting mortgage for Rs. 31,000 which was liable to be redeemed.

The plaintiff in this suit acting under the power conferred by Cl. (2) of the rajinama decree Ex. C deposited Rs. 31,000 in Court and filed an application for execution praying for redelivery of possession of the properties. This application was opposed by the mortgagee on the ground that the execution of the decree was barred by limitation. There were other grounds of objections which it is not necessary to consider now. It was contended for the plaintiff who was petitioner 1 in the execution application that time began to run only in default of the respondents to deliver possession on the petitioner's depositing the mortgage amount on the vishu day of any one year they chose within the period of 60 years fixed for redemption under the Limitation Act and that his cause of action only arises when the mortgagee refused to deliver possession on the money being paid. The Subordinate Judge, however, upheld the contention that the application was barred by limitation. As regards the maintainability of a fresh suit to redeem he did not decide the question. All that he said in para. 8 of the judgment was :

" whether a fresh suit for redemption by the petitioners will be barred by the aforesaid decree is a question which we need not go into at present. "

It appears also from the order dated 10th November 1920 that both the parties wanted the question of limitation to be taken up as a preliminary question. The order is filed as Ex. I. Against this order an appeal was filed in the High Court and on 20th December 1921 the appeal was dismissed and the order of the Subordinate Judge was confirmed. The judgment of the High Court is filed as Ex. 2 in the case. The learned Judges held that Art. 181 is the article applicable to a case like the present, that the starting point of limitation was the date when the right to apply for execution accrued and that the right to apply for execution accrued from the date of the decree and they preferred to follow the decision of the Bombay High Court in Maruti v. Krishna (2), to the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Cheddi v. Lalu (3). The learned Judge observed :

" On our construction of this decree it is not a case of option given to the mortgagors to make payment on successively recurring debts and a number of other cases which have been quoted by the learned vakil for the appellants need not be dealt with by us for that reason."

(2) [1899] 23 Bom. 592=1 Bom.L.R. 31.
(3) [1902] 24 All. 300=(1902) A. W. N. 60.

The learned Judges did not express any opinion as to whether a suit for redemption would be maintainable. This judgment has become final and therefore it has to be taken that the remedy to redeem by way of executing the decree has become barred. The effect of this judgment is that the compromise which is embodied in the rajinama decree Ex. C virtually cut down the period of redemption from 60 years to 3 years if it should be held that executing the decree is the only method by which the mortgagor or his representatives could redeem.

We do not think the rajinama decree in O. S. No. 22 of 1898 renders the present suit res judicata. There was no adjudication in that suit of any of the questions raised here. We need only refer to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Maina Bibi v. Vakil Ahmed (4). In that case the heirs of deceased Mohammad filed a suit and obtained a decree that on payment of a certain sum of money they should get possession from the widow who claimed to be in possession in lieu of her decree debt and that if the money was not paid in six months the suit should be dismissed. They did not pay as directed and several years afterwards filed a suit for possession conditionally and alternatively on payment of the sum.

The main contention of the appellant before us is that S. 47, Civil P. C., which corresponds to S. 244 of the Act of 1882 and to S. 11 of the Act of 1861 bars a separate suit in all cases where the party can execute the decree. Section 47 runs as follows:

"All questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit."

The contention is that the clause in para. 2 of the rajinama decree which states that if the mortgagors pay the kanom amount of Rs. 31,000 mentioned in para. 1 of the decree on the vishu sankaramana vaide of any one year in a lump sum, he the mortgagee should relinquish his arwar right and deliver the said property back to the mortgagors and that if he fails to deliver the same in that manner they should take possession of it by taking out execution, limits the right to the execution and that if that right is extinguished the right of redemption also is extinguished as a separate suit would not lie. As we pointed out before, so far as the parties to the rajinama decree were concerned, they neither at the time of the rajinama decree nor for several years thereafter thought that the right of redemption would be barred in 3 years. Till the execution application was put in 1920, in the various proceedings the parties acted on the footing that the mortgage was still subsisting and could be redeemed. It cannot be said that the parties when they entered into the rajinama agreed that there should be this clog on the equity of redemption, that the equity should be barred in 3 years when the law allowed 60 years to redeem. Even assuming that they did, it is clear that if such a clause was put in in a mortgage document, it would be void as a clog on the equity of redemption.

Section 60, T. P. Act, enacts that at any time after the principal money has become payable, the mortgagor has a right, on payment or tender, at a proper time and place, of the mortgage money, to require the mortgagee (a) to deliver the mortgage deed, if any, to the mortgagor, (b) where the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property, to deliver possession thereof to the mortgagor and (c) at the cost of the mortgagor either to retransfer the mortgaged property to him or to such third person as he may direct, or to execute and (where the mortgage has been effected by a registered instrument) to have registered an acknowledgment in writing that any right in derogation of his interest transferred to the mortgagee has been extinguished, provided that the right conferred by this section has not been extinguished by act of the parties or by order of a Court.

It should be observed here that unlike other sections dealing with mortgages, S. 60 does not permit parties to contract themselves out of its provisions. In Muhammad Sher Khan v. Raja Seth Swami Dayal (5), the question was "whether a clause which suspended the right to redeem was valid. Their Lordships of the Privy Council after referring to S. 60 observed the section is unqualified in its terms and contains no saving provision, as other sections do, in favour of contracts to the contrary. Their Lordships, therefore, see no sufficient reason for withholding from the words of the section their full force and effect."

(4) A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 63=47 All. 250=52 I.A. 145 (P.C.).

(5) A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 17=44 All. 185=49 I.A. 60 (P.C.).

The proviso as regards the right being extinguished by act of the parties has been in several cases held to mean an act done after the mortgage has been entered into, such as release of the right to redeem or of sale. In Fairclough v. Swan Brewery Co. Ltd. (6), Lord Macnaghten observed:

"It is now firmly established by the House of Lords that the old rule still prevails and that equity will not permit any device or contrivance being part of the mortgage transaction or contemporaneous with it to prevent or impede redemption."

It has been argued that the strict rule of the Courts of equity has been relaxed and reference has been made to G and C Kreglinger v. New Patagonia Meat Cold Storage Co. Ltd. (7). We do not think the rule that you cannot clog the equity of redemption at the time of the mortgage has been affected by this decision. Lord Parker at p. 60 observes:

"if once you come to the conclusion that the parties intended that the property should be reconveyed on payment of the moneys secured, any provision which would prevent this must be rejected as inconsistent with and repugnant to the true intention. But, on the other hand, if you once come to the conclusion that this was not the real intention of the parties, then the transaction is not one of mortgage at all."

The conclusion which the learned Lord came to has been thus summarised by him:

"My Lords, after the most careful consideration of the authorities I think it is open to this House to hold, and I invite your Lordships to hold, that there is now no rule in equity which precludes a mortgagee, whether the mortgage be made upon the occasion of a loan or otherwise, from stipulating for any collateral advantage, provided such collateral advantage is not either (1) unfair and unconscionable, or (2) in the nature of a penalty clogging the equity of redemption, or (3) inconsistent with or repugnant to the contractual and equitable right to redeem."

There can be little doubt that the intention of the parties in the present suit when they entered into the compromise embodied in Ex. C was clearly to keep the mortgage alive, that possession was taken under the mortgage and there is nothing to suggest that the parties ever intended that the equity of redemption should be lost if the mortgagor did not repay the mortgage money in 3 years, for, this is the effect of clause put in as to recovery in execution of possession. There can be little doubt that this clause if interpreted as extinguishing, the right to redeem if execution is not taken out within the time limited by law, that is 3 years, works a great hardship on the mortgagor. It is stated by the counsel for the respondent that the property is now worth more than a lakh of rupees, counsel for the appellant says that he is not in a position to give the value of the property. But having regard to the extent and nature of the property as disclosed in the schedules to the plaint, the income of the property which even according to the deed of compromise was considerable and the fact that the mortgagees were willing to lend money on a second mortgage, there can be little doubt that the value of the property at the date of the compromise and at the date when the mortgagor applied for execution by depositing Rs. 31,000 into Court was considerably in excess of the mortgage money.

Even if the decision in G and C Kreglinger v. New Patagonia Meat and Cold Storage Co. Ltd. (7), establishes a new principle, we think the proviso to S. 60, which refers to the extinguishment of the right by act of the parties must, having regard to the authorities above cited, be an act subsequent to the transaction and it is difficult to see how, when the law has been codified by S. 60 which as interpreted by their Lordships of the Privy Council prevents any party from contracting himself out of it, it is possible to relax the rule on any of the considerations which influenced the Court in the case reported in Kreglinger v. New Patagonia Meat and Cold Storage Co. Ltd. (7). Altered conditions may be a good ground for relaxing a rule of equity but can hardly be a ground for not applying the provisions of a statutory enactment.

It has been argued that even if the clause in the rajinama as to the execution was invalid and unenforceable, the fact that the compromise has been made a decree of Court validates the transaction. It should be noted in the present case that all that the Court did was to embody in the decree the terms of the compromise. It is not suggested that there was any adjudication or any enquiry by the Court before the rajinama decree was passed. All that the parties consented to as the agreement as embodied in the rajinama decree. We do not think in these circumstances the fact than an illegal term in an agreement is by consent of parties embodied in a consent decree could make that term enforceable or could be a defence in a subsequent suit to redeem. We may in this connexion refer to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Great North West Central Railway v. Charlebois (8). In that case a term which is ultra vires of a company was embodied in a contract and also in a consent decree of Court. It was contended that the fact that the term is embodied in the decree prevented the parties from disputing it. Lord Hobhouse in delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council observed:

"But the difficulty is to reconcile an opinion that the contract is ultra vires with an opinion that a judgment obtained as this was, is a binding judgment. The authorities referred to by the Supreme Court do not relate to contracts ultra vires. It is quite clear that a company cannot do what is beyond its legal powers by simply going into Court and consenting to a decree which orders that the thing shall be done."

After pointing out that the legality of the act was not one of the points substantially in dispute and that if that was the subject of a fair compromise in Court, it may make a difference. His Lordship said that a judgment obtained upon such a contract which is ultra vires cannot be of more validity than the invalid contract on which it was founded.

So far as the decrees founded on contracts are concerned, it has always been held that the Court can give relief in a separate suit or in execution proceedings where the terms of the consent decree are against the provisions of any statute. In Nagappa v. Venkata Rao (9), a suit was filed by the landlord for arrears of rent and possession. The parties arrived at a compromise and the decree contained a stipulation that if default should be made in payment of rent within the time fixed for payment each year, the lease should be forfeited. Default was made and the plaintiff applied in execution for possession and arrears of rent. It was held that inasmuch as the decree passed by the Court was a mere adoption of the contract which existed between the parties to it, it was competent to the Court to relieve against the forfeiture under the general provisions of the law. In Lakshmanaswami Naidu v. Rangamma (10), it was held that any terms of a contract which are opposed to public policy are invalid and would not be enforced by the Courts and that if such terms are embodied in a compromise decree those terms would not be enforced. In this case the compromise decree provided for the sale of an office attached to a temple involving service of a personal nature and entitling the holder to receive emoluments, In Krishnabai v. Hari Govind (11), there was a consent decree passed which created the relationship of landlord and tenant and which contained a clause for forfeiture if the rent was not paid. There was nothing in the decree which provided any relief against the terms embodied in the decree. The plaintiff filed a suit for possession on the ground that the right to possession which was conferred by the consent decree accrued owing to forfeiture. It was held that as the consent decree created the relationship of landlord and tenant, the Court could relieve against forfeiture. Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., after stating that as it was an incident of those relations that the right of forfeiture was subject to relief, that incident must still apply when these relations are established by a decree passed in accordance with the agreement, observed:

"It was laid down in Wentworth v. Bullen (12), and has since been repeatedly affirmed that the contract of the parties is not the less a contract, and subject to the incidents of a contract, because there is superadded a command of a Judge and this in my opinion lends a sanction to the conclusion. I have expressed."

Beaman, J. observed:

"By private agreement converted into a decree, parties cannot empower themselves to do that which they could not have done by private agreement alone and referred to Great North West Railway v. Charlebois (8)."

Applying these principles to the facts of the present case the position is this. The compromise of the suit on the mortgage Ex. A, which is now the foundation of liability, did not put an end to the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee but on the contrary affirmed it. The decree perpetuated the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee and did not dissolve that relationship. It enforced the right of the mortgagor under the mortgage to obtain possession, and provided for the right of the mortgagor getting back possession on payment of Rs. 31,000. The ordinary incidents of that relationship are that even though a term is fixed for redemption by the parties the party is allowed to redeem within the period of 60 years provided by the Limitation Act and that any provision in the agreement which in effect limits the right to redeem by a clause that the right is to be exercised by execution (which necessarily reduces the period to 3 years) is as invalid as if there was a clause saying that if the property is not redeemed in three years the property should be lost. This clause was embodied in the decree by consent of all parties. It is therefore a case where the parties have done what S. 60, T. P. Act, prohibits. In a suit to redeem it seems to us to be no defence to state that the sole remedy is the remedy by execution, which remedy the parties had no right to insert as being a clog on the equity of redemption. In this view, S. 47, of this Code would not debar the plaintiff from filing a suit to redeem.

We think that on a proper construction of the compromise decree the clause that the mortgagor should take possession of the property by executing the decree is not the sole right which the mortgagor has. Unlike a decree for redemption under the Transfer of Property Act the decree does not say that if money is not paid as stipulated the right to redeem is lost. What the parties contemplated was that they should be entitled to the benefit of the summary way of getting possession. The fact that the plaintiff does not choose to exercise that right would not deprive him of the larger remedy he has of getting possession by suit. If he had applied within three years by execution to redeem the property, he would have had to pay only a few rupees as stamp duty under the Court-fees Act and he would have got possession on payment into Court of Rs. 31,000 If he wants to have it done by a suit, a very heavy stamp duty of about Rs. 1492 would have to be paid and as a matter of fact such a stamp duty was paid in the present suit to redeem. It also appears to us that the existence of that clause would not prevent redemption as the case falls within the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sri Rajah Papamma Rao v. Sri Vira Pratapa H. V. Ramachandra Razu (13), where the facts were shortly these. The plaintiffs sued to redeem a mortgage on the ground that it was discharged by the rents and profits appropriated by the mortgagee. The mortgagor undertook in the mortgage deed to repay a sum of Rs. 2,011 with interest by four annual instalments, mortgaging as security a village belonging to them. The mortgagee sued the mortgagors upon this bond and prayed for a decree directing the defendants to pay the amounts then due with interest by means of the mortgage property. The decree of the District Judge was:

"In accordance with the custom prevailing in the Courts in this presidency three months' time will be allowed to the defendants within which to pay up the whole sum now decreed, principal and interest and costs, failing which the plaintiff shall be put in possession of the immovable and moveable property specified in the bond sued upon, and in the plaint and schedule, as provided in the terms of the bond."

We may state in passing that in this case the decree was a consent decree which directed that if the mortgage was not redeemed in 3 years, the mortgagee should take possession of the properties. Under this decree, the mortgagee took out execution and got possession as the mortgagee in the present case acting under Cl. 2 of the rajinama decree got possession in execution. Then the plaintiffs mortgagors filed the suit to redeem, alleging that if an account was taken it will be found that the whole mortgage has been discharged by the usufruct. The defence was that by virtue of the terms of the decree the property had become the absolute property of the mortgagee and that it was not competent to the parties to go behind the decree. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the mortgage was foreclosed if the money was not paid in 3 years. On appeal this judgment was reversed by the High Court. Their Lordships of the Privy Council affirmed the decision of the High Court. Lord Hobhouse in delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council after referring to the decree of the District Judge and the fact that the decree stands because no appeal was filed against that decree observed:

"The decree therefore stands and is binding on the parties; and the mortgagee took possession under it. He has since sold the property but that does not affect the rights of the mortgagor. The question is in what character was the possession taken. If in the character of a mortgagee, the mortgagor had a right to redeem, which was not barred by the time the suit began."

His Lordship after dealing with the contentions of Mr. Mayne further observed:

"It is sufficient that the mortgagee, not being entitled to foreclosure, and not asking for it, got a decree which did not purport to work foreclosure. It purported to give possession, "as provided in the terms of the bond." That was impossible for there were no such terms; but it purported to do that, and did not purport to put an end to the bond and to the relations of mortgagor and mortgagee altogether. It could, though subject to correction on appeal, give possession, and did so. The mortgagee thereupon became mortgagee in possession; and as such he must submit to be redeemed."

It seems to us difficult to distinguish the facts of the present case from the facts of the case in the Papamma Rao v. Vira Pratapa (13) referred to above. The decree with which their Lordships were dealing was an executable decree and for the purpose of S. 47 the addition of a clause allowing parties to execute makes no difference if the decree is in fact executable. The test applied by their Lordships is "what was the character of the possession taken under the decree" and if the character was as mortgagor and mortgagee, their Lordships hold that the right to redeem followed.

Reference has been made by the appellant's advocate to Hari Ravji v. Shapurji Hormasji (14), and it was contended that the decision in that case lays down a contrary rule. We do not think the facts of that case are similar to the facts of the case with which we are dealing now. In that case a suit was filed by the mortgagees to recover their mortgage money by sale and a decree was passed in accordance with the award of arbitrators to the effect that the defendants were to pay in all Rs. 2,369 to the plaintiffs on a date which would be fixed and should redeem the land which till payment was to remain in the possession of the plaintiffs. This state of things continued from September 1825 and in 1877 a suit was filed to redeem. The Subordinate Judge held that the mortgage had entirely merged in the decree and that execution was barred. This judgment was confirmed by the High Court. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that as the execution of the decree was barred, no fresh suit for redemption would lie on the rights created by the decree. Their Lordships held that on the frame of the plaint the plaintiff could not fall back on a right to redeem the original mortgage as he in the plaint did not seek to redeem the mortgage of 1806 which on the face of it would be barred but for some acknowledgment and no such acknowledgment was alleged. Their Lordships left open the question whether if a proper suit was filed on the original mortgage and an acknowledgment was proved so as to get over the bar of limitation, that suit would be maintainable. In the case before us the suit to redeem is not barred as it is within 60 years of the date of the mortgage. It is clear from the facts of the case in Hari Ravji v. Shapurji Hormasji (14) that the suit was not a suit to enforce the term of the mortgage as to possession and keep the rights of the parties subsisting but was on the contrary a suit by the mortgagee to get back his money. In cases where the mortgagee sues to get back his money of course the decree fixes the period for payment and provides either for sale or foreclosure. And the effect of the decree is to put an end to the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee after the period mentioned in the decree and to substitute new rights created by the decree. This is clearly brought out by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and O. 34, Civil P. C. which relate to mortgage decrees.

This case has been considered by the Bombay High Court in Abdul Rajack v. Yaman Ganesh (15). That was a suit to redeem a mortgage of 1874. There was a previous redemption decree of 1881 the terms of which were that the plaintiff should pay the defendant Rs. 400 with interest by annual instalments and that if the plaintiff failed to pay any instalment, the defendant should take possession of the land mortgaged and receive the produce thereof in lieu of interest and on the plaintiff paying the principal amount at the end of any fasli year, the land belonging to the plaintiff should be returned to him. It was contended that the suit to redeem was barred by reason of the previous decree and reliance was placed on Hari Ravji v. Shapurji Hormasji (14). Sir Norman Macleod, C. J. observed :

"This case belongs to that numerous class of cases in which the question arises whether the mortgagor is in effect bringing a suit to execute previous redemption decree, or whether he is seeking to exercise the right to redeem, as a right which was reserved to him by the previous decree. On the authority of Hari Ravji Chiplenkar v. Shapurji Hormasji Shet (14), if the suit must be treated as a suit claiming a right to execute the previous decree, then undoubtedly it must be dismissed. But if it comes within the Full Bench decision of this Court in Tani Bagavan v. Haribin Bhavani Dubal (16), then the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. The decision must depend entirely on the nature of the decree in the previous suit; and the difficulty in reconciling the various decisions lies in the fact that the terms of the previous decree will generally vary, nnd further the decision of the question may depend upon whether the previous suit had been brought by the mortgagor or the mortgagee."

After referring to Tani Bagavan v. Haribin Bhavani Dubal (16), the learned Chief Justice observes :

"It seeme to me that in the decree in suit No 480 of 1881 the right to redeem was reserved and that the plaintiff is now entitled to sue for redemption."

Applying this test to the present case it seems to us that the compromise decree far from putting an end to the right to redeem was passed on the basis that the mortgage right should subsist. We are of opinion that in any view of the case the present suit is not barred by S. 47 as contended for by the appellant.

In the view we take, it is unnecessary to consider the contentions raised by the learned Advocate General for the respondents as to the defendants being estopped from contending that the mortgage is not redeemable by reason of the various proceedings we have already referred to or the contention that the decree in the suit on the second mortgage obtained by the mortgagees on the basis that the first mortgage was subsisting operates as res judicata or as an estoppel, or the contention that the mortgagees having admitted for over the statutory period of 12 years, their possession as being possession under the mortgage a fresh title to redeem arises irrespective of the compromise decree. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

P.R.S./V.S. Appeal dismissed.

Civil Appeal No. 218 of 1927. Decided on 12th February 1929, from a decree of Sub-Judge, Masulipatam, in Original Suit No. 124 of 1925.

Contract Act, S. 16 (2) (a)—Pleader standing in fiduciary relation to his client—Rigid proof is expected from pleader to show that his client when gifting property had competent and independent advice.

A pleader standing in a confidential relation towards his client cannot entitle himself to hold benefits which the client may have conferred upon him, unless he can show to the satisfaction of the Court that the client, by whom the benefits have been conferred, had competent and independent advice in conferring them. The Court must be assured that the act is one done after fair, serious and well informed consideration ; and, knowing how easily its enquiry may be baffled by, for instance, a rigid avoidance of full disclosure, it will watch the transaction with a jealousy almost invincible. Advocate General and V. Govindachari—for Appellant.

Jackson, J.—Suit to recover possession of 18 acres of land. The lower Court decreed the suit and defendant 4 appeals.

The Rajah of Chellapalli had a daughter Rajyalakshmamma who had two children, a daughter, Lakshmidevamma and a son, defendant 4. The Raja was very fond of his daughter who either from him or her mother received property worth three or four lakhs. She died in July 1919, and this stridhanam property devolved upon her daughter Lakshmidevamma for whom, the Raja acted as manager. But he was failing in health, and in March 1921 the Court of Wards took over his estate, and put it under the management of his son. In June 1921 he died. Then both his son and grandson defendant 4 set up claims to the property held by Lakshmidevamma. The son claimed lands she held on lease, and house property in Bandar; the grandson, setting up an oral will, claimed the estate of his mother Rajyalakshmamma, including a mitta in Chingleput District. Before any actual suit was filed by the contending parties certain minor disputes came to a head, such as the registration of ownership in Bandar and Chingleput, and the question of a succession certificate. The plaintiff, a First Grade Pleader, who had been her grandfather's legal adviser, advised Lakshmidevamma in these matters and by September 1921 brought them to a successful conclusion. Then in October 1921 there occurred the event which has led to the present suit, and which is best described precisely in plaintiff's own words (P. W. No. 6):

"After some proceedings ended favourably for Lakshmidevamma she sent word through her agent P. W. No 7 saying that she wanted to give me and Krishna Rao each 25 acres land and we should take each a sale deed. But I preferred to take one of 18 acres. Owing to some circumstances I wanted her to execute a sale deed in favour of defendant 5 for me. Her grandmother sent for me and and asked why I was not willing to take a sale-deed from Lakshmidevamma. I said there was no hurry. She said that as Lakshmidevamma was willing to execute a sale deed to me, I may take it. The sale deed is Ex. P I was then present."

This, which is pieced together from various parts of plaintiff's deposition is absolutely all that he has to say about the transaction itself. He does not say anywhere that Lakshmidevamma consulted him in the matter, or that he advised her.

The agent, P. W. No. 7, says that plaintiff met Lakshmidevamma and asked for 18 acres of land in Yeddunapudi, but the plaintiff does not himself suggest that there was a personal interview. The 18 acres was not a deduction of the original 25, but a more convenient parcel. Lakshmidevamma herself has not been called as a witness. Even at the time of the trial plaintiff had no clear idea why the land was given him. He says that he never kept accounts but some fees were due to him from Lakshmidevamma, her mother and grandmother.

The mother's account would be Rs. 3,000 or 4,000. He had no definite agreement with Lakshmidevamma, but it was after the proceedings ended favourably that her agent made the offer. He had no legal claim against her for the grandfather's account. She probably, however, took what was owned by him by her mother and grandfather into consideration and must have wanted to recompense him for being no longer adviser to the zamindar. He cannot say if the document was only on account of past services but there was no distinct understanding that it was his retainer till the end of the impending litigation. It was impossible to believe that when plaintiff was acting as Lakshmidevamma's legal adviser, and met her at any rate at the time of execution, he left everything in a state of doubt. The learned Advocate General in the course of his argument for the appellant estimated the value of the property at Rs. 1,000 per annum, which was not disputed. Probably Lakshmidevamma could only convey a life-interest, but when the document was executed, she was only 29.

The value of the property was out of all proportion to anything that Lakshmidevamma or her mother may have owed the plaintiff for professional services; and as he evidently thought that his fees had some connexion with the grant, he should have disabused the mind of his client on the matter. As he thought that she was also taking the Raja's debt into consideration he should certainly have told her that against her he had no legal claim. If he supposed that there was an idea of retaining his services for the future for his own and his client's sake she should have come to some precise understanding. He should have let his client know whether he was taking this life-interest with its inherent risks as an acquittance of all his claims or whether supposing that she died early, he would still hold her estate accountable. If he thought that she felt herself under some obligation to recompense him for losing the zamindar's practice, he might have told her that the mere fact of his having served her grandfather who was in bitter enmity with his son, her uncle made it impossible for him to be retained, and his helping her had little to do with the matter.

In the plaint he gives as the outstanding reason for the grant the thousands owed him by the Raja for work from Fasli 1326 to 1330, and the thousands owed to him for going to Madras and elsewhere. And yet he never told his client, as he now freely admits that he had no legal claim against her for the fees due from her father. As observed above it is not creditable that with matters in this state nothing more passed between the client and her legal adviser than her offer of 25 acres, and his demand for 18 acres in another's name, with the single comment that there was no hurry. It is the less easy to admit plaintiff's candour for the fact that he has entirely failed to explain why he insisted on this grant being in another's name. He says that he had filed several petitions against Lakshimidevamma's uncle and brother and did not, therefore, like to prejudice her cause by taking the deed in his own name. But this is meaningless. It was quite notorious that he had helped the grandfather and Lakshmidevamma, and the fact that she had paid him his proper fees would not in any way prejudice her. The circumstance would only look ugly if the payment was out of all proportion either to the service or the legal claims, and that is probably why (accepting his own story) the moment he heard that he was to get this gift he was so particular in insisting that it should be in another's name. Because under no conceivable theory was the grant other than an exorbitant payment to plaintiff, and if setting aside the question of fees, it was to be regarded as a mere gift, it would be asked how far this was due to spontaneous generosity and how far to the fact that plaintiff held all his client's documents, and her fortune in the impending litigation was entirely in his hands.

As a matter of fact the three disputants compromised their quarrels that very year by the deed of settlement, Ex. 13. Since Lakshmidevamma has not been called as a witness statements attributed to her in that document can hardly be regarded as evidence but Mr. Varadachari was anxious to found upon them for the sake of the respondent. She says there that the document was nominally executed for the sake of convenience in business affairs. And another bit of hearsay is in the evidence of the agent P. W. No. 7 :

"It was in order that plaintiff might look after her future and pending litigations."

Even without accepting these statements as evidence, but merely pursuing the course of speculations to which plaintiff's reticence has driven the Court one might hazard the guess that Lakshmidevamma made the plaintiff this handsome grant from fear that unless she put him under a definite obligation her affairs would not prosper. This may be the motive for plaintiff's refusing frankly to tell the Court all that passed between himself and his client, and giving by way of substitute a version of the transaction so laconic as to seem opposed to all common dealing, courtesy and sense. But if plaintiff really did treat his client in the manner that he describes and allowed her to make him this grant of land from a false sense of obligation and erroneous calculation of his dues, his conduct would be equally opposed to the law governing the relations between a legal adviser or solicitor and his client.

In this respect, as freely conceded by Mr. Varadachariar the law of India does not differ from that of England. Perhaps the fullest exposition of the English Law on the subject is to be found in the judgment of Vaughan Williams, L. J., in Wright v. Carter (1). His Lordship begins by quoting Lord Eldon in Hatch v. Hatch (2) :

"It is almost impossible in the course of the connexion of ..... attorney and client ..... trustee and cestui que trust that transaction shall stand purporting to be a bounty for the execution of antecedent duty. There may not be a more moral act, one, that would do more credit to a young man beginning the world, or afford a better omen for the future, than if, a trustee having done his duty, the cestui que trust, taking it into his fair, serious and well informed consideration, were to do an act of bounty like this. But the Court cannot permit it ; except quite satisfied, that the act is that of nature ..... recollecting, that in discussing, whether it is an act of a rational consideration, an act of pure volition, uninfluenced, that enquiry is so easily baffled in a Court of justice, that instead of the spontaneous act of a friend, uninfluenced, it may be the impulse of a mind, misled by undue kindness, or forced by oppression ; .... and therefore, if the Court does not watch these transactions with a jealousy almost invincible, in a great majority of cases it will lend its assistance to fraud."

"was there dealing with the case of a gift, and it is perfectly plain that in the case of a gift the rule applied by the Court of Equity is much more stringent, is more absolute, than the rule that is applied in the case of a bargain or a contract. The principle that I understand Lord Eldon to be affirming is this—that whenever you have these fiduciary relations (and in the present case we have to deal with the particular fiduciary relation of solicitor and client), the moment the relation is established, there arises a presumption of influence, which presumption will continue as long as the relation, such as that of solicitor and client, continues ..... Now I am not saying that the presumption ..... is an irrebuttable presumption: I do not think that the cases go that length, and I do not think that Lord Eldon meant so to lay down."

"To my mind, all that he means is that, so long as this fiduciary relation continues, so long it will be very difficult to support the gift, and so long will the Court refuse to go into nice discussions as to whether the gift—taking the case of a gift by a client to his solicitor—was a gift which was advantageous to the client or whether it was not. I do not mean to say that, if the gift to the solicitor is manifestly one which a prudent man would not have given supposing the relation of solicitor and client to have determined in hac re, such a fact may not be taken into consideration as shewing that, notwithstanding the determination of the actual relation .... it is obvious that the influence of the solicitor had not ceased ..... So, on the other hand, the fact that the gift is a very trifling gift, or a gift made by a man with so ample a fortune that it must have been trifling to him, is a matter which might fairly be taken into consideration in considering whether the influence continues."

Of course, in the present case there is no question whether the relationship continued, it admittedly did, and it is only to that question that the size of the gift is said here to be relevant. Where the relationship has continued the Court will refuse to go into nice questions of advantage.

It is therefore laid down that the Court must be assured that the act is one done after fair, serious, and well informed consideration, and, knowing how easily its inquiry may be baffled by, for instance, a rigid avoidance of full disclosure it will watch the transaction with a jealousy almost invincible. What has the plaintiff done in this case to show that his client was fairly dealt with, seriously treated, well informed, or indeed helped to any sort of consideration?

The learned Advocate General has cited numerous other authorities, but they merely confirm the principles stated in this judgment, and there is the less need to consider them for the circumstances that no alternative view is pressed on behalf of respondent. Mr. Varadachariar confined himself to combating the extreme position taken in early cases, that the presumption is unrebuttable, and the solicitor in matters like this, must always show that his client had independent advice; neither of which propositions is advanced on the other side. He also quoted an obiter dictum of Lord Brougham's as regards the relationship of solicitor and client, which when closely examined does not deviate from the direct rulings on the subject:

"A client, for example, may naturally entertain a kindly feeling towards a solicitor by whose assistance he has long benefited; and he may fairly and wisely desire to benefit him by a gift ..... No law that is tolerable among civilised men—men who have the benefit of civility without the evils of excessive refinement and overdone subtlety—can ever forbid such a transaction, provided the client be of mature age and of sound mind, and there be nothing to shew that deception was practised, or that the .... solicitor availed himself of his situation to withhold any knowledge, or to exercise any influence hurtful to others and advantageous to himself. In a word, standing in the relation in which he stands to the other party the proof lies upon him to shew that he has placed himself in the position of a stranger, that he has cut off, as it were, the connexion which bound him to the party giving ... and that nothing has happened, which might not have happened, had no such connexion subsisted:" Hunter v. Atkins (3).

These observations have little bearing on a case where the connexion still subsisted, and the gift was admittedly in some relation to the solicitor's fees and almost it only amounts to saying that a solicitor must afford full and satisfactory proof rebutting the presumption of undue influence. And this is the burden of all the rulings, that the solicitor must fully assure the Court that he had fully advised his client:

"The solicitor must prove that his client was fully informed of all the material facts, understood the transaction and that the transaction itself, both as to price and otherwise, was a fair one;" Allison v. Clayhills (4).

(3) [1834] 3 Myl. & K. 113.
(4) [1908] 97 L. T. 709.

Lord Halsbury observes in Willis v. Barron (5) :

"He was a solicitor too, and he was her trustee. Was he under no duty to his cestui que trust to tell her what her rights were, and what the rights were which she was giving up. My Lords, it seems to me, I confess, hardly susceptible to argument"

In Liles v. Terry (6) it is laid down in unequivocal terms that persons standing in a confidential relation towards others cannot entitle themselves to hold benefits which those others may have conferred upon them, unless they can show to the satisfaction of the Court that the person by whom the benefits have been conferred had competent and independent advice in conferring them. In this case Lord Esher holds that the gift is invalid ; as is held also in Tomson v. Judge (7) where Lord Thurlow, Lord Erskine and Lord Eldon are cited as ruling that it is not open to the attorney to show that the transaction is fair. If it be conceded that the modern rule is not quite so stringent, it is clear, nevertheless, that the showing of the attorney must be particularly full and comprehensive. The case law in the latter matter has recently been reviewed by the Privy Council in Inch Noriah v. Shaik Allie (8) where Lord Hailsham lays down that it is necessary for the donee to prove that the gift was the result of the free exercise of independent will :

"The most obvious way to prove this is by establishing that the gift was made after the nature and effect of the transaction had been fully explained to the donor by some independent and qualified person so completely as to satisfy the Court that the donor was acting independently of any influence from the donee and with the full appreciation of what he was doing ..... The fact to be established is that stated by Cotton, L. J., in Allcard v. Skinner (9) that the gift was the spontaneous act of the donor acting under circumstances which enabled him to exercise an independent will. If evidence is given of circumstances sufficient to establish this fact, their Lordships see no reason for disregarding them merely because they do not include independent advice from a lawyer."

So in this case if the plaintiff had proved that he cleared up his client's mind as to her obligations, the exact fees which were owing, and the services which he had rendered in the past or would render in the future, it would not be absolutely essential for him to have referred her to independent advice, though he would more easily have borne his heavy burden of proof, if he had taken that course.

To the same effect in another Privy Council case, Soharah v. Chabak Binte. Lord Haldane lays down that the plaintiff :

"can discharge the burden incumbent on him by showing that the relationship notwithstanding, the donor knew completely what he was doing, and acted of his own completely free will. In the case of a solicitor taking a gift from his client this is obviously much more difficult to establish than in other cases."

The plaintiff's suit might be dismissed on the very short ground that his statement of the circumstances surrounding this gift is so perfunctory that it cannot be accepted as true and, therefore, provides no rebuttal to the presumption of undue influence. But upon the large assumption that he has made a full disclosure of the circumstances, he must still fail, because on his own showing he did nothing whatsoever to put his client in complete possession of the full facts regarding her obligations and liabilities.

Mr. Varadachari, attempted to excuse his client on the ground that the pleadings did not apprise him of the case which he had to meet but he has no legal grievance on that account. Issue 8 refers back to the ground taken in para. 7 of defendant 4's written statement, and there it is definitely stated that plaintiff standing in a fiduciary position got lands conveyed to him in another's name from his client and the transaction was not valid. His further complaint that though plaintiff deliberately withheld the details of the transaction in his examination-in-chief, they ought to have been elicited in cross-examination deserves no notice.

Finally, it is argued for the plaintiff-respondent that whatever may be the rights of this transaction defendant 4 has acquired no title to challenge it. It is conceded that if Lakshmidevamma's title to the land in question has passed to defendant 4 her right to question the benami sale would also pass. But it is argued that the deed of settlement is in effect no more than a surrender of her claim by Lakshmidevamma and an acknowledgment of defendant 4's superior title under the oral will which he had set up. Therefore, defendant 4 in order to resist the plaintiff's suit must set up his own title and cannot rely upon any rights flowing from the title of Lakshmidevamma to which he has never succeeded. This plea turns upon whether under the settlement deed, Ex. 13, the parties intended and effected an actual conveyance, or merely provided for a mutual surrender of title. We have no doubt from a perusal of the document that a conveyance was intended. The exact wording is (in para. 7). It was settled that the land measuring 36.08 acres . . . together with the rights attached to it should pass to No. 2 (i. e., defendant 4) and, at the close of the para. also the rights of the muchilika which was executed in favour of Lakshmidevamma regarding the 36.08 acres and which is now in force should pass to defendant 4.

Mr. Varadachari suggested, following para. 39 of the lower Court's judgment, that defendant 4 may have been given the precise parcel conveyed to the plaintiff's benamidar out of deliberate malice, so as to enable him to attack his lawful possession. The imputation of malice must depend upon the light in which the benami transaction is to be regarded but the suggestion that there was a deliberate intention to attack seems to be well founded and if the parties intended defendant 4 to take action they would presumably also have intended to put him in a position to do so.

Moreover, it seems obvious that if the landlord's right against the tenant was transferred, the right of ownership was also intended to be conveyed. It is not a matter in which case-law is of any assistance. Every compromise of this Court must be considered according to the language of each document, and the peculiar circumstances of each case. No doubt having regard to the special case of a widow alienating property afterwards claimed by a reversioner it has sometimes been held that the document was no more than an acknowledgment of title, and no property was actually conveyed : cf. Khunni Lal v. Govind Krishna Narain (10). But in this case it is an undoubted conveyance. The learned Subordinate Judge concedes in his para. 34 that the document may amount to a transfer and reading it as a whole and considering its underlying intention, we have no doubt that that is the correct interpretation.

The rest of the judgment calls for no special remark except that in para. 24 the plaintiff's vague guesses are given as his positive version, as though he has assured himself that they warranted the grant. And the learned Subordinate Judge sounds too much in his para. 34 upon the circumstance that the defendants did not examine Lakshmidevamma. Primarily the plaintiff might have been expected to call his client, but since neither party has called her, it is idle to attempt to obtain her views in the matter either by surmise or by secondary evidence. No doubt the learned Subordinate Judge's difficulty lay mainly in the fact that he had no access to the English authorities, and did not know how heavily the burden lay upon the plaintiff.

For the above reasons the appeal is allowed with costs throughout.

Judgment.—This is a revision petition against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Tiruvarur allowing an amendment of the plaint in A. S. No. 68 of 1925, which came up before him on appeal from O. S. No. 309 of 1923, before the District Munsif of Tiruvarur. The suit was to redeem certain properties in the possession of the defendant. The plaintiff's case was that he purchased this property from one Subbiah Pillai under a sale deed dated 9th October 1923 (Ex. B.) and that this Subbiah Pillai was the reversioner to the estate of one Veera Pillai, whose widow had enjoyed the property after her husband's death and had executed the mortgage-deed in question. The defendant set up the case that he had purchased the property from one Swaminatha Pillai the great-grandson of Veera Pillai's grandfather. From the genealogical tree filed by the plaintiff, it was obvious that his vendor, Subbiah (P. W. No. 4) was one degree more remote from the last male-holder, Veera Pillai, than two other persons Ramasami and Ayya Pillai mentioned therein. The evidence of P. W. No. 3 was to the effect that Ramasami was the nearest agnate at the death of Veera Pillai's widow, Muthachi and that he performed the obsequies at her death, and P. W. No. 4 the vendor expressly stated that he himself did not assert his rights at Muthachi's death, because Ayya Pillai, a preferential heir was alive. The trial Court disbelieved the relationship of the defendant's alleged vendor, Swaminatha Pillai, and gave the plaintiff a decree, from which an appeal was preferred to the Subordinate Judge. It does not appear to have been argued before the District Munsif, though it was perfectly clear from the genealogy filed by the plaintiff and from the evidence of P. Ws. 3 and 4 that plaintiff's vendor, Subbiah Pillai was not the next reversioner to Veera Pillai, the last male-holder of the property. On this point being taken in appeal, the plaintiff asked for leave to amend his plaint to show that Subbiah Pillai got his title from Ayya Pillai and Ramasami. This was allowed and the present revision petition is against the order allowing the amendment.

It is argued that the effect of the amendment is to allow the plaintiff to set up a new case in contradiction to that set out in the plaint. It is argued on the other side that the amendment is merely giving a more detailed account of how the plaintiff's vendor, Subbiah, acquired his title. It should be noted that in the plaint Veera Pillai is distinctly stated to be the last male holder and the recital in the sale deed by Subbiah Pillai to the plaintiff is that the vendor, Subbiah Pillai, is the next reversioner. These are perfectly specific terms the meaning of which is well-known and it seems to me that it is to change both the plaintiff's title and cause of action to say now that Veera Pillai was not the last male holder nor Subbiah Pillai his next reversioner. Although the Code of 1908 has given greater latitude with regard to the amendment of plaints, the Privy Council ruling in Gopee Lal v. Sree Chandrolee Buhooji (1) has not been affected. Their Lordships there laid down that they cannot :

> " depart from the rule which has always prevailed that a man must recover according to his allegations and his proofs. It would not enable their Lordships to allow . . . . . an entirely new case to be now brought forward before them, which is not even set up or hinted at in the plaint."

On behalf of the petitioner, Pethasari v. Sendamarai Ayi (2) and Maung Tha So v. Maung Lu Pe (3) were quoted. In the former of these, it was held that the plaintiff who had claimed certain property under the title of a widow's estate could not change that title into one of the widow's sridhana property. In Maung Tha So v. Maung Lu Pe (3) it was held that the plaintiff who set up title as a son adopted krittima could not change that into a title as a son adopted apatittha. On the other side are quoted L. P. A. No. 112 of 1925* decided 22nd November 1927 and B. Satyanarayana v. S. Venkata Tirumala (4). The facts in the latter case are not given. I have carefully perused the judgment, which I have called for, in the former case and I think it is distinguishable from the present. In that case, plaintiff 1, who claimed the properties, alleged that they belonged to one Vasu Pattar who died leaving three daughters, that at the time the last of the daughters died, plaintiff 1's father was the nearest reversioner alive and that on his death he himself and defendants 9 to 11 became entitled to the properties. The contesting defendants 1 to 4 alleged that at the time the last of the daughters died, the reversioner was not plaintiff 1's father but the plaintiff 1 himself together with defendants 9 to 11 and two other persons from whom defendant 1 had taken an assignment of his rights. These two persons applied to the Court to be made parties. They claimed that they were also reversioners but denied having assigned their rights to defendant 1. Issues were raised and the suit was tried on the merits and it was decided that plaintiff and defendants 9 to 11 were not exclusively entitled to the property but that plaintiff, defendants 9 to 11 and defendants 12 and 13 were the reversionary heirs.

On appeal, the learned District Judge considered an amendment of the plaint was necessary but subsequently he came to the conclusion that an amendment should not be allowed and, therefore, reversed the first Court's decree and dismissed the suit. An appeal against his decision having been dismissed, the matter came up, on Letters Patent Appeal. Their Lordships held that from the time when the two persons mentioned as additional reversioners by defendants 1 to 4 were added as defendants 12 and 13, the suit should be treated as one relating to the estate of Vasu Pattar and not to the estate of plaintiff's father and that as a fact it was so treated by all the parties and tried as such and that the only question before the Court was whether the plaintiff was entitled to the larger share that he in the first instant claimed or only to the lesser share, if defendants 12 and 13 should also be allowed to participate in the property. They also found that the suit was not liable to be dismissed, because no formal amendment of the plaint had been made. The point whether the present suit must be dismissed, if the plaint is not amended, is not before me and I am only concerned with the question whether the amendment should have been allowed. It appears to me that this case reported in 26 L. W. Short Notes, p. 92. is a peculiar one and different in several vital respects from the present suit. In the first place the plaintiff was in that case on the contentions raised by the defendants themselves a direct reversioner on Vasu Pattar's death. His admitted title was actually a more direct one than that which he set up. In the second place, the Court found that, from the time when defendants 12 and 13 were added the suit related to the estate of Vasu Pattar and not of plaintiff's father.

These elements are altogether wanting in the present case. The plaintiff derives his title solely from his vendor Subbiah Pillai. It is not for me to say here whether he can succeed on his plaint if unamended. It is not the point before me, but when it is argued that he might simply have claimed from Subbiah, without detailing the latter's title it is almost certain that the defendant would in that case have called for specific information as to Subbiah's title.

The plaintiff cannot have a better title than his vendor. If Subbiah had filed the suit, as the next reversioner to Veera Pillai, it seems to me perfectly clear that he must have been non-suited as the genealogy filed and the evidence would show that he was not the next reversioner. This differentiates the case entirely from that in 26 L. W. Short Notes p. 92. where the plaintiff was actually the next reversioner himself and not his father through whom he claimed. To allow an amendment of this sort would, I think, open the door to most dangerous consequences. It happens in this case that it is the genealogy filed by the plaintiff himself and and the evidence of his own witnesses which shows that his vendor is not the next reversioner to Veera Pillai as he states, and it is also true that the defendant's case has not been believed by the trial Court. Nevertheless, it is difficult to see if an amendment of the plaint were allowed in a case like this, how it could be refused even where the existence of a nearer reversioner than the person through whom the plaintiff claimed title had been proved by the defendant. Even in the present case supposing it were proved in trial after the amended plaint that the plaintiff's vendor Subbiah never succeeded even to the two nearer reversioners, would it be open to the plaintiff then to ask for a fresh amendment of the plaint to show that his vendor Subbiah, had title to the property through adverse possession or in some other manner ? I am of opinion that the proposed amendment distinctly alters the cause of action and that it is not correct to say that it merely supplies additional details. I do not think, therefore, that it should have been permitted. The High Court will interfere in revision in a matter of procedure where the Court has acted with material irregularity by granting leave to amend a plaint, where such leave should not have been granted : vide Prem Das v. Gokal Chand (5).

The revision petition will be allowed with costs and the order allowing the amendment of the plaint set aside.

G. Lakshmanna—for Appellant.

Judgment.—These are connected appeals. The plaintiff is the appellant in each appeal. The defendant respondent is the Industrial Bank, Limited ; but there is no appearance for the bank in both these appeals. The suits filed by the plaintiffs are for the refund of the moneys paid by them to the defendant bank on account of the shares which they agreed to take in pursuance of alluring prospectus issued by the company. The plaintiff's case is that the contract between them and the defendant was vitiated by fraud and misrepresentation, that there was no valid allotment of the shares and that they are entitled to rescind the contract and claim the refund of the moneys with interest at 6 per cent per annum. The learned District Munsiff in a lucid and able judgment discussed the questions at issue at great length and found that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for refund of the moneys with interest. The lower appellate Court reversed the decrees of the first Court but on a perusal of its judgment, I am constrained to observe that it missed the vital points in the case and proceeded to determine the issues on what seem to be somewhat irrelevant considerations.

The main contention urged on behalf of the appellants is, that two of the directors mentioned in the prospectus are said to have retired even before the allotment of shares, that the plaintiffs agreed to take the shares in the company on the faith of the representations made in the prospectus which entitled them to believe that these two important gentlemen would continue to be the directors in the usual course, and that, if the facts of their resignation had only been communicated to them, as it ought to have been done, before the allotment of shares, they would have rescinded the contract and claimed the refund of the moneys sent by them. It is an admitted fact that in these circumstances no notice of the resignation or retirement of these two directors was given to the plaintiffs after the issue of prospectus and before the actual allotment of shares. The suppression of this fact is alleged by the plaintiffs to be something which would amount to fraud in the eye of the law, justifying them in going back on their offer and claiming a refund of the moneys. In the course of the correspondence, it is even admitted by the defendant company in their letter dated 16th March 1922 : vide Ex. 20 that as regards the change in the directorate before allotment, the plaintiffs were certainly entitled to notice, but they set up an acquiescence on the part of the plaintiffs to justify their refusal to refund the amount. On this question, there is the distinct authority of a leading .case reported in Re, Scottish Petroleum Co., (1) (Anderson's case). The facts in that case appear to be on all fours with the facts of the present case. In that case, a subscriber for shares in a company received a letter of allotment and at the same time a letter informing him that two of the four directors named in the prospectus had retired. On the very same day he wrote to the company stating that he applied for shares on the faith of those two gentlemen being directors and asked for the cancellation of the allotment and removal of his name from the register of shareholders. What the duty of the company in such circumstances would be is clearly stated in the following passage in that judgment :

"I do not think there was when the prospectus was issued, because it was believed that Mr. Gibson and Mr. Ross would act ; but when the company found that these gentlemen would not act, they were bound to issue a new prospectus containing other names, and to inform those who had applied for shares, that before the allotment was made other directors had been appointed and then it would be for the applicants for shares to say, under those circumstances, whether they would adhere to their offer or would withdraw it."

The learned Judge in that case proceeded to say, that the directors ought to have said that they would give the applicants the option of withdrawing when the state of things on the faith of which they made the application no longer existed. Any persistence on the part of the company in refusing the option of withdrawing would be an unjustifiable thing in the opinion of the learned Judge. In the present case, what happened is exactly as stated above. To the same effect is the decision reported in Re : Companies Acts 1862 to 1900 ; Re : Kent County Gas Light and Coke Co. (2). Under similar circumstances, it was held that the shareholders were entitled to rescind the contract following the observation in Lindley's book on Company Law which is as follows :

"If an application for shares is made on the faith of a statement which is true when made but which is not true when the shares are allotted the applicant may refuse to take them."

In view of these clear principles of law it cannot be said that the plaintiffs are not entitled to rescind the contract and claim a refund. It is a pity that the lower appellate Court lost sight of these principles, though they were adverted to in the first Court's judgment. The fact that subsequent to the formation of the company after allotment of shares, there is every likelihood of a change in the directorate, has no bearing on the present question, because until the allotment of the shares, the plaintiffs have a right to withdraw their offer, if there should be any breach in the terms of the contract published in the prospectus. On this point alone the plaintiffs would be entitled to the relief asked for by them.

It is unnecessary to consider the other questions as regards the validity of the allotment of shares made by the defendant. If that allotment is found to be invalid or ultra vires, that would only be another ground for giving a decision in plaintiff's favour. In the result, these second appeals are allowed and the decrees of the Court of first instance are restored with costs in all the Courts.

Appeals Nos. 256, 257 and 363 of 1927, Decided on 4th April 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, Nellore, in Original Suit No. 43 of 1925.

 (a) Hindu Law—Partition — Minor—Minor is incapable of exercising intention to separate—Minor is separated from family only after decree—Therefore property of minor son dying pending suit by his elder brother as guardian vests in father by survivorship.

A minor is incapable of exercising the intention to separate by himself; the next friend does it for him. If the Court thinks fit to allow partition on behalf of the minor, the minor becomes divided; but until the decree is passed the minor's interest is not divided from the rest of the family. B. Somayya—for Respondents.

Ramesam, J.—These three appeals are filed against the judgment in O. S. No. 43 of 1925 on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Nellore. The original plaintiffs were two brothers. The first was a major and the second a minor appearing by his elder brother as next friend. Plaintiff 2 died during the pendency of the suit. Defendant 1 was their father, defendant 2 was the brother of defendant 1 and the other defendants were the alienees of defendants 1 and 2. Defendant 8 was the special receiver appointed in the insolvency proceedings in connexion with the insolvency of defendant 1 who became insolvent while the suit was pending. The suit was filed to declare that the partition between defendants 1 and 2 in 1915 was unfair and therefore not binding on the plaintiffs, to set aside certain alienations made by defendants 1 and 2 and also for a partition of the shares of plaintiffs 1 and 2 and recovering possession of them. The Subordinate Judge found that the partition of 1915 was fair and binding on the plaintiffs and on that footing gave a decree to plaintiff 1 for partition and possession of his share of the properties that were allotted to his branch. Appeal No. 256 was filed by the receiver (defendant 8), Appeal No. 257 was filed by plaintiff 1 and Appeal No. 363 was filed by one of the alienees, the alienation in whose favour was declared not to be binding on the plaintiffs. We will now take up these appeals in order.

In Appeal No. 256 the only point raised by defendant 8 is that provision should be made in the decree for the discharge of defendant 2's debts out of the joint family properties and that the decree for partition should be only of the rest of the properties that remained after provision is made for the payment of the debts. Defendant 8 filed a written statement in the Court below saying that as the main object of the suit was to have the partition of 1915 and the alienations made by defendant 1 declared invalid and to have them set aside and not a partition between defendant 1 and his sons, the validity and binding nature of the debts cannot be gone into in this suit. Apparently, at the time when issues were framed with reference to this allegation the parties did not think it necessary to raise an issue relating to the debts. The result was that all the parties and the Subordinate Judge thought that no inquiry about the debts was necessary and the decree passed does not make any provision for any enquiry and the preliminary decree is a pure decree for partition. Now defendant 8 wants such a provision to be inserted. We think it is too late. After all, the creditors do not suffer by our refusing to adopt the course suggested and it does not injuriously affect the interests of any parties. This appeal is therefore dismissed with costs. The receiver may pay the costs and take his own costs from the estate of the insolvent.

In Appeal No. 257 plaintiff 1 is the appellant. He argues that he never intended to separate from his younger brother but his object was that he and his younger brother should be separated from his father and therefore he was entitled to two-thirds of the properties that were allotted to his branch or at any rate half of them and defendant 2 half. We think that both these contentions are not well founded. Plaintiff 1 being a minor, is incapable of exercising the intention to separate by himself. The next friend does it for him. If the Court thinks fit to allow partition on behalf of the minor, one can well say that the minor has become divided; but until the decree is passed one cannot say that the minor's interests are divided from the rest of the family. Plaintiff 1 has divided from the rest of the family. The result is that plaintiff 1 went out of the family and plaintiff 2 remained with the family, and consequently the share of plaintiff 2 vested in defendant 1 by survivorship. The Subordinate Judge is right in his conclusion. This point therefore fails.

The second point argued for plaintiff 1 is that the alienation in favour of defendant 6 was nominal. We think that the Subordinate Judge is right in the conclusion he arrived at. His reasons are given in para 14 of his judgment with which we agree. The third point is that the partition of 1915 was really unfair. Here also we agree with the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge. The result is Appeal No. 257 also fails and is dismissed with costs. Some grounds are taken against respondent 3. So far as that item is concerned respondent 3 will be entitled to get costs proportionate to that item. The other respondents will get their proportionate costs, i. e., proportionate to their interests.

Appeal No. 363 of 1927 is by defendant 5. His sale deed is Ex. 5. It was effected for the purpose of discharging the prior mortgage debt under Ex. 1. It is also not disputed that the consideration for the sale-deed was paid in discharge of the mortgage debt as the endorsement on the deed shows. The Subordinate Judge following the decision in Bandhu Ram v. Ram Kishun Sonar (1), has held that there was no pressure for the sale and therefore the sale was not binding on the plaintiffs. Whatever may be the law as to the right of a manager to sell when there was no pressure, a father can certainly sell for discharging antecedent debts as here. There is no question about the existence of the antecedent debt or of the fact of its having been paid off. We do not agree with the decision in Bandhu Ram v. Ram Kishun Sonar (1). We allow this appeal and hold that this sale is binding on the plaintiffs. We direct that this item be exclnded from partition. Defendant 5 will have his costs in appeal and in the Court below.

Judgment.—This second appeal is from an order to deliver property to an auction purchaser in execution. The sale took place in 1917. Its confirmation was opposed but it was confirmed on 5th March 1919, by the appellate Court. From that time onward for a period of more than 10 years the purchaser has been attempting to get possession. In the fourth and last application dated 28th September 1923, he was met by one of the three sons of the deceased judgment-debtor by the plea of limitation under Art. 180, Lim. Act. The first application for possession was dated 15th November 1919. An order was made for giving possession on that application but not carried out owing to the obstruction of the daughter-in-law of the judgment-debtor and so the application was treated as "closed". The second application dated 15th December 1919, was for removal of obstruction and possession but removal of obstruction could not be ordered or possession given on account of the pendency of obstruction proceedings followed by a suit filed by the obstructor during which the purchaser was prevented by an injunction and by reason of a stay order from the High Court in Civil Revision Petition No. 1919 filed by the judgment-debtors against the order confirming sale. Before those proceedings were closed, however, the application was itself treated as 'closed'. The third application was made on 12th October 1921, after the termination on 31st August 1922, of the obstructor's suit O. S. No. 287 of 1920. This application was returned to the applicant's vakil for representation with the certificate of the sale in one week. This was not done as the vakil who got back this application was in custody for a long time afterwards. On his release that petition was re-presented by another vakil on 20th July 1923, with the sale certificate on behalf of the purchaser with another application to excuse the delay in re-presentation caused by the above circumstance. The Munsif by his order dated 24th November 1923, declined to excuse the delay but allowed in the meanwhile a fourth application dated 28th September 1923, to be filed as a continuation of the first and second application and it is this which the judgment-debtor's son now says is time-barred as it was filed more than three years after the confirmation of the sale.

The District Munsif held that in the circumstances stated above the first application can be treated as "closed" only for statistical purposes as the order for delivery made on that application was not carried out merely on account of the resistance of third parties and that the application, dated 28th September 1923, was a continuation of the previous proceedings. He, therefore, ordered delivery of possession to be given on 1st March 1924. One of the three sons of the judgment-debtor appealed to the District Judge. He held that the application of 28th September 1923 should not be treated as a revival of the earlier proceedings because the third application dated 12th October 1921, must be held to have been dismissed as it was not re-presented in time and the application to excuse delay was refused. But the learned Judge upheld a preliminary objection taken on behalf of the auction-purchaser that the appeal to him was incompetent as the question in dispute did not arise between opposite parties or their representatives and, therefore, do not fall within S. 47, Civil P. C., and, that, therefore, no appeal lay. The judgment-debtor's son has filed the second appeal.

Two questions were argued : (1) that the view of the lower appellate Court that no appeal lay to him was incorrect and (2) that the application for possession was barred under Art. 180. I do not propose to deal with the first contention as in my opinion there was more than one application for possession made within three years of the confirmation of the sale pending undisposed of before the Court sufficient to support the District Munsif's order. The first three applications were clearly made within three years of the date of the confirmation of the sale. On the first application an order for possession had been made but not carried out owing to no fault of the purchaser. To close such an application because the order made could not be immediately carried out on account of obstruction only means that the execution of the order had necessarily to be postponed not that the application is dismissed. Treating such a matter as "closed" can only be for statistical purposes. Similarly the second application for removal of obstruction and for delivery of possession could not be dealt with finally as the obstructor's suit intervened and an order could only be passed after it terminated and the injunction against the purchaser was dissolved. To "close" such an application on account of the pendency of other proceedings before the termination of which final orders could not be passed has no other meaning than that consideration of the matter is postponed and pending such consideration the application is for statistical purposes closed. The fact that the third application was not represented in time and that the Court refused to excuse to delay, in re-presentation of that petition does not mean that it was dealing with the previous two applications which were judicially undisposed of, because even before 24th November 1923, the date of the order refusing to excuse the delay in re-presentation of the third petition, the present or fourth application to continue the proceedings under the first two applications had already been filed on 28th September 1920, and it was disposed of only on 2nd February 1924 the date of the order now under appeal. I cannot agree with the learned Judge when he says that the first application was not merely closed for statistical purposes. He has said nothing about the second application. It is well recognized that closing or striking off on statistical or administrative grounds applications for judicial relief do dot dispose of them judicially and that for purposes of limitation they must be regarded as still pending. The appellant has absolutely no merits and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 1739 of 1925, Decided on 27th March 1929.

Hindu Law -- Succession— Dancing girl cannot by custom inherit property of her husband—Daughter of such girl inheriting her father's estate cannot plead custom about taking property absolutely.

No custom among dancing girls could ordinarily provide for a case of a dancing girl succeeding to the properties of her husband because the very idea is that the "dancing girls" do not marry and do not have legal husbands whose properties they could "inherit." A daughter of such girl cannot, therefore, inherit her father's property absolutely. [P 330 C 1, 2]

Advocate-General—for Appellants.

S. Varadachariar—for Respondents.

Judgment.--Defendants 5 to 8 are the appellants in this second appeal. Defendants 1 to 4 are the daughter's sons of Seetharamudu on whose death Gangalakshmi his widow took possession of these properties. In the case of an ordinary family governed by Mitakshara Law the presumption will be that Gangalakshmi had only a life-estate (widow's estate) in the properties that came to her on the death of Seetharamudu. The appellants, that is, defendants 5 to 8 who are the alienees from Gangalakshmi and her daughters Rattama and Narasamma, set up a custom in the family of the parties by which in the properties inherited by a female, she would have absolute rights. The plaintiff claims as vendee from the daughters' sons, namely defendants 1 to 4. Under the ordinary Hindu Law the plaintiff as purchaser from the daughters' sons would be entitled to the property on the death of their mothers, namely daughters of Gangalakshmi. It is upon the appellants who claim as purchasers from the widow and her daughters to prove that they got an absolute interest in the properties.

The learned advocate for the appellants contends that by virtue of a special custom, his vendors were absolutely entitled to the property. All that is in evidence in this particular case is that the family of Gangalakshmi, Rattamma and Narasamma originally belonged to dancing women caste. But whatever might be the position of affairs before Gangalakshmi, it is clear that, Gangalakshmi left off her profession and married Seetharamudu, and it is by virtue of that marriage and as heir of Seetharamudu that Gangalakshmi claimed right to these properties. No custom among dancing girls could ordinarily provide for a case of a dancing girl succeeding to the properties of her husband because the very idea is that the "dancing girls" do not "marry" and do not have "legal husbands" whose properties they could "inherit." Therefore, it is not likely that there would be any such custom as is set up on behalf of defendants 5 to 8. Objection is, however, taken by the learned advocate for the appellants to the statement made by the learned Subordinate Judge at p. 2, namely :

"we have here the important fact that the women of this family have not been carrying on their caste profession and were leading married lives."

Therefore, the custom that exists in the family should not be held to be not binding upon them and it is complained that the lower appellate Court has not disposed of the case in a satisfactory manner. I am not, however, clear that the learned Subordinate Judge has in any way misdirected himself in the disposal of the appeal. But whatever that may be, the onus is really upon the appellants to prove the custom set up by them. On questioning the learned advocate for the appellant to point out to me the evidence that has been let in to prove the alleged custom he admitted (and very properly) that there is no such legal evidence at all in this particular case, as would prove a custom. That being so the finding on the first point raised before the Court is correct.

The second point raised is that the alienation evidenced by Ex. 1 under which the appellant's claim should be upheld because it was an alienation made not only by the widow Gangalakshmi but also by the next reversioners, namely, her daughters Rattamma and Narasamma. It is argued that because the next reversioners also joined with the widow in making the alienation, therefore, there is a presumption that the alienation was for binding purposes, and that the onus will be upon the ultimate reversioner to prove that the alienation was not binding. In this particular case there is the fact that the next reversioners who joined in the alienation are Rattamma and Narasamma who too had only life-estates. But without pursuing this point further, I may say that we have got in this case the finding of fact by both the lower Courts, on a consideration of all the circumstances and the evidence let in the case, that no necessity for the alienation (Ex. 1) has been made out. That being so, no question of presumption arises. The finding has been arrived at having regard to all the evidence let in in the case. I think that finding is binding upon me in second appeal, and consequently I think there is nothing in the second point raised by the learned advocate for the appellants. This being my view on both the points raised on behalf of the appellants, I think the second appeal should be dismissed, which I hereby do, with costs.

Assuming that it did not, the defect seems to me to have been cured by the fact that he was supplied with a copy of the charge-sheet. The next raises a more difficult question. The petitioner during the enquiry, asked the Mgisatrate to re-summon some of the witnesses against him for further cross-examination but his request was refused. Mr. Grant argues that, by virtue of sub-S. (2), S. 117, Criminal P. C.. the whole of the procedure applicable to a warrant case is applicable to a case of this nature. I have been referred to no authority of this Court that bears directly on the point. Indeed in the course of a long experience as a Magistrate, I have never come across a case in which it was even suggested to me that the accused in a security enquiry had the right now claimed. There are two decisions by other High Courts which directly negative it. One is Chintamon Singh v. Emperor (1). The other is Bija v. Emperor (2). I should be prepared to follow these decisions but for certain observations that occur in E. Venkatachinnayya v. Emperor (3).

The question that had to be decided was whether the accused in a security case was entitled under S. 250 (a), Criminal P. C., to demand that the witnesses against them should be re-summoned and re-heard, when there was a change of magistracy. The decision was that though the subsection very clearly refers to a trial and not an enquiry, they were so entitled. With great respect, it seems to me somewhat difficult to reconcile this view with the view expressed in other decisions of this Court as to the distinction between a trial and an enquiry. That, however, is a question that does not arise here. What is material is that two of the Judges, Ayling and Coutts-Trotter, JJ., expressed the opinion that the whole of the procedure governing warrant cases, was attracted by S. 117 (2), Criminal P.C., to enquiries in security cases of the kind I am now considering. The matter is of considerable importance and, in view of the obiter dicta in the case in E. Venkatachinnayya v. Emperor (3), I think that the following question should be referred to a Full Bench:

"Is an accused person, who has been called upon to give security for good behaviour entitled to the benefit of S. 256, Criminal P. C. ?"

I may add that, as pointed out in Chintamon Singh v. Emperor (3), the object of S. 256 is to give the accused an opportunity of further cross-examination directed expressly to the case embodied in the charge, which seems to be superfluous where, as in security cases, the precise charges against him are known to him before the enquiry begins.

Anantakrishna Aiyar, J.—I agree that the question stated by my learned brother should be referred for the decision of a Full Bench.

Opinion :

Kumaraswami Sastri, J. -- The question referred to us for decision is :

"Is an accused person, who has been called upon to give security for good behaviour, entitled to the benefit of S. 256, Criminal P. C."

The sections dealing with security for good behaviour are contained in Chap. 8, Criminal P. C.

Section 110 empowers the Magistrates enumerated therein to require a person habitually addicted to the commission of offences mentioned in Cls. (a) to (c) to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond with sureties for his good behaviour for such period not exceeding three years as the Magistrate thinks fit.

Section 112 provides that, where a Magistrate deems it necessary to require any person to show cause, he shall make an order in writing setting forth the substance of the information received, the amount of the bond to be executed, the term for which it is to be in force, and the number, character and class of sureties required.

Section 113 says that if the person in respect of whom an order has been made is present in Court, it shall be read over to him or explained to him if he so desires.

Section 114 says that if the person is not present in Court, a summons should be issued calling on him to appear.

Section 115 requires the summons or warrant to be accompanied by a copy of the order made under S. 112 and to be delivered to the person.

Then comes S. 117, the section which prescribes the mode of enquiry. It says that when the person appears in Court, the Magistrate shall proceed to enquire into the truth of the information upon which action has been taken and take further evidence as may appear necessary.

Clause (2) runs as follows :

"Such inquiry shall be made, as nearly as may be practicable where the order requires security for keeping the peace, in the manner hereinafter prescribed for conducting trials and recording evidence in summons cases; and where the order requires security for good behaviour in the manner hereinafter prescribed for conducting trials and recording evidence in warrant cases, except that no charge need be framed."

The form prescribed in Sch. 5 for the summons to be issued under S. 114 runs as follows :

"Whereas it has been made to appear to me by credible information that (then the substance of the information is set out) * *

* you are hereby required to attend in person (or by a duly authorized agent) (on a date specified in the form) to show cause why you should not be required to enter into a bond, etc."

So that Chap. 8 provides for the procedure to be adopted till the enquiry opens and S. 117 says that where the order requires security for good behaviour the enquiry shall be made as nearly as practicable in the manner prescribed for conducting trials in warrant cases. Turning to the mode prescribed for the trial of warrant cases which is provided for in Chap. 21, S. 252 provides for the discharge of the accused if no case is made out by the prosecution witnesses.

Section 254 enacts that if the Magistrate is of opinion that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence, a charge should be framed.

Section 255 requires that the charge should be read and explained to the accused and that he should be asked whether he pleads guilty or has any defence to make and empowers the Magistrate to convict the accused if he pleads guilty.

Under S. 256 if the accused refuses to plead, or does not plead, or claims to be tried, then he has to state within the period mentioned in the section whether he wishes to cross-examine any, and, if so, which of the witnesses for the prosecution whose evidence has been taken. If he says he does so wish, the witnesses named by him shall be recalled, and, after cross-examination and re-examination, if any, they shall be discharged and the evidence of the remaining witnesses for the prosecution shall next be taken, and, after cross-examination and re-examination, if any, they also shall be discharged and the accused shall then be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence.

Section 257 runs as follows :

"(1) If the accused, after he has entered upon his defence, applies to the Magistrate to issue any process for compelling the attendance of any witness for the purpose of examination or cross examination, or the production of any document or other thing, the Magistrate shall issue such process unless he considers that such application should be refused on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. Such ground shall be recorded by him in writing :

Provided that, when the accused has cross-examined, or had the opportunity of cross-examining any witness after the charge is framed, the attendance of such witness shall not be compelled under this section, unless the Magistrate is satisfied that it is necessary for the purposes of justice.

(2) The Magistrate may, before summoning any witness on such application, require that his reasonable expenses incurred in attending for the purposes of the trial be deposited in Court."

Under S. 258, the Magistrate has to record the order of acquittal if he finds the accused not guilty, and if he is guilty to pass sentence according to law.

Section 259 refers to the procedure to be adopted if the complainant is absent and the case is compoundable.

Now it is obvious that under Chap. 21 the Magistrate can frame a charge at any stage of the prosecution case. He is not bound to wait until all the prosecution witnesses have been examined. The sections following S. 254 presume that a charge has been framed and are only applicable on that basis. They also refer to offence and to acquittal.

It is obvious from the provisions of Chap. 8 that no charge is framed but the procedure till we come to trial is that the Magistrate proceeds ex parte until it comes to the stage of sending notice or summons to the person against whom security is required. Then under S. 112, the Magistrate gives the substance of the information received and the particulars as to the bond, and then the trial begins.

Reading the provisions of Chaps. 8 and 21 it is clear that so far as the person required to give security is concerned, the trial really commences from the point where notice has been given to him to show cause which contains the substance of the information and which must be treated as equivalent to a charge though not the charge itself. In this view effect can be given to all the provisions and under S. 256 the cross-examination of the witnesses should take place as if witnesses examined for the prosecution are witnesses examined after a charge has been framed. S. 257 would apply where for any reason he wants to recall and cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, the Magistrate having a discretion to refuse an application if he is of opinion that the application is made for the purpose of vexation or delay.

It has been argued by Mr. Grant that all that S. 117, Cl. (2), says is that no charge need be framed and that consequently if a Magistrate chooses to frame a charge, then there will be really two charges, one contained in the notice and the other in the charge framed. I find it difficult to see how any Magistrate can, having regard to the provisions of Ch, 8, frame any charge such as is contemplated by Ss. 221 to 223 in Chap. 19. The words "no charge need be framed" really mean that the charge shall be dispensed with because in the very nature of things it is not possible to frame a charge with the particulars enjoined by Ss. 221 to 223.

It is also argued that a party cannot know exactly for what he is tried until all the witnesses have been examined and it may be necessary for him to cross-examine the witnesses and that it would be a great hardship if the opportunity given to him by S. 256 is not given. Treating it as a mere question of hardship, I think S. 257 provides for all reasonable requirements. The Magistrate is bound, if he refuses the application, to state in writing that in his opinion the application is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. Except for that reason the Magistrate is bound to issue process and there is no reason why if the right is going to be abused the Magistrate is still bound to issue summons. I agree with the observations of Shadi Lal, J., in Ahmad Bakhsh v. Emperor (4), that if there is no hardship to the other party under S. 287 it is desirable that proceedings under Chap. 21 should not be unduly delayed.

The view I take is amply supported by authority.

In Chintamon Singh v. Emperor (1) Rampini and Sharfuddin, JJ., observed :

" No doubt, under S. 117, Criminal P. C., the enquiry into bad livelihood cases should be made as nearly as may be practicable in the manner prescribed for conducting trials and recording evidence in warrant cases. But we do not think that the provisions of S. 256, Criminal P. C., indicate that the person called upon to show cause under S. 110, Criminal P.C. has a right to further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses under S. 256, Criminal P. C. inasmuch as the provisions of this section relate to cases where a formal charge as required by S. 254 has been drawn up and the accused has been called upon to meet that charge. In cases under S. 110, Criminal P. C. the order of the Magistrate under S. 112, Criminal P. C. is equivalent to a charge. The object in giving the substance of the information in an order under S. 112, Criminal P. C. is that the person called upon to show cause may clearly understand the matter that he has to meet in his defence, and a Magistrate has no power to go beyond the requirements of his order under S. 112, Criminal P. C."

In Bija v. Emperor (2), it was held that a person against whom proceedings have been taken under S. 110, Criminal P. C., has no right to further cross-examine the prosecution witness under S. 256 of the Code. Sir Shadi Lal, C. J., refers with approval to Chintamon Singh v. Emperor (1).

In Ahmad Bakhsh v. Emperor (4), Shadi Lal, J., observed :

" In security cases the order passed by the Magistrate under S. 112 is equivalent to a charge in a warrant case and the person against whom the order is made is fully aware of of what is alleged against him. The evidence is thereafter recorded in his presence and he has every reasonable opportunity of cross examining the witnesses. There is consequentiy no conceivable reason why he should be allowed the right of a second cross-examination and why he should thereby protract the proceedings unnecessarily. The reason which underlies the rule as to double cross-examination in warrant cases is entirely absent here and the principle of cessente ratione legis, cessat ipsa lex is fully applicable."

The learned Judge follows the view taken in Chintaman Singh v. Emperor (1) and dissents from the view taken in Emperor v. Lansha (5).

Mr. Grant has referred us to Venkatachinnayya v. Emperor (3). The question there for determination was whether S. 350 (1), proviso (a), Criminal P. C. which refers to change of magistracy during the pendency of a trial and the right to have a de novo trial applies to security proceedings and the Full Bench held it did. In dealing with the question, however, there are observations of Ayling and Coutts-Trotter, JJ. to the effect that the accused had a right under S. 256 to recall the prosecution witnesses. These observations are in my opinion obiter dicta as the learned Judges were not there dealing with the right now claimed.

Reference has also been made to Emperor v. Lansha (5) which is a case decided by the Chief Court of Burma and where it was held that S. 256, Criminal P. C. is applicable to proceedings under S. 110 by virtue of the provisions of S. 117, Cl. (2) of the Code. There is no reference to any authorities, and this case is dissented from in the case reported in Bija v. Emperor (2).

In Emperor v. Tirlok (6) Boys, J., after referring to the provisions of S. 117 and the provision that no charge need be framed, observed ;

" The reason for the exception is obvious. What is equivalent to a charge has already been framed in the order served upon the accused in accordance with S. 112."

The learned Judge then goes on to deal with Ss. 254 and 255 and observes that at any stage of the proceedings the Magistrate, if he is prima facie satisfied that there is a case against the accused, may interrupt proceedings for the purpose of asking the accused whether he pleads guilty or whether he has any defence to make and that if he does so and the accused wishes to defend, then the accused can recall for cross-examination witnesses examined up to that stage and if the Magistrate does not do so but waits till all the prosecution witnesses are called, the accused can, when he is asked if he wishes to defend, ask for the recall of prosecution witnesses. It seems to me that if the notice under S. 112 is equivalent to the charge aud if when that notice is read to accused he has the option of either executing the bond or denying his liability to do so, there is no necessity for the Magistrate interrupting proceedings. He cannot again issue a notice under S. 112 and there is no analogy to a Magistrate in warrant cases framing a charge when only some of the prosecution witnesses are examined and then going on with the rest of the prosecution evidence.

I prefer to follow the view taken in Chintaman Singh v. Emperor (1), Ahmad Baksh v. Emperor (4) and Bija v. Emperor (2) and would answer the reference by stating that in security proceedings where the other side wants to recall any prosecution witness he has no absolute right to do so under S. 256, Criminal P. C., but has a right under S. 257 of the Code.

In this case it appears that the Magistrate rejected that application to re-summon on the ground that S. 256 does not give the accused that right. He has not applied his mind to the question whether it is necessary in the interests of the accused that the witnesses should be re-summoned nor does he state that he considered the application was one made for the purpose of delay. Whether this would be a ground for interference is a matter entirely for the Bench to decide.

Curgenven, J.—In deciding whether the right to recall prosecution witnesses for cross-examination, given by S. 256, Criminal P. C., can be claimed under S. 117 in security proceedings, it is of assistance to consider why the right is given in the trial of a warrant case. Two answers are possible :

(1) The charge shows the accused, perhaps for the first time, precisely what he has to meet. The first cross-examination may, therefore, have been conducted in some measure under a mistaken impression.

(2) Answers elicited from later prosecution witnesses necessitate the further questioning of earlier ones.

If the right had been given on ground (2), exercise of it would not have been restricted to the stage immediately after charge, since a charge may be framed before the examination of the prosecution witnesses is completed. It would have been fixed at the close of the prosecusion evidence. The fact that the stage in the case at which the right must be exercised is the stage at which the charge is framed supports the view that charge and right are related as cause and effect, and therefore no charge no right. There is no such right in proceedings where no charge is framed, e. g., summons cases, sessions trials, civil suits.

If the right is allowed in proceedings under S. 117, it must be on a loss qualified basis than in a warrant case. We must hold that it is exerciseable in all instances after all the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined. In so holding, instead of merely applying warrant procedure "as nearly as may be practicable," we should be going beyond it and conceding a right which it does not confer. We should be creating an inflexible rule in security cases where no such inflexible rule exists in warrantcases.

I agree with my learned brother Kumaraswami Sastri, J., that the words "No charge need be framed" can only mean that no occasion can arise for framing a charge; because under S. 221 (1) every charge shall state the offence with which the accused is charged. In security proceedings the place of charge is taken by the "order in writing setting forth the substance of the information received" prescribed by S. 112. This order has to be read over to the person in respect of whom it is made, and although the Code does not provide that he should plead to it it resembles a charge in that it must contain a statement in abstract of the prosecution case.

In Venkatachinnayya v. Emperor (3), the question for decision, so far as we are now concerned, was whether in security proceedings for good behaviour the effect of sub-S. (2), S. 117, Criminal P. C., was to render applicable the provisions of Ch. 21 of the Code, dealing with warrant cases, and those of Ch. 25, in so far as they deal with the mode of taking or recording evidence in such cases, or whether the subsection attracted the provisions of all sections of the Code which are applicable to warrant cases. The Full Bench had not to decide which of the provisions of Ch. 21, should be deemed to be inapplicable, so that any observations made upon that question were clearly obiter. I do not myself think that Ayling, J., in selecting S. 256 as what seems to have been a random illustration, meant that in his view its provisions had necessarily to be enforced. All that he says is that S. 350 is as much a matter of procedure as the right to have prosecution witnesses recalled and cross-examined conferred by S. 256. Accordingly there was no ground for disputing the applicability of S. 350 merely because it occurred elsewhere in the Code. The line of reasoning is not vitiated by the circumstance that the provisions of S. 256, although a matter of procedure and therefore prima facie applicable, may, on special grounds, be found incompatible with the method of conducting a security inquiry. The observation of Coutts-Trotter, J., (as he then was), that the whole of the procedure in a warrant case must be adopted, was clearly no more than a generalisation.

I agree with the answer to the reference proposed by my learned brother.

Walsh, J.—I agree that the order calling on a person to show cause why he should not execute a bond to be of good behaviour is "equivalent to a charge" and there is ample authority for this position. It is impossible to frame a regular charge for several reasons. In the first place it is doubtful whether a person called on to show cause in such a case is an "acccused."

In Jhoja Singh v. Queen-Empress (7), it was held that he was: but in Hopcroft v. Emperor (8) more cautious language is used that "he stands in the position of an accused person" and finally in Binode Behari Nath v. Emperor (9), it was held that he was not an accused person so that Jhoja Singh v. Queen-Empress (7), must be held to have been overruled. Queen-Empress v. Mona Puna (10), does not deal with a case of security for good behaviour. No doubt Queen-Empress v. Mutasaddi Lal (11), remains and Coutts-Trotter, J., in E. Venkatachinnayya v. Emperor (3), seems to incline to the same view.

Secondly, it is doubtful if there is any "offence". In E. Venkatachinnayya v. Emperor (3), Ayling, J., remarked on p. 523 that no "offence" is involved in an enquiry under Ch. 8 of the Code and Coutts-Trotter, J., (as he then was) says:

> "If he cannot be said to be "charged" with an offence it is at least sought to be proved against him that he is a person with criminal or undesirable propensities."

I agree with my learned brothers in interpreting the words "No charge need be framed" as meaning that no occasion can arise for framing a charge. If the order under S. 112, Criminal P. C., which is equivalent to a charge is not a charge there is no stage at which or process by which it can become anything more. Neither evidence in support of it nor the Court's opinion that it is prima facie proved by the evidence tendered can enable anything else to be framed than an order under the terms of S. 112 and the Code does not contemplate two identical charges in the same case. I agree with my learned brother Curgenven, J., in his classification of the two reasons why a right to recall and cross-examine prosecution witnesses is given in a warrant case and I would say that Ss. 256 and 257 seem to me to deal respectively with those two rights. The right to cross-examine when the person first knows exactly what the charge against him is, is absolute and is dealt with under S. 256. It extends not to all the prosecution witnesses but only to those examined before the charge is framed and the Court may frame a charge at any stage. It does not mean as we should have to hold that it means if we accepted Mr. Grant's argument, a right to recall and cross-examine all the prosecution witnesses.

The right to recall and cross-examine earlier witnesses owing to what may be said by later ones is qualified and is dealt with by S. 257. As the "equivalent to a charge" is framed under Chap. 8 before any of the prosecution witnesses are examined the absolute right of recall cannot arise for the first purpose, but the qualified right for the second purpose does exist. It may be noted that Chap. 8 seems to be somewhat defective as it does not expressly provide for an examination of witnesses called for the defence and the only form of summons given in the Appendix, Sch. 5, is with regard to giving security for keeping the peace.

The balance of authority is certainly against a right of re-call and cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses under S. 256 (1). The remarks relied on in E. Venkatachinnayya v. Emperor (3) are obiter. Although the reference to us does not mention S. 257 I agree that we should answer the question in the manner proposed by my learned brothers.

Second Appeal No. 2358 of 1927, Decided on 11th April 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, Bezwada, in Appeal Suit No. 96 of 1926.

(a) Hindu Law — Reversioner — Proof of title—Onus of proving that property belongs to last male holder is on reversioner.

The onus of proving that the property claimed by the reversioners was the property of the last male holder is heavily upon the plaintiffs. There is no presumption that any property in the possession of a Hindu widow or Hindu female was the property either of her husband or of any male ancestor : 26 Cal. 871 (P. C.) and 33 *M. L. (b) Evidence—Appreciation of—Cummulative effect of relevant evidence, and not each piece of evidence, should be considered.

The proper and satisfactory way of appreciating evidence is to consider, not whether each piece of evidence proves the case by itself, but to consider the cumulative effect of all the relevant items of evidence adduced in the case: 31 All. 412 (P.C.), Foll. [P 338 C 2]

Judgment.—Defendant 2 is the appellant before me. The plaintiffs, four in number, filed the original suit for partition and delivery of four out of seven shares in the property described in the plaint schedule, which the plaintiffs allege belonged to one Chandrayya, the last male holder. Chandrayya died about 1876 leaving a widow Punnamma. Punnamma died on 24th March 1924, and the present suit for partition was filed on 2nd May 1924. Defendant 4 and defendants 1 and 2 are cousins of the plaintiffs and are according to the plaintiffs the other three sharers who are entitled to the other three shares in the property as reversioners to the estate of Chandrayya.

The main pleas of the appellant, who was defendant 2 in the lower Court, were that the properties did not belong to Chandrayya and that defendant 2 had been adopted to Chandrayya after Chandrayya's death by his widow. Both the lower Courts held against the defences set up by defendant 2, and the first contention has been reiterated before me here. Both the lower Courts held against the validity of the adoption and that question is not before me in second appeal.

The substantial ground taken in second appeal before me by the learned advocate for the appellant Mr. Lakshmanna is this. The onus of proving that the property claimed by the reversioners was the property of the last male holder is heavily upon the plaintiffs. There is no presumption that any property in the possession of a Hindu widow or Hindu female was the property of either her husband or any male ancestor. I agree that this proposition could not possibly be contested. The leading case on the subject is the decision of the Privy Council in Dewan Run Bijai Buhadur Singh v. Indarpal Singh (1), where their Lordships had to consider the case of a Hindu widow in possession of large properties. It was proved in that case that the husband was very rich. The privy Council held that the fact that the husband was rich did not in any way go to prove that the property in the possession of the widow was the property of the husband. The privy Council held that the onus of proof was on the reversioners, and he had to prove that the property claimed by him was property belonging to the estate of the last male holder as reversioner to whose estate, he claims the property. This decision was followed by a Bench of this Court, consisting of Spencer and Srinivasa Iyengar, JJ. In Vikrama Deo Garu v. Vikrama Deo Maharajulugaru (2), where their Lordships went further and observed that the presumption that a person in possession of property is the owner and absolute owner thereof applied equally to Hindu women also. It is therefore clear that the onus in the present case lies heavily on four plaintiffs who, as reversioners, claim their 4/7ths share of the suit properties. On such proof that these properties were the properties of Chandrayya, both the lower Courts found that the plaintiffs are entitled to their shares of the properties.

The learned advocate for the appellant criticized minutely the arguments and reasonings by which the lower Courts have arrived at their conclusions and he took me though the evidence of

P. W's. 1, 2 and 3, on whose evidence the lower Courts have largely relied. Left to myself, I may not be in a position to come to the conclusion of the oral evidence in this case that the properties have been proved to have belonged to Chandrayya. The evidence of P. W. 1 shows that Chandrayya died about 1876 some months after P. W. 1's father sold him the lands, and that his father told him that the properties were sold very cheap. As I understand, my function, sitting in second appeals, is not to appreciate the evidence and to come to any independent conclusion on my own account on questions of fact arising in the case. The Privy Council in Durga Chowdharani v. Jewahir Singh Chowdhri (3), held that the findings of the 1st appellate Court based on relevant evidence before it cannot be disturbed by a Court sitting in second appeal, however erroneous or unsatisfactory the findings, if examined, might be : see also Ram Ratan Sukal v. Nandu (4). I am bound by the said rulings when examining the question of the correctness of the findings of fact arrived at by the lower appellate Court in this case. When the lower Courts have believed P. W. 1 the son of the vendor to Chandrayya to the effect that P. W. 1's father sold these properties to Chandrayya, I do not think I can interfere with that finding. There are also other reasons mentioned by the District Munsif to show that the properties have been proved to belong to Chandrayya.

Two circumstances have been mentioned in the lower Courts' judgment (1) the prior suits O. S. No. 109 of 1913 and O. S. No. 165 of 1918. These were brought by the reversioner, and the Courts held that the adoption was invalid and that the suit properties belonged to the estate of Chandrayya; and (2) there is also the circumstance that soon after the alleged adoption of defendant 2 by Punnamma, she transferred the patta of these properties in the name of defendant 2, the alleged adopted son. The lower Courts argue that ordinarily a Hindu widow would not transfer her own stridhan or separate properties to the adopted son ; and taking all the circumstances of the case into consideration they drew the inference that the properties were not the stridhanam properties of Punnamma, and the fact that she transferred the patta in the name of defendant 2 was an indication that the suit properties belonged to Chandrayya, and not to herself as her stridhanam. As I said, I am not concerned here to examine the evidence in detail myself to see whether I would myself be prepared to act upon the same or not. There are items of evidence which the lower Court have believed and as pointed out by the Privy Council in Parbati v. Nannihal Singh (5) at p. 428, the proper and satisfactory way of appreciating evidence would be to consider, not whether each piece of evidence proved the case by itself, but to consider the cumulative effect of all the relevant items of evidence adduced in the case. As it seems to me that the lower Courts have considered the cumulative effect of the evidence and expressed their opinion that it has been sufficiently proved that the properties belonged to Chandrayya, I am not in position to interfer with the findings of fact in second appeal.

The last argument of the learned advocate for the appellant is that the lower Courts were wrong in having given a decree not only for the four-sevenths shares of the plaintiffs but also in having allotted the other remaining three shares to defendants 1, 2 and 4. The suit was one for partition and delivery of four out of seven shares of the estate to the four plaintiffs who with defendants 1, 2 and 4, are the reversionary heirs to the estate; the other three heirs were made defendants 1, 2 and 4. The first Court passed a decree as mentioned above. The contesting defendant 2 preferred an appeal against the said decree. But I do not find that this point was taken on appeal to the lower appellate Court. Seeing that Punnamma died only in 1924, and the rights of the three defendants entitled to the three shares are not barred by limitation, and that no objection was taken to this in the lower Courts, I think I would not be justified in disturbing this portion of the decree in second appeal. I, however, modify the decrees of the lower Courts by declaring that each of defendants 1, 2 and 4 would be entitled to one share

(out of the seven shares) in the suit properties and that the share of each would be separated and delivered to each in this suit on paying the proper court-fee payable thereon.

In the result, I find against the main contentions of the learned advocate for the appellant and dismiss the second appeal with costs.

V. Govindarajachariar—for Appellants.

Advocate General—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The Rajah of Venkatagiri instituted O. S. No. 51 of 1923, on the file of the Additional District Munsiff's Court of Ongole, to recover jodi and some other dues from the defendants who are agraharamdars of Konagarivari Palem alias Bodapalem agraharam. The main question in dispute so far as this second appeal is concerned is whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover jodi at the rate of Rs. 173 per fasli, or whether he is entitled to recover only at the rate of Rs. 17-8-0. Both the lower Courts upheld the plaintiff's claim to recover at the higher rates and the defendants have preferred this second appeal.

The facts in connexion with this matter are not in dispute. From Ex. 1, which is a copy of the Sannad granted to the predecessors-in-title of the defendants, i. e., to the original agraharamdars in 1721, it is seen that the jodi payable was Rs. 17-8-0. It has also been found by both the lower Courts that even from a period prior to 1802, the date of Ex. B, the Rajah of Venkatagiri has been collecting from the agraharamdar jodi at the rate of Rs. 173 per fasli. The question for decision, therefore, as stated by the lower appellate Court is:

"Whether having regard to the admitted fact that for over a century the defendants and the predecessors-in-title have been paying jodi at a far higher rate than that fixed under the Sannad Ex. 1, they are not barred from questioning the Raja's right to collect jodi at the rate of Rs. 173 as stipulated in Ex. B of 1802"

The lower appellate Court, after referring to the decision of Privy Council reported in Secy. of State v. Rajah of Venkatagiri (1) remarked that the settlement of the Venkatagiri zamindari did not come within the purview of Madras Regn. 25 of 1802 and held that from the long and uniform course of payment of jodi at rate of Rs. 173 per fasli for more than 100 years it was entitled to presume that there was a valid agreement between the parties to pay at the rate, and that it was prepared to presume a lawful origin for such practice and was prepared also to presume that the agreement was supported by consideration.

Before me the learned advocate for the appellants (defendants), while admitting that it was open to Courts to presume a lawful origin in support of existing practice (if there be no legal impediment for such presumption) contends that in the present case the jodi fixed at the time of the grant of the agraharam in 1721 being known to be five pagodas (Rs. 17-8-0.)—see Ex. 1, — notwithstanding the subsequent payment for a long period of a higher rate the rule of presumption referred to by the lower Courts, could not be applied to the present case. It is only, he argued, when nothing else was proved, that the presumption of a legal origin could be made and because in this case the original amount of jodi fixed in 1721 is known, the rule of presumption referred to has no application in the present case. I am unable to accept this argument. It is a question of fact in each case depending upon presumed contract whether the Court responsible for recording finding of fact would in the circumstances find a legal origin or not in support in such a case. If there be other circumstances such Court is bound to have regard to the other circumstances also. Here both the lower Courts have paid due regard to the circumstance that under Ex. 1 of 1721, the amount of jodi payable is only Rs. 17-8-0; they have also had due regard to the circumstance that for over a century the agraharamdars have been paying the Rajah jodi at the rate of Rs. 173 a year. With these items of evidence before them, they were bound to come to a conclusion as to the proper amounts of jodi payable by the agraharamdars at present. The have come to the conclusion that the proper amount payable is Rs. 173 a year, and that a legal origin should be attributed to the practice which has been prevailing for over a century and, and they have presumed the existence of an agreement between the parties after 1721 and also presumed that the said agreement was supported by consideration and was valid and binding on the parties. I think it was quite open to them to come to such a finding and that sitting in second appeal it is not open to me to say that the finding is vitiated in law.

The lower appellate Court relied on the decision of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court reported in Peria Karuppa Mukkandan v. Raja Rajeshwara Sethupathi (2). The learned Judges who took part in that case were not all agreed in their opinions Sir John Wallis, C. J., observed at p. 486 as follows:

"The question . . . is, whether the Court can infer consideration for a contract to pay rent at an enhanced rate solely 'from a long continued course of payment of the enhanced rate.' My answer is that it may if that is the sole fact it has to go upon, but that, in dealing with with the question of presuming the agreement and the consideration therefor that together make up a contract, the Court should not be governed by that fact alone but should come to a conclusion on all the circumstances of the case."

Coutts Trotter, J., (as he then was) at p. 490 observed as follows:

"A Court with nothing before it but the fact of a long continued payment by a tenant would be amply justified in presuming a legal origin for that payment. But the word "enhanced" clearly carries an implication of a further fact viz., that the tenant had previously paid a lower rent than that sought to be enforced. . . . For a Court to infer consideration from a long continued course of payment is a totally different thing when that is the sole fact before it, and when it is complicated by other considerations as in this case. In the latter event it comes in effect to a balancing of probabilities; and no Court should, in my opinion, presume consideration passing from the landlord, unless it thinks it inherently probable that consideration could and did exist in fact. . . . . The Court . . . should obviously pay the greatest attention to the fact of the long continued payments of the enhanced rents by the tenants: it is no light matter to overset a state of things which has existed without question for a long period of time."

And finally

"if the continued payment of rent were the sole fact before the Court it would be entitled to presume consideration from it: but that if, as in the present case, there are other facts before the Court, it must refuse to treat the payment as raising a presumption, and, while giving it such weight as it thinks fit, perhaps a determining weight, treat it merely as a portion of the evidence in the case, subject to be weighed against and perhaps overtopped by the evidence on the other side."

Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in the same case says at p. 496.

"The question referred to the Full Bench is whether the Court can infer consideration solely from a long continued course of payment of enhanced rent in cases where it is sought to base liability to pay enhanced rent on an alleged contract to pay it. . . . . I am of opinion that it is open to the Court from a long and a uniform course of payment to presume that there was an agreement to pay which had a lawful origin and was supported by consideration where it is satisfied that it would be unreasonable from lapse of time or other circumstances to call upon the landlord to give direct evidence as to the terms and circumstances that gave rise to the payment and when circumstances exist which would render the drawing of the presumption reasonable in law and probable in fact. If all that appears is a long course of payment, I do not see why the presumption should not be drawn."

His Lordship referred to the principle that:

"a legal origin should be presumed where there is a long continued assertion of a right to it if such a legal origin were possible and that in such cases Courts will presume that those acts were done and those circumstances existed which were necessary to the creation of a valid title."

At p. 498 his Lordship refers to

"the ordinary presumption which might well be raised that a person and his predecessor-in-title would not have paid for a series of years, more than what was payable, voluntary rily and without any legal or binding obligation to do so."

It was, however, contended by the learned advocate for the appellant that the above principle should not be applied when we have in this case the fact that jodi payable in 1721 was only five pagodas, and he referred me to the judgment of Ayling and Seshagiri Ayyar, JJ. in the Full Bench case already referred to us supporting his contention. On behalf of the respondent it was, however, argued that certain passages at p. 489 of the report suggest that Ayling, J's. observations where limited to the circumstances that existed in that case, and that in any event the opinion of the majority of the learned Judges in the Full Bench case was in support of the view taken by the lower appellate Court in this case.

After having read the opinion delivered by the learned Judges in the Full Bench case Peria Karuppa Mukkandan v. Raja Rajeshwara Sethupathi (2), I think that the opinion of the majority of the Judges is in favour of the view contended for by the respondent in this case.

It is a well established principle of law that Courts would presume a legal origin where there has been a long continued enjoyment of a claim, if the claim could have had a legal commencement. It would be otiose to set forth at length authorities in support of the above principle.

The principle on which Courts have acted in such cases is this. Where there has been long continued possession in assertion of a right, the right, should be presumed to have had a legal origin, if such a legal origin was possible and this presumption applies even if the alleged right in its inception rests on a foundation invalid in point of law, and the Court will presume the performance, of all acts and the existence of all circumstances necessary to create a subsequent valid title, unless the subsequent enjoyment is shown to be more consistent with the illegal origin than with the legal origin. In Phillips v. Halliday (3) Lord Herschell observed as follows:

"Why should the house or the Court refuse to presume, or abstain from presuming a legal title to this alleged right, which they would otherwise have presumed, because in its inception it may be shewn to have rested upon a foundation which would not support it? Why does not the doctrine which I have referred to, the maxim which has been so often acted upon, apply just as well as to the acts necessary to confirm a title originally invalid as to the acts necessary to create a valid title in the first instance? It seems to me that the argument of the learned counsel for the appellants must go this length, that for however many centuries it may be proved that an alleged right has been asserted and enjoyed, if it can be shewn in its inception to have rested upon a foundation invalid in point of law, then, although the title might have been perfectly, well validated by some act which you would otherwise have presumed, you are never justified in presuming that act to have been done. My Lords, I am perfectly unable to see upon what basis such a principle can rest. It seems to me that the very reason which has been held not only to justify, but almost to compel, the Court to make presumptions of this description, applies just as much in the latter, case as in the former."

The appellants' learned advocate, however, relied on the opinion of Ayling, J., and Seshagiri Ayyar, J. in the Full Bench case in Peria Karuppa Mukkandan v. Raja Rajeswara Sethupathi (2) and he also referred me to the decision of the house of Lords in Gann v. Free Fishers of Whitstable (4). Gann's case (4) was referred to by the Full Bench and I am of opinion that the opinion of the majority of the Full Bench is that the Court can presume a contract to pay the higher rate and a legal origin and consideration therefor from long continued payment of higher rate; and in this case both the lower Courts have considered the circumstance that in 1721 the jodi payable was only Rs, 17-8-0, and that for more than 100 years prior to the suit the agraharamdars have been paying jodi at Rs. 173 a year; they have in the circumstances come to the finding that the proper amount of jodi payable at present is Rs. 173 a year. I am of opinion that it was open to them to come to that conclusion and there is no legal impediment shown to me in the way of their finding accordingly.

In an unreported case (S. A. Nos. 443 to 446 of 1920). the High Court had to decide whether what was called "ashtamsam" deduction i. e., deduction of 1/8th from the proper rent, was claimable by the ryots. The landlord had appealed to the High Court complaining against such deduction in the patta. The District Court of Chingleput while allowing the "ashtamsam" deduction, did not allow in favour of the landlord what was called "nadikarasu." The High Court (Ayling and Krishnan, JJ.), observed as follows in their judgment:

"The "Ashtamsam" deduction and the charges under the head of "nadirkarasu" are all unexplained; but all have been given effect to for 50 years without question. We think all should be treated on the same footing."

The High Court allowed "ashtamsam" deduction in favour of the ryots, but allowed "nadikarasu" in favour of the landlord. No doubt the judgment is very short and the question is not discussed in the judgment. But the decision of the High Court was in 1921, about two years after the decision of the Full Bench in Peria Karuppa Mukkandan v. Raja Rajeswara Sethupathi (2).

I think the lower Courts were entitled to come to the conclusion that jodi at present payable is at the rate of Rs. 173 a year. I, therefore, dismiss the sec nd appeal with costs.

T. L. Venkatarama Iyer — for Appellant.

T. R. Ramachandra Iyer, R. Jayaram Iyer and T. S. Swaminathan — for Respondents.

Venkatasubba Rao, J. — The first point taken by Mr. Venkatarama Aiyar is that under S. 43, it is the debtor alone that can apply for extension. But as has been pointed out in Jetaji Peraji Firm v. T. Krishnayya (1), S. 43 is controlled by S. 27 :

"It is equally clear that the Court has the power to extend the period and it may be so done, not merely at the instance of the debtor but on the application of anybody interested. The section merely requires that sufficient cause shall be shown, but it does not say that the debtor alone may apply for extension or shall show sufficient cause."

In this case, it was a creditor that applied for enlargement of time and the Official Receiver agreed to an order being made. This objection is therefore overruled.

The second point raised by Mr. Venkatarama Aiyar is that his client, the alienee, was not given notice of the application. We may point out that it is desirable that in such cases notice should go to the alienee. In this particular case, however, the appellant has not been able to show that any prejudice has resulted and we are therefore unable to set aside the order of the District Judge.

The appellant complains that the delay in the disposal of the proceeding to annul the alienation causes him great hardship. We direct the lower Court to expedite its hearing. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Revn. Petns. Nos. 363 and 1130 of 1928, Decided on 5th March 1929, from orders of Sub-Judge, Salem, D/- 29th February 1928, in I. A. Nos. 26 and 27 of 1928.

Civil P. C., O. 41, R. 27—Additional evidence can be admitted only if there is substantial ground and in interest of justice—Such application should not be heard unless appeal is heard or evidence is considered.

The appellate Court is empowered on the application of party, for any substantial cause, ro permit additional evidence to be taken under O. 41, R. 27 (1) (b). But this power should be used sparingly and on grounds which can be called "substantial." Ordinarily it would not be desirable to hear an application for further evidence under this provision until the appellate Court has heard the appeal or considered the evidence already on record with a view to see whether substantial grounds exist in the interest of justice to allow some lacuna to be filled up or some matter to be cleared up: A. I. R. 1923 P. C. 128, Ref. [P 343 C 2]

A. Srirangachariar—for Petitioner.

W. Kothandaramayya —for Respondents.

Judgment.—The learned Subordinate Judge on an application by respondents 1 and 2 (appellants in his Court) made an order on 29th February 1928, allowing further evidence to be taken on their behalf, i. e., to re-call P. W. 3 in order to get his accounts produced and to examine three new witnesses who had not been examined at all at the trial. Immediately after this order the petitioner (respondent 1 in the lower Court) by his lawyer asked that if additional evidence was to be allowed to respondents 1 and 2, he also might be allowed to adduce further evidence to rebut that evidence. This also the learned Judge allowed by another order but without asking the petitioner or knowing from him what evidence he proposed to tender.

These petitions are directed against the first of the two above orders on which the second also depends. It is now settled that the appellate Court is empowered on the application of a party for any substantial cause to permit additional evidence to be taken under O. 41, R. 27 (1) (b), Civil P. C.: see Indrajit Pratap Bahadur Sahi v. Amar Singh (1). Though the power is there, it should be used sparingly and on grounds which can be called "substantial." Ordinarily it would not be desirable to hear an application for further evidence under this provision until the appellate Court had heard the appeal or considered the evidence already on record with a view to see whether substantial grounds exist in the interests of justice to allow some lacuna to be filled up or some matter to be cleared up. If such safe-guards were not adopted every appellant would press the appellate Court to allow him to cure the effects of his own laches by plea of hardship and there would be no inducement for parties to exercise diligence in producing all available evidence at the trial.

The allowance of fresh oral evidence unless under the most exceptional circumstances should thus be discouraged. In my opinion the learned Subordinate Judge was guilty of material irregularity in not applying any of the required safeguards at all before allowing further evidence. His order shows that the appellant had not asked for the production of P. W. 3's accounts in the last summons to that witness nor had he even cited two out of the three new witnesses. The appeals had not been heard. The learned Judge was not in a position to say in what way the evidence was intended to fill up any gap; nor does it show that there was any guarantee that the witnesses were of such status that their evidence could be safely relied upon to be true. The result of his orders taken together was that for no apparent reason except that the appellant urged that he had been negligent in the Court below, he was allowed to re-open the whole case and when he got such an advantage the respondent got a like advantage without the appellate Court even knowing what was the evidence to be tendered. The orders of the Subordinate Judge must be and are set aside. Nothing in this order should be deemed to affect the power of the Subordinate Judge if at a later stage after hearing the appeal, he thinks it necessary in the ends of justice and for substantial grounds to act under O. 41, R. 27 (1) (b).

The petitioner will have his costs in C. R. P. No. 363 of 1928 from respondent. 2.

(a) Hindu Law—Widow— Representation of estate—Widow represents not only in dispute between her husband's estate and another estate, but also when there are rival claimants to his estate.

A widow may represent the reversioners in a litigation and the decree obtained against her may bind the reversioners not only in cases where she was suing or defending on behalf of her husband's estate, the dispute being between that estate and another estate, but also where there are rival claimants to her husband's estate: 11 Cal. 186 (P.C.); 10 Cal. 985 (P.C.) and 14 *C. (b) Decree—Execution of — Suit by illegitimate son against widow of zamindar—Decree for half share in separate estate of zamindar and in outstandings due to zamindar — Decree-holder trying to proceed against the other half share of zamindar for outstandings — Decree-holder held entitled to proceed against property of zamindar and half share of zamindar.

A zamindar died leaving a widow, a daughter, daughter's son, an undivided coparcener, a concubine and an illegitimate son by her. The widow entered into possession of zamindari. The coparcener brought a suit to recover the zamindari but under a compromise decree the widow was allowed to enjoy the estate during her lifetime. In 1902 the illegitimate son filed a suit against the widow wherein the Court decreed that he was entitled to half a share in the separate estate and partition of the same, and also awarded half the amount of the outstandings due to zamindar. During the pendency of appeal the widow died and the daughter's son was brought on record as the legal representative. In execution proceedings the illegitimate son claimed, as part of separate estate, property consisting of jewels belonging personally to zamindar and to proceed against the other half for the outstandings.

Held: that the final decree of the High Court certainly gave to the illegitimate son a half share of such jewels as formed the separate property of the zamindar.

Held also: that as the decree-holder sought to execute his decree against items of jewels which the widow never asserted to be hers as streedhanam but which he claimed to be hers, there was certainly some burden of proof on the decree-holder but at the same time the reversioner also should show that they formed part of the zamindar's estate.

Held further: that the decree-holder was entitled to proceed in execution of his decree against all the items found to belong to zamindar and only a half share in the items belonging to zamindar as separate property but not against the other half which belonged to the reversioner. Ramesam, J. — These appeals are against orders in execution. To understand the contentions raised in these appeals, it will be convenient to set forth the history of the prior litigation.

The zamindar of Bodinaickanur died in 1888 leaving a widow, a daughter and daughter's son (the zamindar of Septur) and undivided coparcener, a concubine and an illegitimate son by her. The widow at once entered into possession of the zamindari. In 1889 the undivided coparcener brought a suit to recover the zamindari. The widow resisted the claim on the basis of a will left by the zamindar. That suit was compromised in May 1890. Under the compromise the right of the plaintiff therein to succeed to the zamindari was recognized but as a price for the compromise the widow was allowed to enjoy the zamindari for the rest of her lifetime. In 1902 the illegitimate son filed a suit to recover the zamindari alleging that his mother was a married wife of the late zamindar and puting forward an alternative claim even on the basis of his being illegitimate. He also alleged that the will put forward by the widow was a forgery. In that suit, O. S. 31 of 1902, the widow (defendant 1), the daughter (defendant 2) and the daughter's son (defendant 3) were all made parties. Defendant 1 pleaded that the plaintiff therein was not entitled to inherit in preference to the other heirs of the zamindar. She also pleaded that the will she put forward was genuine. In para. 15 of the written statement, she referred to the earlier suit by the undivided coparcener and said :

"The said O. S. No. 16 of 1889 terminated in a compromise by which the said Kandasami Naick withdrew his claim and transferred all his rights in the said properties in favour of this defendant during her lifetime; a decree was passed accordingly."

Thus, she pleaded all possible titles for the purpose of resisting the plaintiff. The suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge of Madura. There was an appeal to the High Court. In that appeal a distinction was made for the first time between the zamindari proper and the separate estates acquired by the zamindar out of the income of the zamindari. After calling for a finding, the High Court, while confirming the dismissal of the suit in so far as the zamindari was concerned, held that the plaintiff was entitled to a half share in the separate estate as the illegitimate son of a Sudra and gave a decree for partition of the separate estate. Against this decree defendant 1 appealed to the Privy Council. During the pendency of the appeal defendant 1 died and defendant 3 who was then a minor represented by the Court of Wards brought himself as the legal representative. The Privy Council affirmed the decree of the High Court : see Kamulammal v. Visvanathaswami Naicker (1). The plaintiff is seeking execution of that decree for partition. One of the items of the separate estate is the outstandings due to the zamindar amounting to Rs. 57,000 odd. Defendant 1 denied that she ever collected the outstandings. The High Court found on evidence that she did collect and the decree given included a half of the amount claimed, Rs. 27,000 and odd. Another item claimed as part of the separate estate consisted of jewels belonging personally to the zamindar. But these were not described separately from the rest of the jewels in the possession of the zamindar, at the time of his death, all the jewels being described in one schedule, namely, Sch. C along with other moveables. But the final decree certainly gives to the plaintiff, half share of such jewels as formed the separate property of the zamindar. Immediately on the Rani's death a box of jewels was taken possession of by the Collector of Madura and continued to be in his custody. The present execution petition was filed in August 1921, for recovery of the value of half the outstandings with interest and the decree-holder sought to attach the jewels left by the late zamindarni. On 10th March 1924, a letter was sent to the Collector of Madura purporting to be a prohibitory order in pursuance of the order of attachment. It runs thus :

"The plaintiff having applied under O. 21, R. 52, Civil P. C., for an attachment of property now in your hands the under-mentioned jewels of the late zamindarni, Kamalu Ammal of Bodinaikanoor, I request that you will hold the said property subject to the further order of this Court etc."

Description of jewels :

"The jewels of gold, silver, etc., belonging to Kamalu Ammal, late zamindarni of Bodinaikanoor."

It is seen from the above prohibitory order that only the jewels belonging to the zamindarni were sought to be attached. It does not purport to claim that all the jewels in the box, possession of which was taken by the Collector are jewels belonging to the zamindarni, though perhaps the Collector regarded it as such. He made reference to the Court in which he mentioned that part of the jewels were claimed by the zamindar of Saptur as his own as he happened to reside with the zamindarni at the time of her death. The Court replied that only the jewels belonging to the zamindarni were the subject of attachment. This reply did not improve matters. The notice was also issued to the zamindar of Saptur. When the batta amin went to his palace it was said he was absent at Madura and the notice was affixed to the outer door. Whether this affixture was justified or not, there is no doubt that it came to the notice of the zamindar afterwards though we are not told exactly when, and the zamin-dar did not then object to the order of attachment by the Court. The plaintiff subsequently attempted to bring the properties to sale. The present petition is filed by the zamindar of Saptur objecting to the sale of the properties on the ground that the jewels attached did not belong to the zamindarni but formed part of the separate property of the zamindar. Incidentally in this petition he also said he was not served properly with notice of the attachment and that the attachment of the property was irregular and not valid. As the Subordinate Judge remarked that he is not entitled to raise the latter point in this petition he filed another petition to raise that question. This was on 18th December 1924. In this petition he conceded that the jewels in the custody of the Collector comprised three separate classes (1) the jewels belonging to the zemindarni, (2) the jewels belonging to separate estate of the late zemindar, (3) other jewels not falling under the above two descriptions but consisting of the regalia of the zamindari and other items. The petitioner concedes that the decree of the High Court and the Privy Council awards to the plaintiff half of the second category, that he is entitled to execute his decree against the first category but not against the defendant's half share in the second category. The undivided coparcener who was defendant 6 in the suit objected in respect of the third category but there is an order against him and he never appealed. Anyhow defendant 3 the zamindar of Saptur, has no interest in that item. The Subordinate Judge disallowed the objections of defendant 3 and dismissed both the petitions. The present appeals are against these orders. C. M. A. No. 63 being against the order on the petition objecting to the validity of the attachment and C. M. A. No. 64 being against the order on the petition claiming that portion of the jewels are not the assets of the zamindarni. The appellant of course concedes that the plaintiff's decree can be executed against the stridhanam jewels of the zamindarni but his contention is that all the jewels in the box are not such stridhanam jewels and the matter must be enquired into.

Mr. Sitaram Rao who appeared for the respondent contended that even assuming that part of the jewels form separate estate of the zamindar, they are liable to be proceeded against in execution as in collecting the outstandings she represented the line of heirs including herself, the daughter and daughter's son of the last zamindar in so far as the separate estate was concerned. He contends that she was sued as a widow, that she defended as widow, that the decree against her was given as a widow represented the inheritance of the zamindar and, therefore, defendant 3's reversionary interest is also liable to be proceeded in execution of the decree as it was for the benefit of all the line of heirs that she defended the suit. He relies on Jugal Kishore v. Jotendra Mohun Tagore (2), Partabnarain Singh v. Trilokinath Singh (3), Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh (4) and Lalji Sahai Singh v. Karki Jha (5). The decisions in Partabnarain Singh v. Trilokinath Singh (3) and Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh (4), show that a widow may represent the reversioners in a litigation and the decree obtained against her may bind the reversioners not only in cases where she was suing or defending on behalf of her husband's estate the dispute being between that estate and another estate, but also where there are rival claimants to her husband's estate. In Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh (4) the rival claimant was an adopted son. In the case before us the rival claimant is an illegitimate son. In such cases, a decree for mesne profits or for costs may be executed against other widow's estate not the subject of the litigation in the hands of her reversioners after her death on the ground that her litigation was for the benefit of the whole of the estate she inherited from the husband and passed on to the reversioners. On this principle Mr. Sitaram Rao contends that the decree against the zamindarni of Bodinaikanoor for half the outstanding and half the jewels may be executed against the other half of the separate estate for which he did not obtain a decree and which has now descended to defendant 3 after the zamindarni's death because it is said, she was defending the suit for the benefit of all the heirs who were entitled to the separate estate of the last zamindar. In resisting the illegitimate son's claim she was working not only for the benefit of herself but for that of her daughter and daughter's son. But in the present case what is sought to be executed is the decree for half of the outstandings. So far as the jewels are concerned there is no difficulty? whatever jewels in the box are found to be separate jewels, it is conceded that the plaintiff is entitled to his half and it is even said that defendant is willing to pay down their price and retain the jewels of the separate estate himself. But the question is whether the decree for outstandings can be executed against the other half shares of such jewels. This depends on not in what capacity the decree of the High Court and the Privy Council was given against defendant 1 but in what capacity she collected the outstanding. There is no doubt that the decree was given against her as widow, but it is not equally clear in what capacity she claimed and collected the outstandings from the debtors of the zamindar. As early as 1889 she put forward a will of the zamindar. That will make no distinction between zamindari or the separate estate of the zamindar. What estate she claimed under the will as legatee we do not know, whether she claimed a widow's estate or a mere life-estate or an absolute estate. We are informed that this question is the subject of another litigation. The oral evidence relating to the collection of the debts is that of plaintiff's witness 48 in which he gives general evidence that the debts were collected by defendant 1 within two or three years after the zamindar's death. In respect of one debt it was said to be in the year 1890 and in respect of others not even this information was given. It is impossible to say when exactly the debts were collected. It may be on that evidence they were collected in 1890 or 1891. If the collection was after the compromise with defendant 6 in May 1890, she was doing so under the right which was vested in her being transferred to her from defendant 6 by reason of the compromise. That razinamah is Ex. 38 and is printed at p. 231 of the Privy Council book. Under para. 6 it is stated;

> "all other Pannai etc., lands, and buildings and moveables which belonged or were in the enjoyment of the deceased Kumaraja Pandiya Avergal and are situate either in the said zamindari or in other places shall be held and enjoyed by defendant 1, her heirs, with all rights and privileges and with the power of alienation by way of gift, mortgage, sale, etc., free from any subsequent claim by the plaintiff and his heirs."

The word 'moveables' includes the outstandings due to the zamindar. If she made the collection of the outstandings after this compromise under the rights given to her under this para. 6, it may be said that without our expressing any final opinion she was collecting them as absolutely entitled to them and not in the claims of a widow's estate and, therefore, as representing her daughter and daughter's son. There is no further material than what is already mentioned to show in what capacity she acted. Unless the facts are very clear we cannot apply the principle established by the decisions cited by Mr. Sitarama Rao to the facts of this particular case. We, therefore, come to the conclusion that the decree of the plaintiff for outstandings cannot be executed against the half share of the jewels forming the separate estate which have now descended to defendant 3. He can execute the decree against all other jewels.

This conclusion makes it necessary that an enquiry should be held as to what jewels in the box belong to the separate estate and what jewels fall into other categories. It cannot be said that zamindar of Saptur is estopped from raising the question now. He did not object to the attachment because the attachment sought was only of the jewels belonging to the zamindarni. Not objecting to a prohibitory order of that kind cannot be held to amount to an implied admission that all the jewels in the box belong to the zamindarni nor to an implied decision by the Court to that effect. What the Collector thought has no bearing on the matter. He was then discriminating between Bodinaickanoor and Saptur. We, therefore, think that an enquiry is necessary. In C. M. A. No. 64 we call upon the Subordinate Judge to take such evidence as is offered by both sides on the nature of the jewels and submit a finding to this Court within two months after the re-opening of the High Court that is 18th September. In C. M. A. No. 63 the only point raised is that the attachment is invalid. The appellant has nothing to do with the irregularity of the attachment. He did not care to object to it, as the attachment was only of the jewels of the zamindarni. He cannot now attack the validity of the attachment. C. M. A. No. 63 is therefore dismissed with costs.

After receiving findings from the Subordinate Judge of Dindigal, the following judgment was delivered].

Ramesam, J. — The Subordidate Judge has now returned a finding that item 7 only belonged to the estate of the zamindar, and that the other items in dispute (besides those conceded in the Court below) belong to the zamindarni. The appelants have have filed objections to the finding.

It has been contended before us that the burden of proof was wrongly thrown on the appellant by the Subordinate Judge. On the other hand, the learned advocate for the respondent contends that, as the appellant is a reversioner claiming properties as belonging to the last male owner, it is for him to show that they form part of the estate of the last male owner. So far as the latter contention is concerned, I may observe that we are not here dealing with a case of a reversioner claiming against alienees from a widow or a daughter. But in the case before us, the respondent as a drecee-holder against the widow seeks to execute his decree against items she never asserted to be hers but which he claims to be hers. Therefore, there is certainly some burden of proof on the execution creditor but at the same time, the reversioner also should show that they from part of the zamindar's estate. The truth is we have got here a case of two rival claimants to property in the hands of a stake-holder and there is a equal burden upon both. We must decide the case with reference to other consideration.

Now, as regards items 6, 19 to 22 and 86, the appellant was not even able to assert that they belonged to the zamindar's separate estate nor did connect them with any of the items in the C schedule.

With reference to items 27 to 30 the respondent's witness does not know whether they belong to the zamindarni or not. On the other hand, the appellant's witness stated that they belonged to the zamindar. Though these items were not mentioned in the C schedule, we must hold that they are not part of the stridhanam of the zamindarni and are liable to be proceeded against in execution by the respondent.

As to the items discussed in para. 7 of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, we must agree with his conclusion on the ground that they are not mentioned in C schedule.

Item 18 is a jewel set with rubies and item 16 is a jewel set with diamonds and rubies. Now item 136 of the C schedule was a packet of loose rubies and the High Court found that it belonged to the main estate and not to Kamalu Ammal. Even if it is admitted that she was in the habit of purchasing precious stones, one must presume that the old rubies were used for a new jewel, unless the contrary is shown. On this matter, the burden is on the respondent who wants to proceed against the jewels of the zamindarni to displace the possibility of her having used the old rubies. We, therefore, find that item 18 and the rubies in item 16 belonged to the zamindar's estate.

As to item 62, the appellant's witness states that they are made out of the diamonds taken from items 71 and 72 of C schedule. Item 71 consisted of two big and four small diamond buttons. Item 72 was a watch set with diamonds, pearls and rubies with a chain set with diamonds. The respondent's witness states that a watch chain was given as a persent by Kamalu Ammal to her son-in-law at the time of his marriage. His evidence was believed by the Subordinate Judge but, even, accepting his evidence, the diamond buttons and the diamonds in watch might have been used for making the jewel, Item 62. We, therefore, allow this item also in favour of the appellant.

The appellant does not press his objections relating to items 1, 3 and 78 and the finding of the Subordinate Judge is accepted with regard to them.

As regards items 34 and 35, the appellant's evidence is that they were made partly out of the rubies in item 131 of the C schedule and the rubies of another addigai. But the value of item 131 of the C schedule was only Rs. 200. We allow, therefore, items 34 and 35 in favour of the appellant only to the extent of the rubies worth Rs. 200.

The appellant's case is that items 43, 45 and 46 were made from the pearls in items 40, 42, 124 and 135 in C schedule. Of this, Nos. 40 and 42 were held by the High Court to belong to the zamindarni and the others to the estate. Now, the respondent has not pressed his claim to proceed against items 43 and 45 in the Court below. We must, therefore, take that item 46 was made from the pearls in items 40 and 42 and therefore, the finding of the lower Court as regards items 46 is confirmed.

As regards item 64, we agree with the Subordinate Judge.

As regards the diamonds in Item 16, the appellant's witness connects them with items 71 and 72 of the C schedule. The remarks made above with regard to item 62 apply to this item also. We, therefore, find this item in favour of the appellant.

The result is that in addition to item 7 found by the Subordinate Judge to belong to the zamindar and items 11, 33, 43, 45, 90, 109, 119 and 122 conceded by the respondent in the lower Court, we now find items 16, 18, 27 to 30, 62 and Rs. 200 worth of rubies in Nos. 34 and 35 in favour of the appellant. The respondent will be entitled to proceed in execution of his decree against all the items found to belong to the zamindar and only a half share in the above items but not against the other half, which belongs to the appellant. Each party will bear his own costs throughout.

Odgers, J.—I agree and have nothing to add.

Judgment.—I think Art. 29, Lim. Act is not applicable. The deed of hypothecation does not give the appellant any right to be in possession of the cattle attached. The seizure cannot be said to be wrongful as all that the appellant is entitled to is to have the sale subject to his hypothecation. Niadar Singh v. Ganga Dai (1), is in point. As pointed out there can only be a wrongful seizure when the property was in the possession of the person. It may be that constructive possession will do. But when there is no right to possession there can be no wrongful seizure. Damaraju Narasimha Row v. Gangaram (2), was a case of possession. I set aside the decree of the District Judge and remand the appeal for disposal on the merits. Costs will abide and follow the result. Court-fees will be refunded.

Second Appeal No. 202 of 1926, Decided on 30th October 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, Masulipatam, in Appeal Suit No. 20 of 1925.

(a) Madras Hereditary Village Officers Act (1895), S. 23, Proviso—Second appeal lies only on dismissal order of District Collector.

The object of the proviso clearly is that it is only against orders of dismissal that the Board will entartain a second appeal, that is, there must be an order of dismissal by the District Collector. Where, therefore, there is no such order passed by the District Collector no second appeal lies to the Board. [P 350 C 2]

(b) Madras Heriditary Village Officers Act (1895), S. 23—Mention of appellate

Judgment.—The original suit out of which this second appeal arose was a suit against the Secretary of State to declare that an order of the Board of Revenue dated 8th July 1922 is invalid and for consequential relief. The original Court decreed for the plaintiff, the appellate Court reversed that decree and the plaintiff appeals.

The plaintiff was a karnam of the ryotwari village of Voonagatla. On 4th October 1921 the Revenue Divisional Officer, Ellore, dismissed him. He appealed to the District Collector who modified the order into one of suspension for one year. He preferred a second appeal to the Board of Revenue, the result of which was that the Board on 8th July 1922 restored the order of the Revenue Divisional Officer dismissing him. The plaintiff maintains that that order is ultra vires, and invalid. The above proceedings were taken under Act 3 of 1895. The original dismissal was under S. 7 and the appeals were under S. 23.

It is quite clear, I think, that no second appeal lay in this case. The only case in which a second appeal lies to the Board of Revenue in a matter of dismissal of a village officer is given in the proviso to S. 23 (1), and that is a case where there has been a dismissal under S. 7. That that dismissal must be by the order directly appealed against is clear. It cannot be reasonably contended that a second appeal lies to the Board in all cases where the original order by the Revenue Divisional Officer was a dismissal. The result of such a contention would be that, in cases where the Revenue Divisional Officer has dismissed and the District Collector has modified the dismissal into a fine, a second appeal would lie to the Board, but where the Revenue Divisional Officer suspends and the District Collector confirms, no appeal would lie to the Board. The object of the proviso clearly is that it is only against orders of dismissal that the Board will entertain a second appeal, that is, there must be an order of dismissal by the District Collector. There was in the present case no such order and, therefore, no second appeal lay to the Board. This is in fact the view of the Board itself in the Board's resolutions exhibited as Exs. D and E, and I may note that this position was accepted by the Government Pleader in the lower appellate Court. Therefore, the Board had no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal. The proper order would have been to have dismissed the appeal summarily.

The learned Government Pleader, however, contends that the order was passed in the exercise of powers of revision possessed by the Board. He claims that the Board could have acted and, therefore, must be presumed to have acted either in the exercise of revisional powers under S. 23, or in the exercise of inherent executive powers outside the scope of Act 3 of 1895. As to the powers of revision under S. 23 the statute itself does not confer on the Board any power of revision. But it is argued that as the Board is constituted the superior appellate authority it follows that it has a general power of revision. Reliance is placed on a sentence quoted from the ruling in In re, Chinnayya Gounder (1) which states the well known proposition that appellate jurisdiction includes the power to interfere in revision. But in order that that proposition may apply a revisional power must have been conferred by the statute on the tribunal. If revisional power has been conferred, then it is exercisable over all tribunals against whose orders an appeal is provided. I am not referred to any authority which lays down that, where a statute confers a right of appeal and is silent about a right of revision, it has conferred a right of revision apparently unlimited in extent and absolute in authority, so that, for, example, as in this case the mere conferment of a right of appeal on the Board ipso facto confers on it a right to enhance the sentence of a lower tribunal without notice to the party, affected. Such a contention is tant-amount to saying that, where a statute provides a right of appeal and also provides a power of revision, the latter provision is not an enabling provision but it is restricting provision limiting the unlimited powers of revision otherwise possessed by the tribunal. It would mean, for example, that, if the Criminal Procedure Code had not defined the right of the High Court to interfere in revision the High Court would nevertheless have power to reverse an acquittal without notice to the party concerned and without there being any appeal presented against the acquittal. I am clear that this contention is unsound and that the mere mention of appellate powers in a statute which is silent as regards revisional powers does not carry with it any revisional powers. Reference may be made to the Full Bench case in Khoji Shivji v. Hasham Guntam (2) where it was held that, where an order in council provides for appellate powers and is silent about revisional powers, no revisional powers are conferred, and to Salig Ram v. Ramji Lal (3), where it was held that, if the revisional power has to be derived from statute, it must have been conferred directly by the statute. I am not, therefore, prepared to accept this argument; so that, if the Board had any power of revision in the present case, that power will have to be derived outside Act 3 of 1895. It remains to consider whether there is any such power.

For this position the learned Government Pleader has called in aid the general history of the powers of the Board of Revenue. An early regulation now partly in force, Regn. 1 of 1803, is relied upon. It is argued that Ss. 5 and 33 give the general power claimed. The lower appellate Court bases its decision upon S. 5, but of these two sections S. 33 is the one which deals with punishment, and it enacts that the Board shall punish neglect at their discretion, according to the powers vested in them for that purpose. So that regulation takes us no further. We have to see what powers are vested in the Board. That appears from later regulations, first of all Regn. 2 of 1806, S. 7 (3), applying eo nomine to karnams, laying down that the Board of Revenue has power to dismiss them.

Then by Ss.7 and 8, Regn.6 of1831 the power over karnams in ryatwari tracts hitherto exercised by the Board of Revenue was transferred to Collectors, subject to the approval of the Board. S. 7 (3), Regn. 2 of 1806 was repealed by Act 2 of 1869. I do not appreciate the learned Government Pleader's suggestion that this section was repealed merely because it was at that time too well known to require retention on the statute book. Such an argument might be put forward in the case of any repealed Act and has no substance. Obviously the Act which repeals another and the Act repealed cannot both be in force at the same time. Clearly the authority which had power to legislate on the punishment of karnans had the same power to delegate its powers of punishing karnams and intended by the repealing Act 2 of 1869 that the power exercised under Regn. 2 of 1806 should be delegated no longer to the Board but to the Collector. So that between 1806 and the present Act 3 of 1895 the authority to whom was delegated the power to punish karnams was set out in Reg. 6 of 1831. That itself was definitely repealed by Act 3 of 1895, whereby the legislating authority in whom, ultimately, this power vested, laid down definitely which officer or officers were to exercise the power of dismissing karnams and the manner in which that power could be exercised. In all this history I see no room for the contention that the Board of Revenue possesses some powers outside this legislation. It has all along derived what power it possessed from legislating authority, and not being itself the sovereign. Such a theory really implies that although the statute says by S. 23 that a dismissal of an appeal to the District Collector in a case where the order on appeal is not one of dismissal shall be final, yet that order is not final because the Board possesses undefined and unrestricted inherent powers to interfere with it. It may be noted that the Board of Revenue in its order in the present case did not purport to act under any such inherent powers, but purported to be disposing of an appeal presented under S. 23, Act 3 of 1895. I am not therefore prepared to support the learned Government Pleader in his argument that the Board has an inherent power outside the Acts and Regulations to interfere with and enhance the order of suspension passed by the District Collector.

The only other point to consider is contention of the Government Pleader that the suit is not maintainable because it does not fall within S. 42, Specific Relief Act. Both the lower Courts have agreed in holding that the suit is maintainable. It is clear of course, that the plaintiff's suit must in the nature of the case be purely a declaratory one. He is not challenging the authority of the Collector's order of suspension and therefore he could not sue for reinstatement or for the emoluments of the office. The cause of action is the passing of the order of the Board of Revenue without jurisdiction. It must be conceded that the plaintiff is not suing as a person entitled to any legal character or to any right as to any property; so that if S. 42 is exhaustive of declaratory suits the suit will not lie. The ruling of the Privy Council in Robert Fisher v. Secretary of State (4), at p. 282 is authority for the proposition that the section is not exhaustive. That was a case similar to the present in which it was sought to set aside an order of Government on the ground that it was ultra vires. That ruling has been frequently relied upon in this Court : see Ramachandra Rao v. Secretary of State (5), Veeramachaneni Ramaswamy v. S. Pitchayya (6), Ramakrishna Pattar v. Narayana Pattar (7), Narasimhacharlu v. Pitchayya (8) and Lakshminarasimha v. Ramalinga Pillai (9) The High Court of Calcutta has taken an opposite view in Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (10), though the decision of the case did not rest upon that ground. The learned Government Pleader relies upon a later Privy Council case in Sheoparsan Singh v. Ramnandan Prasad Narayan Singh (11). That, however, has been interpreted by a Bench of this Court in Surayya v. Subbamma (12), to be a decision on a finding of fact that the plaintiff had not the legal character of a reversioner, and therefore that the suit specifically brought under S. 42 was not maintainable under that section. It cannot be held that this Court has yet adopted the view that S. 42 is exhaustive or that the Privy Council case in Sheoparsan Singh v. Ramnandan Prasad (11) has overruled the Privy Council case in Robert Fisher v. Secretary of State (4), and, sitting here as a single Judge, I consider I am bound to follow the interpretation of Sheoparsan Singh v. Ramnandan (11), given in Surayya v. Subbamma (12) and the Privy Council ruling in Robert Fisher v. Secretary of State (4). I am not therefore prepared to hold that the lower Courts erred in law in holding that the suit was maintainable. I must therefore allow the appeal and restore the decision of the District Munsif with costs against Government here and in the lower appellate Court. The memorandum of cross-objections by Government as regards costs in the lower appellate Court is dismissed with costs. Three months time for payment of costs.

Second Appeal No. 1884 of 1926, Decided on 9th October 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, Chittoor, in Appeal Suit No. 48 of 1925.

Limitation Act, Art. 181—Redemption suit—Application for final decree within three years from decree in second appeal from preliminary decree held to be within time—Civil P. C., O. 34, R. 8.

A mortgagor applied for a final decree in a redemption suit. The preliminary decree was obtained on 29th June 1918 ; the application for final decree was made on 22nd October 1923. The preliminary decree, however, was taken up in first and second appeals which were respectively disposed of on 29th November 1919 and 8th February 1922. The judgment of the second appeal after notice to respondent was "no question of law. The second appeal is dismissed with costs."

Held : that the decision of the High Court was a decision after hearing the merits of the case, and its decree, therefore, superseded the decree of the lower appellate Court ; and that the application for final decree was within time being within three years of the High Court's decree under Art. 181 : 18 Mad. 214 ; 22 Mad. 293 ; *A. C. V. Harihara Aiyar—for Appellants.

S. A. Seshadri—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The point for decision in his appeal is one of limitation. The plaintiff applied for a final decree in a redemption suit. The preliminary decree was obtained on 29th June 1918, the application for final decree was made on 22nd October 1923, more than three years after the preliminary decree. The preliminary decree, however, was taken upon first appeal and second appeal. The first appeal was disposed of on 29th November 1919 and the second appeal on 8th February 1922. The application is therefore beyond three years of the first appeal decree and within three years of the second appeal decree. The original Court has held that it was in time, the lower appellate Court that it was not and the plaintiff appeals.

The article applicable is Art. 181 and the terminus a quo is the date when the right to apply accrued. The plaintiff's contention is that the preliminary decree now is the High Court's decree in second appeal and that his right to apply accrued only on the date of that. The respondent contends that as the High Court decree merely dismissed the second appeal the right to apply accrued on the date of the first appeal decree. All that we know about the High Court proceedings is its judgment which runs, "No question of law. The second appeal is dismissed with costs." The fact that it was dismissed with costs indicates that the second appeal was admitted and notice given to the other side, and that the other side appeared and was ready to argue the case if called upon.

It is contended by the respondent that, if the High Court had gone into the merits of the appeal and dismissed it, the right to apply would accrue only on the date of the High Court decree. But it is contended that the High Court could not have gone into the merits because it merely says "no question of law," and that as it has held that there was no question of law it held in effect that the second appeal was not competent, since a second appeal can only be maintained on a question of law. But the fact that the appeal was admitted as an arguable appeal indicates to my mind that it was entertained as competent. The competency of an appeal does not depend on the final decision in the appeal. If the High Court does not dismiss it in limine but thinks there is an arguable question of law, then the appeal is competent, and it is because it is competent that notice is given to the other side and the appeal posted for hearing both sides. The decision of the High Court was therefore a decision after hearing the merits of the case discussed on both sides, and its decree therefore superseded the decree of the lower appellate Court.

The same result is arrived at from another point of view. It may be that, when an appeal is summarily dismissed as time barred or because of default of appearance or want of prosecution or some similar reason, the proper order is one of dismissal pure and simple, and that such an order or decree, whichever it be, would not supersede the decree of the lower appellate Court. This is a question the answer to which either way will raise difficulties which I need not consider here ; for I am clear that, when notice has been given and the appeal argued, the decree of dismissal, even if the word "dismissed" is used, is really a decree of confirmations if, indeed, considering that cost is awarded in addition to the lower appellate Court's decree, one may not even say it is a decree of modification. The rules applicable are Rr. 30 to 32, O. 41, and the proper decree in such a case is one confirming, varying or reversing the decree appealed from; and in such a case there is and must be a new decree containing the costs ordered by the High Court. The old decree has been confirmed and superadded to or modified ; it does not really matter by which term we describe it. The High Court decree does supercede the decree appealed from and becomes final preliminary decree, if such a phrase be permitted.

The general principle laid down by the Privy Council in Javad Hussain v. Gendan Singh (1) and Fitzholmes v. Bank of Upper India (2) is not altered because the High Court has only limited powers in hearing a second appeal. The principle applies to an appeal which has been heard in the sonse of having been admitted and the other side given notice to appear and argue. That principle has been affirmed in this Court from the Full Bench case in in Pichu Vayyanagar v. Seshayyangar (3) onwards. see : Munuswami Naidu v. Munuswami Reddi (4) and Venkatayya v. Satharaju (5) see : also Kailash Chandra Bose v. Giriji Sundari Debi (6). The respondent relied on the Privy Council case in Juscurn Baid v. Pirthichandlal Choudhury (7) but there the question was not whether the appeal decree has superseded the original decree but when was a particular sale reversed, as has been explained by this Court in 44 Mad. 714 (5). A similar case is relied on in Hari Mohan v. Parameshwar Shah, A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 646 (S. B.) where again the question was not one of limitation, but when a particular right to restitution accrued. I am not shown any authority which lays down that, when the High Court has admitted and heard an appeal argued, its decree, even though it be a decree of dismissal, does not supersede the decree appealed from. I hold that the District Munsiff's order is right. I allow this appeal and reverse the Subordinate Judge's decree with costs here and in the lower appellate Court.

Original Side Appeal No. 118 of 1928, Decided on 24th October 1929, from judgment of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., D/- 28th August 1928, in Appln. No. 589 of 1928.

 Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, S. 11 (b) — Debtor living in Nellore District — House in original civil jurisdiction occupied by his mother and sister — Contribution by debtor of money for rent to sister — House in original civil jurisdiction is not "dwelling of debtor" within S. 11 (b).

The debtor was an engine driver in the employement of the M. S. M Ry. Co. and for the four years immediately preceding the presentation of his insolvency petition he had been engaged in the work of engine driver in Nellore District, where he ordinarily resided during that period. The debtor had a house within the ordinary original civil jurisdiction. But it appeared from evidence that this house was the dwelling house of his mother, his sisters and their children, whom he contributed money for the rent with the object of helping them.

Held : that his providing money to enable his mother and sisters to live in this house could not make it his establishment or his dwelling house and, therefore, the house could not be regarded as the debtor's dwelling house within the meaning of S. 11 (b) : In re, Hexquard, (1890) 24 *Q. L. S. Veeraraghava Iyer and V. Varadaraja Mudaliar—for Appellant.

T. V. Srinivasan and Official Assignee of Madras—for Respondents.

Cornish, J. — This appeal raised a question of the High Court's jurisdiction in insolvency. The debtor, V. Browne was adjudicated insolvent upon his own petition by this Court on 25th July 1928. In his petition he described himself as residing at No. 10, Old Jail Road, Royapuram, Madras. The appel-dant, who is the principal creditor of the debtor, as soon as he heard of the adjudication moved the Court to annul it, his allegation being that the High Court had no jurisdiction to adjudicate the debtor an insolvent. The question depends upon S. 11 (b), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act which requires as a condition to the exercise of the High Court's jurisdiction that the debtor, within a year before the date of the presentation of the insolvency petition, has ordinarily resided or had a dwelling house within the limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court.

The debtor is an engine driver in the employment of the M. S. M. Ry. Co. and for the four years immediately preceding the presentation of his insolvency petition he has been engaged in the work of engine driver at Donakonda, Nellore District. It is clear from his evidence that Donakonda is the place where he has ordinarily resided with his wife during that period. Kumaraswami Sastri, J., has accordingly held that the debtor has not ordinarily resided within the limits of the High Court's jurisdiction as required by S. 11 (b) of the Act. But the learned Judge was of opinion that the debtor had a dwelling house, namely the house at No. 10, Old Jail Road, within the jurisdiction and that the Court had consequently power to adjudicate him an insolvent. With all respect we are unable to agree with this view. It has been held that a portion of a house may be the dwelling house of the person who has the exclusive occupation of that portion, and that it is not essential that a person having a dwelling house should have dwelt in it for any particular period; In re, Hexquard (1). In that case Lord Esher referring to S. 6, Bankruptcy Act 1883, which corresponds to S. 11 (b), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, said:

"It is quite clear that the time during which the debtor has 'ordinarily resided' or has 'had a dwelling house' need not be the whole year before the presentation of the petition; it is to be "within a year" before the presentation of the petition. If within the year the debtor has had a dwelling house in England, no time is limited during which he must have dwelt in it, If he is not a mere passing or casual visitor he has got such a hold on this country as to make him liable to the English Bankruptcy Law."

But in the case before us the debtor is not the lessee or the tenant of the house in Old Jail Road or of any portion of it. It appears from his evidence that this house is the dwelling house of his mother, his sisters and their children. He paid the rent, but not directly to the landlord, and it does not appear that he had undertaken any liability to the landlord for the rent. He sent it to his sister, and there can be no doubt that he contributed the money for the rent with the object of helping his mother and sisters.On his own evidence it appears that he did not get any receipts for the rent and that all he was concerned in getting were the money order receipts for the money sent by him to his sister. It is true that in a sense he was, as he states in his evidence, maintaining an establishment in Madras but we fail to see how his providing money to enable his mother and sisters to live in this house can make it his establishment or his dwelling house, and it makes no difference that, on the infrequent occasions (only twice in 1927) when the debtor came to Madras from Donakonda to visit his mother and sisters, he stayed in the house. On the facts of this case we do not think that the house can be regarded as the debtor's dwelling house. The order of adjudication was, therefore, without jurisdiction, and must be set aside. The appeal is allowed with costs Pleader's fee Rs. 75.

Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 78, Proviso—Creditor seeking to execute decree obtained after adjudication—Official Receiver joined as party to suit— Debt is proved and Proviso to S. 78 does not apply.

Where a decree that the creditor seeks to execute is obtained subsequent to the insolvent's adjudication and it is obtained not only against the insolvent but also against the Official Receiver who was impleaded as a party, although the Act provides a formal mode of proving a debt which has not been adopted by the creditor, yet the debt is proved and the proviso to S. 78 does not apply. [P 356 C 2]

C. S. Venkatachariar—for Appellant.

K. Venguswami Iyer —for Respondents.

Judgment.—The question raised by the appeal relates to the construction of the proviso to S. 78, Provl. Ins. Act, (Act 5 of 1920). That section enacts that where an order of adjudication has been annulled, in computing limitation in respect of an execution application, the period from the date of the order of adjudication to the date of the order of annulment, shall be excluded. This rule is subject to the proviso that it does not apply to a debt provable but not proved.

The decree that the respondent seeks to execute was obtained subsequent to the appellant's adjudication. It was obtained not only against the appellant, but also against the Official Receiver, who was impleaded as a party. It is the latter that under the rules has to admit or reject proof of debts. In this case, he was himself added as a defendant and the decree was passed in his presence. Although the Act provides a formal mode of proving a debt, which has not been here adopted, we are prepared to hold, having regard to the facts adverted to, that the debt has been proved and that the proviso in question does not apply. We do not in this case wish to lay down any general rule as regards the meaning of the word 'proved' occurring in the other sections of the Act. The appeal fails and is dismissed, but we make no order as to costs, as the respondent has taken the point now raised for the first time in appeal.

Where there has been an appeal from a preliminary mortgage decree, the period of three years within which, under Art. 181, an application for a final decree must be made runs from the date of the decree of the appellate Court and not from the expiry of the time for payment fixed by the preliminary decree. [P 360 C 2]
(Case law discussed.)

K. P. Ramakrishna Iyer—for Appellant.

A. Raghunatha Rao —.for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff's application for the passing of a final decree for the sale of the hypotheca in pursuance of the preliminary decree passed in his favour on 1st February 1918 fixing the time for payment as 1st August 1918. though allowed by the District Munsif, was disallowed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Tanjore on the ground that the petition was barred by limitation under Art. 181, Limitation Act. The plaintiff has preferred this second appeal.

Original Suit No. 47 of 1917 was a suit instituted by the plaintiff to recover money due on two hypothecation bonds, dated 30th November 1898, and 7th November 1914, respectively, the first bond comprising plaint items 1 to 3, while the second comprised plaint items 4 and 5. The mortgagor was defendant 1 and his son defendant 2 and defendant 3 claimed title, as auction purchaser, to items 4 and 5, while defendant 4 was a private alienee of items 1 to 3. The preliminary decree passed by the First Court is dated 1st February 1918, and the time fixed for payment was 1st August 1918. An appeal preferred by defendant 3 making defendant 4 also as a party respondent along with the plaintiff and defendants 1 and 2 was allowed in his favour on 14th February 1919, and the interest of defendant 3, if any, in items 4 and 5 was declared not liable for the mortgage amount. The second appeal preferred by the plaintiff was dismissed on 31st March 1921 ; the plaintiff's present petition for the passing of a final decree was filed on 25th March 1924, i. e., within three years from the date of the High Court's decree, but beyond 3 years after the preliminary decree passed by the first Court on 1st February 1918, and also beyond 3 years from the date fixed for payment (1st August 1918). In these circumstances the legal representative of defendant 4 raised objection to the passing of a final decree on the ground that the application was barred by limitation.

The first Court overruled the contention and held that the period of limitation for the petition for passing the final decree was to be calculated from the date of the High Court's decree 31st March 1921. The District Munsif accordingly passed a final decree for the sale of the hypotheca. Defendant 4's legal representative preferred an appeal and the lower appellate Court held that the starting point of limitation was not the date of the High Court's decree, but the date fixed for payment in the preliminary decree passed by the District Munsif. Ths learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the decree must in effect be treated as a compound decree,' one passed in respect of the mortgage Ex. A for the amount due thereon, and the other in respect of mortgage Ex. B for the amount due thereon, the amounts due under each mortgage being separately decreed and the properties covered by mortgage being separate. He held that the appeal and the second appeal relating to mortgage under Ex. B only could not affect the starting point of limitation in respect of the portion of the decree regarding the mortgage under Ex. A, though written in one paper he held that the decrees were really two, and that the plaintiff ought to have applied for the passing of the final decree in respect of the properties covered by Ex. A within 3 years from the date fixed for payment (1st August 1918), and not having done so the plaintiff's right was barred. He relied on the decision reported in Christiana Benslawn v. Banarashi Proshad (1), and observed that the decree in the present case was a ' compound decree ', being an incorporation of two decrees, and as the appeal preferred by defendant 3 did not imperil the decree passed on the 1st mortgage Ex. A the period of limitation for the present application started from the date fixed in the praliminary decree.

It is therefore material to set out the terms of the preliminary decree passed on 1st February 1918, by the District Munsif, and the decree passed by the appellate Court on defendant 3's appeal 125 of 1918 dated 14th February 1919 ; hereunder are set out the above two decrees.

Extract from the Munsif's decree :

" It is hereby declared that the amount due to the plaintiff on account of principal, interest and costs calculated up to the 1st day of August 1918, is Rs. 418-4-3, and that the principal sum of Rs. 227-0-0 (Rs. 82 principal for the first bond Ex. A and Rs. 145 principal for the second bond, Ex. B) shall carry interest at the rate of six per cent per annum until realization, and it is decreed as follows :

" That if the defendants pay into Court the amount so declared due on or before the said 1st day of August 1918, the plaintiff shall deliver up to the defendants or to such person as they appoint all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property and shall if so required transfer the property to the defendants free from the mortgages from all incumbrances created by the plaintiff or any person claiming under him. That if such payment is not made on or before the said 1st August 1918, the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof shall be sold subject to the following directions, namely, that plaint items 1 to 3 shall alone be sold for the recovery of the amount due under Ex. A with subsequent interest and proportionate costs calculated up to 1st August 1923 viz., Rs. 148-2-10 and plaint items 4 and 5 alone shall be sold for the recovery of the amount due under Ex. B with subsequent interest and proportionate costs calculated up to 1st August 1918 viz., Rs. 270-1-5 and that the proceeds of the sale after defraying thereout the expenses of the sale be paid into Court and applied in payment of what is declared due to the plaintiff as aforesaid together with subsequent interest and subsequent costs and that the balance, if any, be paid to the defendants, personal remedy against defendant 1 and the family properties of defendants 1 and 2 is not barred."

Extract from the appellate Court decree :

"This Court doth, allowing the appeal and in modification of the decree of the lower Court order and decree that the interest of defendant 3 (appellant) if any, in items 4 and 5 of the plaint mentioned properties (described hereunder) be and hereby is not liable for the amount due to the plaintiff (respondent 1) under his second hypothecation bond.

This Court doth further order and decree that the plaintiff (respondent 1) do pay to the appellant (defendant 3) Rs 6-0-0 for his costs in the lower Court and Rs. 42-0-0 for his costs in this appeal."

The article applicable to an application for the passing of a final decree is Art. 181, Lim. Act ; the period is three years, and time begins to run "when the right to apply accrues." It has now been held by all the High Courts in India and also by the Privy Council, that when there is an appeal from a preliminary decree, time will run for an application for a final decree only from the date of the decree of the final Court of appeal preferred against the preliminary decree. See the decisions of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case reported in Gajadhar Singh v. Kishan Jiwan Lal (2), also Nizam Uddin Shah v. Bohra Bhim Sen (3), Venkayya v. Sathiraju (4), Subbarayulu Naidu v. Sundararaja Nayudu (5), Mahabir Prasad v. Kanhaiyalal (6), Uma Charan v. Nibaran Chandra (7), Jowad Hussain v. Gendan Singh (8) and Fitzholmes v. Bank of Upper India (9). This position is clear and finally settled. But it is argued that the above cases were not cases where what has been called in in these proceedings a "compound decree" had been passed, which, it is argued should be taken to be two separate decrees, and it is urged that in such cases the circumstances that an appeal was preferred against one of the "compound decrees" should not be taken to extend the period of limitation applicable to an application for passing a final decree. The reply urged to this argument was that similar questions have been considered by Courts in connexion with the applicability of Art. 182, Lim. Act, and that in such cases Courts have held that in cases where a decree gave different reliefs against different defendants, and appeals were preferred only in respect of a portion of the decree against some defendant or relating to some reliefs only, that the period of limitation for executing any portion of the decree would begin to run only from the date of the final decree passed on appeal. The decision of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in the case reported in Kristnamachariar v. Mangammal (10), was relied on. Reliance was also placed on the decision of Sir John Willis, C. J. and Oldfield, J., in the case reported in Venkayya v. Sathiraju (4). The decision in Venkayya v. Sathiraju (4) was under Art. 181, Lim. Act, and the learned Judges held that :

"an application for a final decree is governed by Art. 181 of the Act and the starting point in cases where there has been an appeal from the preliminary decree is the date of the appellate decree whether the latter confirmed or varied the preliminary decree."

Their Lordships observed :

"It would be strange if a different rule were applicable under Art. 181 as regards applications for a decree absolute where the preliminary decree is under appeal, an application so much resembling an application for execution that, under the repealed chapter of the Transfer of Property Act, it was held by this Court to be one."

The learned advocate for the respondent relied on the decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case reported in Christiana Benshaw v. Benarashi Proshad Chowdhury (1). The learned Judge Coxe, J., observed :

"it seems to me that the present case shows the wisdom of adhering to the view taken in Har Proshad Roy v. Enayat Hossain (11), that in dealing with the question of limitation in these cases we should see whether the original decree was really one decree or an incorporation of several decrees. and whether the appeal against it imperilled the whole decree or not. Evidently the words "where there has been an appeal" in Art, 182, Cl. 2, Lim. Act, mean, "where there has been an appeal against the decree or order for the execution of which an application is made."

With reference to this, the first observation I have to make is that the learned Judges there were considering a case under Art. 182, Lim. Act, and were of the opinion that unless the decree of the appellate Court imperilled also the portion of the decree not appealed against, limitation for execution of the unappealed portion will begin te run from the date of the original decree, and not from the date of the final appellate decree. This view is against the decision of the Full Bench of this High Court in the case reported in Krishnamachariar v. Mangammal (10). In fact a similar view expounded in Muthu v. Chellappa (12), was overruled by the Full Bench in the case reported in Krishnamachariar v. Mangammal (10). In the Judgment of Benson, J., it is observed :

"There is no indication is that Art. (179), Old Lim. Act corresponding to 182 of the present Act that the legislature intended the Courts to consider how far each part of an original decree was "imperilled" by an appeal and to vary the period of limitation accordingly."

Both the learned Chief Justice and Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., were also of opinion that there was no basis for "the theory of imperilment." Therefore the decision in Christiana Benshaw v. Benarshi Proshad (1). based under Art. 182, Lim. Act could not be treated as law in this Presidency. Further, the law as contained in the above passage in Christiana Benshaw v. Benarshi Prosad (1), has been expressly dissented from in Calcutta in the recent case reported in Abdul Alim v. Abdul Hafiz (13). In Abdul Alim v. Abdul Hafiz (13), the learned Judges decided that upon the true construction of the terms of Art. 182 (2), Lim. Act, the limitation runs from the date of the final decree of the appellate Court where there has been an appeal, irrespective of the question whether the appeal relates to the whole decree or not and they expressly dissented from the view taken in Christiana Benshaw v. Benarshi Prosad (1). I may also mention that in Ari Chettiar v. Theerthamalai Chetty (14). Sadasiva Iyer and Morce, JJ. observed with reference to Christina Benshaw v. Benarashi Proshad (1). that :

"it would not be supposed that we agree with that decision."

Again, "there could be only one final decree in a suit"—(sic) per Bashyam Ayyanger, J. in the case reported in Kristnamachariar v. Mangammal (10), at p. 96. This was the view of the Privy Council also as is seen from the case reported in Jowad Hussain v. Gendan Singh (8), at p. 28 (of 6 Pat.) their Lordships quoted the following sentence from the Judgment of Banerjee, J., in the case reported in Gajadhar Singh v. Kishan Jiwan Lal (2) :

"it seems to me that this rule contemplates the passing of only one final decree in a suit for sale upon a mortgage."

Again, the definition of the word "decree" in S. 2, Civil P. C. has to be kept in view. Under the Civil Procedure Code certain causes of action could be combined in one suit. When that is done the suit should be taken to propely comprise all the reliefs claimed therein. The Court may in proper cases direct that several causes of action may be tried in separate suits and may confine the plaint to one cause of action if it thought that the circumstances of the case required the same. But when the Court proceeded to overrule the plea of the defendants about misjoinder of causes of action, as it did in the present case, the circumstances that the causes of action were different loses its importance. One often finds a single mortgage comprising various items of properties in which various defendants are interested. The Court has got discretion to allow particular items to be sold in a particular order ; it may also declare what portion of the amount decreed should be realised from what particular items ; in the same way, in an ordinary suit to recover money against different defendants, the Court may exonerate some defendants, limit the liability of some other defendants to a portion of the amount decreed, or define and limit the liability of each defendant to particular portions of the amounts decreed. In such cases the theory of "compound decree" would surely be inapplicable. The principle of the Full Bench decision in the case reported in Kristnamachariar v. Mangammal (10), and the construction placed on Art. 182 (old Art. 179), Lim. Act by the Full Bench of Madras in the above case, and by the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case reported in Gopal Chunder Manna v. Gosain Das Kalay (15), are also against the view contended for by the respondents. In fact the decision in Dewan Abdul Alim v. Abdul Hakam (13), related to a case where the plaintiffs sued to recover properties described In Schs. 1, 2, and 3 and 4 of the plaint. He got a decree only in respect of properties in Sch. 4. His appeal to the High Court and to the Privy Council claiming the other schedule properties failed ; more than 3 years after the date of the 1st Court's decree but within 3 years of the decree of the final appellate Court, the plaintiff-decree-holder-applied for execution of the decree with reference to the properties in Sch. 4, decreed to him by the 1st Court and against which there were no appeals or questions thereafter. The Calcutta High Court held that the plaintiff's application was not barred by limitation. The principle of the decision of the Madras High Court in the case reported in Krishnamachariar v. Mangammal (10), and Subramanya Chettiar v. Alagappa Chettiar (16), is also the same. This principle has been accepted as sound by the Privy Council also.

Article 179 of the old Lim. Act was split into the the present Arts. 181 and 182 of the present Act. See the observations in Venkayya v. Sathiraju (4), at p. 716 (of 44 Mad.) and Somar Singh v. Mt. Premdei (17), (at p. 336 of 3 Pat.). The principles regarding the starting point of limitation in Art. 182 and in Art. 181 are generally the same. The decision under Art. 182 clearly support the contention of the appellant. The Privy Council has decided that the starting point of limitation for an application for a final decree—(order absolute under the T. P. Act) is from the date of the final decree. Passing of two final decrees in same suit is not contemplated by Civil Procedure Code. Though all periods of limitation are more or less arbitrary, it is of the highest importance that they should be laid down with clearness and certainty, and subtle distinctions not warranted by the language of the legislature should not be introduced by the Courts, as observed by Benson, J., at p. 94 of the Full Bench decision in Krishnamachariar v. Managammal (10). See also the observation of the learned Chief Justice at p. 92 to the effect that the rule of law laid down by the Full Bench :

"though not altogether scientific is simple, certain and intelligible."

The definition of the word "decree" in the Civil Procedure Code favours the appellant's contention, that as against defendants 1 and 2, the decree now in question is a single decree, though with reference to properties, the liability of particular items have been defined.

I am therefore uuable to follow the reasoning of the learned Subordinate Judge, either that the decree in question is "a compound decree", or that there should be "several decrees absolute in this case", or that the starting point of limitation for an application for a decree absolute is different with reference to different portions of the reliefs decreed in this case.

The rulings of the Privy Council in the cases reported in Jowad Hussain v. Gendan Singh (8) and Fitzholmes v. Bank of Upper India (9), are specific, namely :

"where there has been an appeal from a preliminary mortgage decree the period of three years within which, under the Lim. Act, Art. 181, an application for a final decree must be made runs from the date of the decree of the appellate Court and not from the expiry of the time for payment fixed by the preliminary decree."

In the present case, such an application has been made within three years from the date of the decree of the appellate Court and is therefore in time. I therefore reverse the decree of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the 1st Court with costs here and in the lower appellate Court.

Nathumuni Mudali and others—Plaintiffs and Defendants—Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 467 of 1928, Decided on 18th September 1929, from decree of Dist. Judge, North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 151 of 1926.

(a) Contract Act, Ss. 23 and 239—Partnership is prima facie legal unless involving something illegal, which illegality must be sufficiently proved by party alleging it.

A partnership is prima facie legal, unless it is proved that the object of the same was illegal or that the object of the partnership necessarily involved something illegal or contrary to public policy, and so while it is the duty of the Court not to render its aid to the enforcement of transactions which are illegal, it is at the same time incumbent that the illegality should be sufficiently proved and the facts constituting illegality were established. [P 363 C 1]

(b) Madras Abkari Act (1 of 1886), S. 56—Partnership formed prior to taking license to trade in toddy—No evidence that business was not begun before taking license—Partnership does not involve transfer and held not illegal.

N, M, and another entered into partnership by each contributing an equal share of money. The business was started, the license being taken in the name of M. There was no evidence to show that at the time the partnership was formed, M had not begun the trade in toddy and had no stock which he made the joint property of all the three.

Held: that the partnership did not involve a transfer and was not prima facie illegal under the Abkari Act: A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 772 and 35 Mad. 582, Ref. [P 363 C 2]

(c) Practice — Appeal — Evidence — Trial protracted and many opportunities offered to party to produce evidence—If party fails to produce, evidence cannot be admitted in second appeal.

Where in a protracted proceeding in lower Courts a party is offered plenty of opportunity to prove his case by adducing evidence, and the party does not produce the evidence then available, it is not permissible to that party to have the same evidence admitted in second appeal. [P 362 C 2]

A. Viswanatha Iyer and A. Ramaswami Iyer—for Appellant.

A. C. Sampath Iyengar and T. R. Srinivasan—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff instituted on 14th February 1921 a suit for taking of partnership accounts between him and defendants 1 and 2 and for the recovery of the amount to be found due to him on the taking of the accounts.

he only defence was that the partnership ended in a loss and that there was nothing due to the appellants. A decree for Rs. 570 was passed in favour of the plaintiff on 9th April 1923 by the District Munsiff. The present defendant 1 preferred an appeal. On 19th February 1925, the learned Subordinate Judge reversed that decree and remanded the suit to the District Munsiff for a fresh trial, on the ground that the trial by the District Munsiff was irregular as no preliminary decree seemed to have been passed as should have been done in the case of partnership suits. While remanding the suit the learned Subordinate Judge suggested that the Court of first instance might at the re-trial consider a new ground pressed before the lower appellate Court by the defendant, viz., that the partnership was illegal. At the re-trial, defendant 1 put in an additional written statement on 31st July 1925 that the partnership in question was illegal, and opposed to public policy. The plaintiff then applied to have his plaint amended by alleging that he would be entitled to a decree for the money advanced by him in case the Court should hold that the partnership was illegal as was contended by the defendant. That amendment was allowed by the District Munsiff by his order dated 8th October 1925. Defendant 1 filed a further additional written statement on 20th October 1925 to the amended plaint. On 21st December 1925 the then District Munsiff, while finding all the issues raised in the case in favour of the plaintiff, dismissed the plaintiff's suit. His finding on issue 5 was that the contract of partnership was illegal and opposed to public policy. On plaintiff's appeal the learned District Judge on 6th December 1927 reversed the decision of the District Munsiff and passed a preliminary decree in favour of the plaintiff for the taking of accounts in the light of the findings of the District Munsiff on the other issues which were not disputed before the District Judge. Defendant 1 has accordingly preferred the present S. A. No. 467 of 1928 against the decision of the District Judge.

The main contention urged by the learned advocate for the appellant is that the agreement of partnership is illegal and that the suit was rightly dismissed by the District Munsiff. Defendant 1 held a license to sell toddy in a shop. According to him, he took the plaintiff as a partner in respect of the toddy business and that such agreement of partnership is prohibited by the Madras Abkari Act (1 of 1886). The license under which defendant 1 had the privilege of selling toddy has not been produced by defendant 1. The defendant's case was that the license was taken away by the plaintiff. This is what the learned District Judge said on this point.

"On one simple point I think the contention of defendant 1 must fail. He has not produced the license under which he had the privilege of selling the toddy. His explanation is the easily made one that the license has been taken away by the plaintiff. Even if he had not the original license, he could quite easily have got a copy of it from the Collector or have produced at any rate a copy of the license which was in force in 1918-1919, the year of the partnership. At the re-trial all that defendant 1 produced was a license of the year 1921-1922. The learned District Munsiff refused to receive it. That license was taken back from the lower Court by the vakil for defendant 1, and in the course of the argument before me no form of license was produced, the defendant relying on the notification in the Fort St. George Gazette of the conditions of sale of Abkari privileges for the year 1918-1919. After the argument had concluded, I waited . . . . . The vakil for defendant then produced a license granted to a third party. But it was granted for 1919-1920, and not 1918-1919. I do not think that I should presume, in favour of a man who is making a case of the kind made by defendant 1, that the license for 1918-1919 was in identically the same terms as the license for the year 1919-1920. . . It must be taken then that there is no proof of the terms of the license which defendant 1 held."

After referring to certain decisions, the learned District Judge observed as follows:

"Following these decisions, I hold that, since the license relating to the year 1918-1919 of the partnership has not been produced, there are no grounds for saying that the contract of partnership was illegal."

After discussing the terms of the partnership between the parties and after observing that there was no deed of partnership to evidence the agreement of partnership, the lower appellate Court in para. 5 of its judgment observed as follows:

"It seems to me that there are no sufficient grounds for holding that the agreement between defendant 1 and the other two (plaintiff and defendant 2) was contrary to law. As His Lordship, the Chief Justice said in O. S A. No. 72 of 1925 a man who, like defendant 1, sets up a case in which he attempts to take advantage of his own wrong, must prove his case to the hilt. I am clear that the respondent has not proved his case."

The appellant has produced before me a license granted to a third person for the year 1918-1919, and has sought to have the same admitted in evidence. I, however, do not think that at this stage, and in second appeal, I should allow him to do so. The plaint was filed on 14th February 1921, and the additional written statement in which he took this new plea was filed by him on 31st July 1925. The appeal was pending before the lower appellate Court from 22nd June 1926 till 6th December 1927. The learned District Judge remarks that even after the arguments were heard on 21st September 1927 and judgment reserved to get a copy of the High Court judgment in O. S. A. No. 72 of 1925, defendant 1's vakil produced only a license granted to a third party for the year 1919-1920 and not any license granted for 1918-1919. Defendant 1 had plenty of opportunities to prove his case, and, I do not think that I should in the circumstances allow defendant 1 to produce in second appeal additional evidence, even if there be no other legal objections in his way of doing so.

It goes without saying that the production of the license granted to defendant 1 is essential to enable the Court to properly adjudicate on the question of illegality of the partnership raised by defendant 1. In Natla Bapiraju v. Achuta Rajaju (1), Miller and Krishnaswami Ayyar, JJ., with reference to a similar argument observed as follows:

"The Subordinate Judge sustained this objection and dismissed the suit. The license is not on record and it is impossible for us to say that the partnership contravenes any condition therein set forth."

In O. S. A. No. 72 of 1925, the late learned Chief Justice and Ramesam, J., observed as follows:

"The license which was granted is not forthcoming. Is is impossible to say why it was not produced. Had he produced the same, we would have been in a position to say, as we are not now, what exactly were the restrictions imposed upon his enjoyment of the license. The onus of establishing the illegality of the contract obviously lay heavily on defendant 1, and I am content to dispose of this case on the ground that this burden he never discharged in the Court below in spite of the latitude given to him."

See also Appadurai Mudali v.

(1) [1910] 20 M.L.J. 337=5 I.C. 456=(1910) M.W.N. 549.

Murugappa Mudali (2), Odgers and Madhavan Nair, JJ. No doubt in matters contrary to public policy, Courts should not lend ther aid in favour of persons who seek their aid to carry out something which is illegal and contrary to public policy: but there could be no doubt that Courts should in the first instance be satisfied that what a party is seeking to carry out is clearly against what has been declared to be against public policy. As observed by Lord Halsbury in Connolly v. Consumer's Cordage Co. (3):

"their Lordships entertain no doubt that it is the right and duty of the Court, at any stage of the cause, to consider, and, if it is sufficiently proved, to act upon an illegality which might turn out to be fatal to the claims of either of the parties to the litigation."

The Lord Chancellor added, that:

"their Lordships did not doubt that the learned Judges who tried the case in the Court below had a right, and that it was their duty, if they thought the facts were established, to take care that the process of the Court should not be used for the purpose of establishing a claim that ought not to be permitted to be enforced in a Court of Justice."

Lindley, L. J., observed in Scott v. Brown (4):

"It matters not whether the defendant has pleaded the illegality or whether he has not. If the evidence adduced by the plaintiff proved the illegality, the Court ought not to assist him."

While the duty of the Court is not to render its aid to the enforcement of transactions which are illegal, it is at the same time, incumbent that the illegality should be "sufficiently proved" (in the words of Lord Halsbury), and that the "facts were established" (in the words of Lord Chancellor). A partnership is prima facie legal, unless it is proved that the object of the same was illegal, or that the object of the partnership necessarily involved something illegal or contrary to public policy. (S. 23, Contract Act). The defendant who alleged the illegality has not succeeded in establishing the necessary facts which would enable the Court to come to that conclusion. Defendant 1 not having produced the necessary materials before the Court, I am unable to say that the learned District Judge was wrong in his decision on this point.

On the second contention raised by the learned advocate for the appellant, I propose to say only a very few words. It could not be said that every partnership relating to abkari business involves a transfer. As observed by Benson and Sundara Iyer, JJ., in the case reported in Padmanabham v. Badrinath Sarda (5) at p. 586:

"it is no doubt true that every contract of partnership is not necessarily a transfer; but it is equally clear that such a contract may in the circumstances in many cases involve a transfer. Thus if two persons agree to start a business in partnership and to contribute capital therefor, there is no transfer involved in the transaction; but if one person carrying on a trade and possessing stock and capital, admits another into partnership with himself, making the stock and the capitals, the joint property of both, it is impossible to contend that there is not a transfer in such a case."

The learned District Judge considers this question in para. 5 of his judgment. He says:

"there is no deed of partnership and one has to gather what the terms were from the oral evidence of the parties. As I understand the evidence, the case is not one of the respondent, having a going toddy trade and taking the other two (plaintiff and defendant 2) into partnership. So far as I can gather, each of the three parties contributed an equal share of money and the business was started, the license being taken in the name of defendant 1. It seems to be clear that at the time the partnership was formed he had not begun the trade in toddy and had no stock which he made the joint property of all the three. . . . . ."

Therefore in that view also the learned District Judge was, I think, right in overruling the contention of defendant 1, as the partnership in the particular case did not involve a transfer. In Appadurai Mudali v. Murugappa Mudaly (2) Odgers and Madhavan Nair, JJ., decided:

"where it was alleged that a partnership between defendants 1, 2 and 3 in the matter of an abkari business was illegal and opposed to public policy because the abkari license stood only in the names of defendants 2 and 3, instead of three persons, but the license itself was not produced, ... that, in the absence of evideuce to show that it was a condition of the license that all the names of licensees or persons concerned in that particular trade or business by way of partnership etc must appear on the face of the license, the partnership could not be held to be illegal; and that there was nothing prima facie illegal in such a partnership under the Abkari Act."

Defendant 1 is no doubt entitled to take objection that the partnership entered into by him with the plaintiff and defendant 2 was illegal and contrary to public policy; but he should have produced proper materials before the Court to enable the Court to properly adjudicate on such pleas. He not having done so in the present case, the lower appellate Court was right in passing a preliminary decree in favour of the plaintiff and directing the usual accounts to be taken. I do not propose that this litigation, begun on 14th February 1921 should further be prolonged by allowing defendant 1 at this stage to adduce additional evidence.

In this view, I do not propose to discuss the various decisions cited before me by the learned advocates on either side in the second appeal, viz: Marudamuthu Pillai v. Rangasami Moopan (6); Thithi Pakurudasu v. Bheemudu (7); Namasivaya Gurukkal v. Subramania Ayyar (8); Gangadhara Sah v. Swaminatha Mudali (9); Brahmayya v. Ramiah (10); of this Court Karsan v. Gatlu Shivaji (11); Nazaratti Syad Imam v. Babamiya Dureyatimsha (12); Champsey Dossa v. Gordhandoss Kessowji (13); of the Bombay High Court; Jnanendra Nath v. Chandi Charan Saha (14) and Behari Lall v. Jagodish Chunder (15) of the Calcutta High Court, as I consider that the case before me could be disposed of on the grounds already mentioned by me.

The result is that the second appeal is dismissed with costs.

M. S. A. P. L. Palaniappa Chettiar—Plaintiff—Respondent.

Appeal No. 8 of 1928, Decided on 22nd April 1929, against Judgment of Beasley, J,, D/-30th November 1927.

(a) Contract Act, S. 161—Pledgee's default in producing pledged property which must either be with him or has been improperly disposed of—Court is competent to draw presumption as regards its value.

If a pledgee who must either have the pledged property in his possession or must have improperly disposed of it makes default in producing it which should be in his possession, the Court has to come to a conclusion about its value on the best materials available and the pledgee cannot complain if the presumption is drawn against him on the principle of Armorie v. Delamirie, (1722) 1 Strange 504. [P 368 C 2]

(b) Acquiescence — Defence of acquiescence explained and enunciated.

Before any one can acquiesce in another's act he must know what that act is. No one can acquiesce in a fraud till he knows that there has been a fraud or in a violation of his right till he knows that his rights have been violated and in what way. Persons cannot be said to acquiesce in the claims of others unless they are fully cognisant of their right to dispute them. But it is not necessary that the plaintiff should have known the exact relief to which he was entitled; it is enough that he knew the facts constituting his title to relief. The ground for admitting the defence of acquiescence or laches according to the doctrine of the English Courts of Equity is that a Plaintiff in equity is bound to prosecute his claim without undue delay. Where however there is, as in India, a statutory time limit to all conceivable kinds of action, the plaintiff is entitled to the full statutory period before his claim becomes unenforceable. Besides, even if in such cases the defence of laches were admissible the defendants would have to show that they had suffered a change of position by reason of the plaintiff's laches in which it would not be reasonable to allow him to assert his right: 21 All. 496, (P.C.) Ref. [P 369 C 1,2]

(c) Contract Act, S. 176—Rights of pledgor and pledgee explained.

A pledgor cannot compel the pledgee to exercise the power of sale as a means of discharging or satisfying the decree. His only rights are (1) in case the pledgee exercises the power, to insist that it should be honestly and properly done and the sale proceeds applied to the debt; (2) in case the pledgee does not exercise the power, to redeem the pledge on payment of the debt or so much of it as remains otherwise unpaid, and (3) in case the sale is improperly exercised, to get damages caused thereby. [P 370 C 1]

(d) Contract Act, S. 176—Pledgee selling pledged property without pledgor's authority—Pledgee is guilty of unauthorized conversion—Pledgor is entitled to recover damages—Suit to recover such damages is either governed by Art. 145 or Art. 115—Art. 36 has no application—Limitation Act, Arts. 145, 115 and 36.

Where a pledgee having power to sell for default, takes over in effect, as if upon a sale the pledged property to himself without the pledgor's authority, or giving credit for their full value to him the pledgee is guilty of an unauthorised conversion and the pledgor is entitled to have his property back or its full value but only on payment of debt. A suit brought by the pledgor under the above circumstances within three years from the date of the alleged sale is well within time whether the suit be regarded as one for redemption governed by Art. 145 or as one for damages for breach of contract governed by Art. 115. Art. 36 has no application to such a suit : 19 Cal. 322½ (P.C.) Rel. on. [P 371 C 2]

(e) Contract Act, S. 177—Absence of tender of money before suit for redemption, where pledgee is ready to deliver property, need not entail dismissal of suit—But if pledgee declares before suit his inability to return pledged property, tender of money is unnecessary.

If a pledgor brings a suit for redemption without first tendering the money to the pledgee, and it turns out that the suit was unnecessary because the pledgee was always ready and willing to deliver up the property pledged without suit if the debt had been paid, the plaintiff will no doubt be made to pay the costs of the defendant, but his suit cannot be dismissed. But if it turns out that in the circumstances which preceded the suit, it would have been perfectly useless to tender the money to the pledgee as for instance where the pledgee declares in advance his inability to return the pledged property, in such a case if the pledgee was at fault in putting it beyond his power to return the goods the pledgor cannot be defeated on account of his not going through a useless ceremoney of tender. K. Raja Iyer and V. Ramaswami Iyer —for Appellants.

G. Ramakrishna Iyer and K. P. Mahadeva Iyer—for Respondent.

Pandalai, J.—The defendants appeal from a decree declaring that the respondent (plaintiff) is entitled to redeem eleven jewels pledged by him with the appellants, ordering the appellants to produce the same in Court on or before 30th January 1928 and in default to pay the respondent the price thereof i. e., Rs. 11,000, with interest thereon, less Rs. 11,712-9-0 being the amount due to the appellants under the decree in O. S. No. 110 of 1921 or a net amount of Rs. 627-9-8 and also ordering the appellants to pay the respondent his costs of suit. All the parties are Nattukottai Chet ties and appellant 1 is appellant 2's brother's son.

On 3rd November 1918 at Karaikudi in the Ramnad District the respondent borrowed from the appellants who are jointly carrying on a money lending business in India and the F. M. S., the sum of Rs. 6,000 at 12 per cent interest and pledged with them the jewels mentioned in the schedule to the decree. The debt being unpaid appellant 1 as agent on behalf of appellant 2 and during the latter's absence in the F. M. S. brought a suit for its recovery on 3rd November 1921 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sivaganga O.S. No. 110 of 1921. In the plaint it was stated by way of remark that 2 jewels worth in all Rs. 2,700 were pledged for the debt. This was only by way of remark ; the jewels were not produced in Court and the suit was framed as for the recovery of the debt, reserving to the plaintiff the right to sell the jewels without the intervention of the Court, a course which the creditor could take under S. 176, Contract Act. It is now admitted that this statement was incorrect because at least 10 jewels were pledged. It is alleged by the appellants that the mistake arose as the jewels were in an iron safe the key of which was with appellant 2 at Ipoh in the F.M.S., and appellant 1 who had to file the suit before it became barred did not know the number and value of the pledged jewels. However this may be, in March 1922 the respondent applied to the Court to direct the production of the jewels urging that the statement in the plaint as to the number and value of the jewels was incorrect. To this request, instead of stating what is now urged as the truth appellant 1 stated in a counter affidavit that the defendant's (present respondent's) allegations were all false and that he had no right to have the pledged jewels produced nor could his objections as to their value or number be heard as no relief was sought in the suit about the said jewels. On 27th November 1922 the Court made the following order:

" The pledged jewel does not form the subject matter of the suit. Plaintiff does not seek to enforce the pledge in the suit. No issue raises the question of the pledge. This application does not lie and is accordingly dismissed. "

The decree in the suit was passed on 8th December 1922 by which time appellant had returned from Ipoh to India.

The dispute in this case is about a private sale of the pledged jewels which the appellants alleged they effected on 25th January 1923 for Rs. 5350 and about the true value of the jewels. The pespondent in paras. 7, 8 and 9 of the plaint alleged that the appellant's suppression of the truth about the jewels in the plaint in the Sivaganga suit was wilful and fraudulent, that in pursuance thereof they set up the alleged sale of 25th January 1923 in order to appropriate his property really worth Rs. 15,100 for a gross undervalue, and that no sale in fact took place, the so-called sale being a 'bogus transaction' or a sham and fictitious one.

The appellants pleaded that the erroneous statement in the plaint in the former suit was an innocent one, due to a bona fide mistake on the part of appellant as to what the pledged jewels were as they were in a safe the key of which was with appellant 2 then at Ipoh, that after arrival of appellant 2 in India, due notice of the sale was given to the respondent and that as the debt was not paid, all the ten pledged jewels were properly and in fact sold and fetched Rs. 5,350. They pleaded further that credit was given for this amount in several applications for execution in the Sivaganga Court, that no objection was taken by the appellant at the time but that he on the contrary made several payments towards the balance of the decree amount and that therefore the respondent must be held to have affirmed and acquiesced in the sale and is not entitled now to question it. They also pleaded limitation and that the suit as framed was not maintainable. 8 Issues were framed. Issue 1 raised the question of the number and value of the jewels. Issues 2, 4 and 5 raised the question of the factum and validity of the sale and its binding character on the respondent. Issue 3 raised the question of respondents' acquiescence, issue 6 that of the maintainability of the suit, issue 7 that of limitation, and issue 8 is the general issue as to appropriate relief.

The learned Judge who tried the case delivered a careful judgment dealing exhaustively with the matters in dispute and it is not necessary for us, as we generally agree with his conclusions, to go as minutely as he has done into the evidence with which he has dealt.

The learned Judge held that the appellants had foisted a sale on the respondent whereas in fact there was no sale at all. As to the jewels themselves though at the time of pleadings the appellants denied the existence of one small item worth Rs. 300 out of the items 11, no importance seems to have been attached at the trial to this question and nothing has been urged in the appeal before us about it and we must hold with the learned Judge that all 11 jewels mentioned in the decree were pledged. About their value, the learned Judge held that they were worth Rs. 11,000. On the question of limitation he held that on his finding that the jewels were not sold the suit was really one for redemption for which a period of 30 years is provided, and that even regarded as one for damages it was governed by Art. 95 as the appellants had been guilty of a gross fraud and the relief was one claimed on the ground of fraud. The respondent's acquiescence and the maintainability of the suit are not separately dealt with by the learned Judge probably because much insistence was not made on them before him but from several passages in his judgment dealing with the respondent's conduct and its effect it is clear that he considered that the respondent had not acquiesced in the appellants' pretence that the jewels had been sold when they were not. He says

"it is inconceivable that the plaintiff (respondent) did not question the sale in Court though it is quite clear that no executing Court would go into such a matter, and that is what the plaintiff says the Judge refused to do. All that the plaintiff could say was that there was no sale but this was not a sale in execution and so the Court would not enquire into that sale."

As to maintainability of the suit the Judge says:

"There having been no sale, the plaintiff is entitled to redeem the jewels by payment of a certain amouut."

Before us the learned advocate for the appellants has argued (1) that the learned Judge's finding as to the factum of sale is incorrect (2) that his finding as to the value of the jewels is incorrect (3) that in any view the respondent must be held to have affirmed and acquiesced in the sale and cannot now disaffirm or repudiate it (4) that the suit is not maintainable as the respondent did not tender the money due nor was he willing and ready to pay it and (5) that the suit is barred by limitation.

We propose to deal with these contentions seriatim.

As to the sale itself after fully considering the evidence we agree with the Judge's finding that there was no sale at all on 25th January 1923 as alleged by the appellants. We need refer only to some of the striking features of this part of the case which support that finding. The sale is alleged to have been held at Karaikudi in the appellant's house on 25th January 1923, in pursuance to the notice Ex. B dated 16th January 1923, by which the respondent was required to pay the decree debt in one week from that day in default of which the 10 jewels mentioned therein would be sold. The respondent's answer to this was Ex. B-1, dated 26th January 1923, in which he pointed out the discrepancy between the plaint in which only two jewels were mentioned and the notice in which 10 jewels were mentioned and stated that neither the 10 jewelsa dmitted nor those still omitted should be sold as he (respondent) intended to take criminal proceedings. The parties being residents of the same village these letters must have reached the other party the same or the next day.

It is curious that the sale is dated 25th January which gives the appellants the opportunity of saying that they had already sold the jewels before receipt of the respondent's reply. If any sale actually took place on 25th January, it is curious that the appellants on receipt of Ex. B-1 did not take the trouble to inform the respondent that the sale had already been held or what the amount realised was. In fact they gave no information at all to the respondent but followed up the notice by an execution petition Ex. I in which for the first time they alleged that the jewels had been sold on 25th January for Rs. 5350. At the sale besides the appellants and their witness and the supposed purchasers, (two mysterious Madura merchants) four persons, Kuppusami Chetty, Kumarappa Chetty, Arunachalam Chetty, and a goldsmith Ponnaya Asari, all natives of Karaikudi, are said to have been present. Of the above nine persons except the appellants' only witness their paid servant, between whom and the respondent there is personal enmity on account of a decree obtained against him by the respondent, not a single person has been called. The last named four persons are said to have come there to value the jewels and yet not one of them has signed the undated list now produced which is alleged to be in the handwriting of appellant 2 and to have been made at the time of the sale. Most extraordinary of all, the alleged purchasers who are said to be two Madura merchants, have remained to this day unidentified, the appellants' witness not being able to say who or what their names are even at the trial. As if this were not enough, it is admitted that these mysterious persons, who came to buy valuable jewels did not bring any money nor was any money paid but it is said they were allowed to take away the jewels on the guarantee of Kuppusami Chetty. As there is absolutely nothing but the word of the appellant's witness, the respondent's enemy, to support the theory of guarantee we find it difficult to believe that shrewd businessmen like the appellants allowed unknown persons to take away Rs. 5,350 worth of jewels without a scrap of writing either from themselves or from someone else.

From all the evidence we are convinced that these Madura merchants are pure inventions and that no one took away the jewels on 25th January 1923 as admittedly no money was paid. Needless to say that the appellants have not produced their accounts of that day and it is admitted that there is no such entry anywhere in the appellants' books. This is not all. The appellants produced a ledger book and relied on certain entries there dated 16th July 1923 nearly six months later. The corresponding day book is not produced. The story to be gathered from these entries and the evidence of the appellants' witness is that Kumarappa Chetty had on 25th January 1923 taken the gold worth Rs. 1,200 from one of the neck ornaments which was melted, that for six months no part of the Rs. 5,350 for which the Madura merchants were responsible was paid by themselves or their guaranter or Kumarappa Chetty, that on 16th July 1923 the Madura merchants paid the appellants Rs. 3,640, that at once this Rs. 3,640 was lent to Kumarappa Chetty that, therefore, he was on that day debited with the Rs. 1,200 in one account and with Rs. 3,640 in a new account opened for that purpose and that for the balance of Rs. 510 another new account was opened in the name of the unknown Madura merchants. That these entries are fabrications is seen from the fact that in the body of the entries the date

The net result of these ingenious manipulations is that even on 16th July when these entries are supposed to have been made for some reason, not one pie in the shape of cash reached the hands of the appellants out of Rs. 5,350 for which they are supposed to have parted with the respondent's jewels; because Rs. 4,840 was outstanding against Kumarappa Chetty and Rs. 510 against the Madura merchants. The alleged payment of Rs. 3,640 by the Madura merchants and the loan of it at once to Kumarappa Chetty is a transparent paper device. It follows that the Madura merchants could not have got the great bulk of the jewels at any time and this confirms the belief that they are mere myths. The respondent suggests the reason why these ledger entries were brought into existence as of 16th July 1923. On 4th March 1923 he had applied to the Sivaganga Court for sanction to prosecute the appellants for falsely stating in the plaint that only two jewels were pledged whereas it was admitted in the appellants' notice that there were at least items 10. As the learned Judge observes this was an instance of litigants in this country rushing to the criminal Court with little or no justification at all. But while this charge was pending against the appellants, they would think it necessary to arm themselves with proof of their bona fides. That petition was disposed of by the Sivaganga Court by dismissing it, on 28th July 1924 and the suggestion is that the ledger entries of 16th July 1923 now relied on were really fabricated in answer to the threat of prosecution. Whether this be so or not, we have no doubt that they were paper entries made with the object of supporting a false story first set up in the execution petition Ex. 1 dated 7th February 1923. For these and other reasons more fully stated by the learned Judge we come without hesitation to the conclusion that there was no sale of the respondents' jewels at all on 25th January 1923 and that the statement to the contrary made by the appellants in the execution petitions in O. S. No. 110 of 1921 and in this case is untrue. It never was the case of the appellants that they sold the jewels at any other time or to any one else.

Coming next to the value of the jewels, in view of the finding that the appellants have not sold the jewels, or given any other satisfactory explanation about their disposal, they must either have them in their possession or must have improperly disposed of them. In either case, on the appellants' default to produce the jewels which should be in their possession, the Court has to come to a conclusion about their value on the best materials available and the appellants cannot complain if the presumption is drawn against them on the principle of Armorie v. Delamirie (1). The learned Judge had some material before him, viz., the fact that item 1, (a packet a diamonds) which the appellants themselves valued at Rs. 1,500 in the plaint in O. S. No. 110 of 1921 is put down at Rs. 800 in the memorandum Ex. D1, now put forward as the basis on which the total price was fixed at Rs. 5,350. This showed that the real price was somewhere near twice the figure at which the appellants pretended to have sold them. On this and on the evidence of the respondent and the fact that the loan advanced was Rs. 6,000 which with interest came to Rs. 8,160 the learned Judge thought it fair to fix the price of the entire lot of pledged jewels at Rs. 11,000. We find nothing wrong in this method and can only add that if we had to make a valuation for ourselves we would in the circumstances have to adopt the same method and arrive at the same figure.

The only other contention that involves any question of fact is that the respondent affirmed and acquiesced in the appellant's allegation of sale and cannot now be permitted to question the sale. It is urged that the principle that no one can approbate and reprobate the same transaction applies. But in our opinion the facts proved do not raise any inference of acquiescence at all by the respondent of the fraud—for in fact such it was—which the appellants attempted. Before any one can acquiesce in another's act he must know what that act is. No one can acquiesce in a fraud till he knows that there has been a fraud or in a violation of his right till he knows that his rights have been violated and in what way. The basis of the argument in the respondent's so-called acquiescence is the fact that the appellants alleged in certain execution petitions that the jewels had been sold for Rs. 5,350 and applied for execution for the balance and that the respondent when arrested on those petitions paid Rs. 200, Rs. 1,000, and Rs. 300 respectively in cash an later attempted unsuccessfully to set off a sum of Rs. 1019 towards that balance.

These petitions are, Ex. 1 (7th February 1923), E. P. 137 of 1923, Ex. 1 (a) (8th April 1923), E. P. 265 of 1923, (Ex. 1 (b) 16th January 1924) E. P. 12 of 1924; Ex. 1 (c) (18th February 1924), E. P. 35 of 1924 and Ex. 1 (d) (6th August 1924); E. P. 112 of 1924.

The payments by the respondent were made on arrest in pursuance of the first three of the above applications. The unsuccsssful application to set off towards the decree Rs. 1,019 alleged to be due to the respondent on some other account is Ex. 1 (e) dated 23rd August 1924 and it was dismissed. The utmost that follows from these facts is that the respondent did not resist those execution proceedings on the ground of the fraud which has now come to light probably because he did not know the appellants were setting up a sale which in fact had not taken place. Assuming that the respondent could have put forward that case in execution and that the executing Court could have given him relief on it about which we will state our opinion presently it is still incumbent on the appellants if they rely on any acquiescence in their conduct by the respondent to show that he knew the facts. Not only is there no such proof but in the nature of the appellant's contention that there was an actual sale, there could be no proof that the respondent knew that there was no sale. Authority for this is abundant and it is only necessary to refer to the passage in Halsbury, Laws of England Vol. 13, at p. 169 summarizing the law that :

"as regards knowledge, persons cannot be said to acquiesce in the claims of others unless they are fully cognizant of their right to dispute them. But it is not necessary that the plaintiff should have known the exct relief to which he was entitled, it is enough that he knew the facts constituting his tltle to relief."

The appellants' contention must, therefore, fail on the ground that he did not know that the sale alleged by the appellants was a myth. But there are other and equally fatal grounds. The ground for admitting the defence of acquiescence or laches according to the doctrine of the English Courts of Equity is that a plaintiff in equity is bound to prosecute his claim without undue delay. Where, however, there is, as in India, a statutory time limit to all conceivable kinds of action, the plaintiff is entitled to the full statutory period before his claim becomes unenforceable. Besides, even if in such cases the defence of laches were admissible the defendants (appellants in this case) would have to show that they had suffered a change of position by reason of respondent's laches in which it would not be reasonable to allow him to assert his right. We fail to see what change of position the appellants have suffered except that they have succeeded in making away with part of the respondent's property by giving him credit for only about half its value ; in other words, they have enriched themselves at respondent's expense. It is not only not unreasonable but eminently just that this wrong should be redressed. We are not aware of the defence of laches and acquiescence being employed to defeat a money claim like the present : cf. Ben Ram v. Kundal Lal (2) a case of equitable estoppel.

The appellants' advocate urged as a branch of his argument on acquiescence, what is really a distinct point, that the respondent's present suit is incompetent by reason of S. 47, Civil P. C., because the question raised is one relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree in O. S. No. 110 of 1921. This point does not appear to have been distinctly raised in the lower Court and has not been distinctly taken in the grounds of appeal to this Court. The passage in the lower Court's judgment has already been extracted above where the learned Judge in dealing with the respondent's alleged acquiescence observed that the executing Court could not and would not go into the question whether there had been a proper sale of the jewels as the sale was not a judicial one. Noauthority has been cited to us to show that this view is incorrect. The case cited Motilal Hirabhai v. Bai Mani (3) was one in which the pledgor having obtained a decree for redemption of certain shares sought in execution to show that certain new shares allotted by the company to the pledgees as holders of the old shares should also be delivered up as accretions to the pledged shares on payment of the debt. It was held that the question whether the new shares were accretions liable to be redeemed with the pledged shares was one which fell properly under S. 47, Civil P. C.

The suit O. S. 110 of 1921 was brought by appellant 2 as creditor merely for recovery of the debt retaining the goods pledged as a collateral security and he purported after the decree to exercise his right of sale without intervention of the Court as he was entitled to do. The present respondent's application, to have the jewels produced in Court was resisted by the appellants and the Court upheld that refusal by the order dated 27th May 1922 already quoted at the beginning of this judgment. We fail to see how in the above circumstances the respondent could have again agitated in execution the question of the factum or validity of the sale out of Court of the jewels as to which rightly or wrongly the Court had held that they did not form the subject matter of the suit and that the question of their pledge was not in issue. The respondent could not compel the appellants to exercise the power of sale as a means of discharging or satisfying the decree. His only rights were (1) in case the appellants exercised the power, to insist that it should be honestly and properly done and the sale proceeds applied to the debt (2) in case the appellants did not exercise the power, to redeem the pledges on payment of the debt or so much of it as remained otherwise unpaid and (3) in case the sale was improperly exercised, to get damages caused thereby. The 2nd of the above alternatives is what has happened. Having regard to the nature of tho former suit, the execution proceedings therein could not at respondent's instance have been converted into an enquiry whether there had been any sale at all or if there had been one whether it was properly held. If such an enquiry had been held and it was found as has been found in this case, that the appellants are liable to pay the respondent the difference between the full value of the jewels and the debt, there was no means of enforcing the payment of such difference in execution of the decree and the respondent would even then have had to bring a fresh suit for that sum. That is in substance what he has done and this suit cannot therefore be defeated by resort to S. 47.

The next objection urged on behalf of the appellants, is that the suit is not maintainable as the respondent did not tender the money due nor was he willing and ready to pay it. For this his learned advocate cited the Privy Council decision in Neckram Dobay v. Bank of Bengal (4), and the English decisions cited in argument in that case Halliday v. Holgate (5), Donal v. Sucking (6) and Johnson v. Stear (7). It is sufficient to deal with the decision of the Privy Council which was given after consideration of the other cases. The decision was that where a pledgee having power to sell for default takes over as if upon a sale to himself the property pledged without the authority of the pledgor but crediting its value in account with him, this act though an unauthorized conversion does not put an end to the contract of pledge so as to entitle the pledgor to have the property back without payment. Applying that to the present case what follows is that the pledgee having in effect taken over as if upon a sale the pledged jewels to himself without giving credit fot their full value to the pledgor has been guilty of an unauthorized conversion and the pledgor is therefore entitled to have his property back or its full value but only on payment of the debt, This is exactly what the learned Judge has ordered. He having found the jewels to be worth Rs. 11,000 and having given the appellants the opportunity to produce them if they could has ordered them, in case of default to pay the respondent the differenee between that value and the balance of the decree amount and no objection has been taken to the figures. The decision cited therefore, far from showing that decree appealed from is erroneous, supports it. But it was suggested that the non-maintainability of the suit was due to the respondent's not having tendered or his not having been ready and willing to pay the amount due before the suit, which it seems is an essential condition of bringing a suit for redemption. This is a misapprehension. If a pledgor brings a suit for redemption without first tendering the money to the pledgee and it turns out that the suit was unnecessary because the pledgee was always ready and willing to deliver up the property pledged without suit if the debt had been paid, the plaintiff will no doubt be made to pay the costs of the defendant but his suit cannot be dismissed. But if it turns out that in the circumstances which preceded the suit, it would have been perfectly useless to tender the money to the pledgee as for instance where the pledgee declares in advance his inability to return the pledged property, in such a case if the pledgee was at fault in putting it beyond his power to return the goods the pledgor cannot be defeated on account of his not going through a useless ceremony of tender. S. 51, Contract Act makes the matter clear when it declares that neither party to reciprocal promises need perform his promise unless the other party is ready and willing to perform his promise. Illus. (a) to this section is the ordinary case of buying and sellings goods when neither the buyer need pay the price nor the seller deliver the goods unless the other party is ready and willing to perform his part. In this case, the appellants having so long ago as 7th February 1923, the date of their first execution petition declared that they had sold the jewels and thus put it beyond their power to be ready and willing to return them the respondent was not required to tender the debt to them. This contention also must be rejected.

The last point urgod is that the suit is barred by limitation. The appellant's argument is that the suit is one for damages for tort governed by Art. 36, Lim Act and should have been brought within two years of the wrong conversion complained of. The learned Judge has held that in the nature of the finding that the goods were not sold the suit is one for redemption governed by Art. 145, Lim. Act which allows 30 years from the date of the deposit or pawn. We think that Art. 36 has no application to the suit as it is for wrongs independent of contract and that this case arises outof a contract ot pledge though technically the appellants' act amounted according to the authorities to conversion. But as held by the Privy Council in Nekram Dobay v. Bank of Bengal (4), above referred to that conduct was not inconsistent with the condition of the contract as to have the effect of putting an end to the contract so as to enable the pledgor to avoid the contract under S. 153, Contract Act. If the contract is thus till subsisting whether the suit be regarded as one for redemption governed by Art. 145, or as one for damages for breach of contract governed by Art. 115, the suit which was brought on 19th January 1926, before the expiry of 3 years from 25th January 1923 the date of the alleged sale, is well within time and is not barred, In this view it is not necessary to consider whether the suit was one for relief on the ground of fraud governed by Art. 95. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The memo. of objections is also dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—The civil miscellaneous appeal is against a remand order passed in appeal under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P C., requiring the trial Court to record a finding on issue 4, which dealt with the liability of the eastern portion of the property for the mortgage debt. When the case went back to the District Munsif the mortgagee gave up this portion of the hypotheca and contented himself with asking for the sale of the western portion, the subject of the present appellant petitioner's purchase. The civil revision petition is against the District Munsif's finding that the mortgagee was competent to take this course, with the result that the western portion becomes solely liable for the debt. The District Munsif cited the Full Bench case Perumal Pillai v. Raman Chetti (1), which lays down that when a mortgagee voluntarily releases part of the mortgage security, he can recover the whole of the debt from the remainder. I do not think that the circumstance that the appellant petitioner alleges himself to be a subsequent purchaser without notice can affect either the mortgagee's right so as to relinquish part of the security or the legal effect of such relinquishment, whatever remedies he may possess, and be able to enforce against his vendors. It may be noted that the Full Bench case expressly dissented from Ponnasami Mudaliar v. Srinivasa Naicken (2), which held that a mortgagee cannot relinquish to the prejudice of subsequent alienees ; and the expression of a similar opinion in Arunachalam Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (3), must be taken to be also overruled. The result is that the District Munsif's decision, in my view, is correct and the civil revision petition is dismissed. The civil miscellaneous appeal is also dismissed, because owing to the exoneration of the portion of property referred to, the propriety of the appellate Court's order can no longer be in question.

Jambukeswaraswami Temple and others—Plaintiffs—Respondents.

Appeal Suit No. 37 of 1923, D/- 26th April 1928, against decree of Sub-Judge, Trichinopoly, in O. S. No. 79 of 1920.

(a) Trusts Act, S. 52—Trustee can neither buy trust property nor sell any of his property to trust.

A trustee cannot buy the properties of the trust himself and he cannot sell any of his properties to the trust either, the mischief in both the cases being the likelihood of a conflict between his interest and his duties as a trustee. The law does not go into the question of whether the transaction is beneficial or not. Wright v. Morgan, (1926) A. C., 788, A. I R. 1922 P. C. 235, Ref. [P 374 C 2]

(b) Religious Endowment—Dedication of properties to kattalai in temple—Provision in trust deed made as to alienation only with a view to repurchase more profitable property—Trustee alienating property to vendee who had notice of trust deed—Suit by succeeding trustee to set aside alienation—Alienation set aside as being invalid — Vendee held entitled to reimbursement of consideration paid for sale—Contract Act, S. 65.

K, dedicated certain properties to a kattalai in temple whereby he constituted himself as the first trustee and provisions for the succeeding trustee were made in the deed ; one of such provisions was "Neither myself nor the managing members of the charity who shall be conducting the charity shall have any right to alienate the same in any manner. Should any such alienation be made it shall not be valid. But myself and those that succeed me as managing members shall have the right to sell the same only if other properties of value equivalent to these charity properties are available and if the income out of such other properties is likely to exceed that of this property ; and to buy with the sale proceeds such other properties for the above charity." Of his successors one alienated, without any necessity, some of the trust properties to a third person who had notice of the trust and the terms of the trust deed, and later on executed a sale deed thereby conveying his private property to himself as a trustee. A suit by the succeeding trustee was brohght to set aside the alienation.

Held : that it was for the alienee to show that the conditions which were required in the deed of trust to validate the transaction existed, for a mere representation and a bona fide belief in the existence of the necessity did not validate the same. [P 374 C 1]

Held further : that the alienation of the trust properties with a view to purchase his own prperty was invalid and not binding on the trust.

Held also : that on the alienation being set-aside the alienee was entitled to be reimbursed with the amount paid as consideration for sale.

A. Krishnaswami Ayyar, M. Patanjali Sastri, K. R. Rangaswami Ayyangar and K. P. Ramakrishna Ayyar—for Respondents.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit filed by plaintiffs 1 and 2 who are the trustees of Sree Jambukeswaraswami temple against the defendants for possession of the properties mentioned in the Sch. A which according to the plaintiffs were dedicated by one Karupanna Pillai towards a kattalai known as the Dadhyodana kattalai under a deed Ex. C, dated 4th July 1891. The deed Ex, C was executed by Karupanna Pillai whereby he constituted himself as the first trustee, made provisions for the succeeding trustees, gave the properties mentioned in the deed towards this kattalai and gave also the particulars as to the expenses that are to be incurred. The material portions so far as it concerns this appeal are in paras.4, 5 and 7 of the deed. Para. 4 runs as follows :

" Subsequent to my death, my son Subrahmania Pillai and Muthuswami Pillai son of Subramania Pillai of Tiruvannavanallur and (3) Devaraya Pillai son of Muthiah Pillai of Omandur, Musiri Taluk—these three shall either unanimously, or a majority of them, enjoy the properties as managing members and shall, out of the income thereof, conduct the charity permanently in the manner before mentioned."

Paragraph 5 runs as follows :

" Neither myself nor the managing members of the charity who shall be conducting the charity shall have any right to alienate the same in any manner such as hypothecation, othi, sale, gift, etc. Should any such alienation be made, it shall not be valid. But myself and those that succeed me as managing members shall have the right to sell the same only if other properties of value equivalent to these charity properties are available and if the income out of such other properties is likely to exceed that of these properties ; and to buy with the sale proceeds, such other properties for the above charity."

Paragraph 7 runs as follows :

" Some of my relations have asked me for a site to construct a choultry to conduct feeding there and I have also promised to so give. In the event of their asking for such site the ground in the spot in item 1 below, to the east of the north to the south bazars in the eastern side of the trunk road shall be handed over. After my death, the managing member of the choultry, after it is built shall also join in the management and conduct of the present charity with the managers that succeed me. Should the managers above referred to, neglect the management, the supervisor of the devasthanam should also join in the management and conduct it either unanimously with them, or by a majority."

The case for the plaintiffs is that Devaraya Pillai who was the last surviving trustee alienated the lands in the Sch. A properties which were comprised in the trust deed, Ex. C, without any necessity, that he purported out of the consideration for this sale deed to purchase lands in Sch. D which belonged to him. In other words the trustee sold to the trust the lands belonging to him purporting to do so under the powers conferred under Cl. 5 Ex. C, that such a sale is invalid and not binding on the trust, that defendants 35 to 37 who are the sons of the deceased Devaraya Pillai objected to the sale on the ground that their father had no power to sell the properties which were joint family properties, that the other defendants are in possession of these properties, the items in the plaint and that the plaintiffs are entitled to get back the properties with mesne profits.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. Some of the defendants have not appealed. The only defendant who has appealed is defendant 1. Out of items 1 to 32, the subject matter of this suit, defendant 1 purchased items 1 to 24 and we are concerned only with these items as none of the other defendants have preferred an appeal. Items 2, 13 and 14 have been given to defendant 10, so that, we are not concerned with those items. The sale deeds under which defendant 1 claims are Exs. 7, 10 and 9 (supplemental sale deed by Devaraya Pillai to defendant 1). Ex. 7, is a sale deed by Devaraya Pillai to defendant 1 of items 1 to 18 and 26 for Rs. 2,400. Ex. 10 is another sale deed by Devaraya Pillai to defendant 1 of items 19 to 23 for Rs. 250. It appears that suits were filed for the recovery of possession of these items by defendant 1 but objection was taken that the whole money was not paid because the purchaser had executed a mortgage Ex. 8 for a portion of the consideration. The suit for possession was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge and in order to assure his title Ex. 9 was executed by Devaraya Pillai which purports to be a confirmation of the previous sale deeds. Ex. 3 is a sale deed of the said Devaraya Pillai to himself as manager of the trust and Ex. 14 is a sale deed by Devaraya Pillai to the suit trust, of the properties comprised in Sch. D and this sale deed is dated 30th December 1917.

The first question that arises for our consideration is whether the sale deeds of the Sch. A properties are valid. There can be little doubt that the properties comprised in the Sch. A are trust properties and that defendant 1 was aware that the trustee was dealing with the said trust properties. He had notice of the trust and the terms of the trust deed. Under Cl. 5 it is stated distinctly that alienations shall be void and the only exception made is in the case where other lands which fetch larger income are to be purchased out of the sale proceeds of the land dedicated. There can be little doubt that on the evidence on record the title to the Sch. D properties is not free from doubt. The Subordinate Judge holds that it has not been shown that there was any justifying necessity as would enable the father to sell the joint family properties. But apart from that defendant 1 has to show that the conditions which are required by the deed of trust to validate the transaction exist. This is not simply a case where a mere representation is sufficient and a bona fide belief in the representation would validate the sale, there being no duty on the part of the purchaser to see to the application of the money. The case here goes much further. It is not contemplated that the trustee can sell the property without any negotiations for the purchase of the other properties and keep the money with him, nor is it contemplated that he can invest the moneys realised by the sale of the trust properties for some time and then utilize the same for the purchase of new properties. The author of the trust clearly wanted to prevent any money being lost or otherwise utilised in the interval and practically wanted both the transactions of selling and purchasing to be of a simultaneous nature. It is clear from the finding of the Subordinate Judge which is also supported by the evidence that these conditions were not fulfilled. The trustee instead of getting the money from the purchaser allowed him to mortgage to him every property sold and it is not a thing which is contemplated by the trust deed. Again we find that the trustee instead of purchasing other properties has conveyed his own properties to himself and the law is clear that a trustee cannot do so. He cannot buy the properties of the trust himself and he cannot sell any of his properties to the trust, the mischief in both the cases being the likelihood of a conflict between his interest and his duties as a trustee. The law does not go into the question of whether the transaction is beneficial or not. We may refer in this connexion to Wright v. Morgan (1), and Peary Mohan Mukerjee v. Manohar Mukerjee (2) and also Godfrey, on Trust p. 324, 4th Edition. For these reasons we are of opinion that the sale by the trustee to defendant 1 of trust properties is invalid and we confirm the decree of the Subordinate Judge as regards the items comprised in the Sch. A.

The next question for consideration is whether defendant 1 if he has paid the whole or any portion of the consideration for the sale to him is entitled to any relief. On this part of the case we are clearly of opinion that if we set aside the sale and if the purchase money or any portion thereof has been paid by defendant 1, he is entitled to get back the same from the trustee and he being dead he can recover the same from his legal representatives defendants 35 to 37. On this part of the case the vakil for defendants 35 to 37 says that he had no opportunity to show that consideration was not paid by defendant 1. We have got on one side the statements made by the deceased trustee who seems to have all along supported defendant 1 that the whole money was paid and on the other hand it is stated by the vakil for the defendants 35 to 37 defendants that the consideration was not paid or at least a portion of the consideration was paid on the date of Ex. 9 and we think that a finding is necessary on this point to adjudicate the amount which defendant 1 is to get back. It is argued by the vakil for defendants 35 to 37 that defendant 1 is entitled to no remedy in this suit but we do not see any reason to hold that a separate suit is necessary. All the parties are before us and if we set aside the sale by the trustee to defendant 1 we fail to see why we should not give effective relief to the other party by making the trustee who sold the properties reimburse defendant 1 with any money which may be proved to have been paid as consideration for the sale.

(2) A. I. R. 1922 P.C. 235=48 Cal. 1019 = 48 I. A. 258 (P.C.).

A legal objection is taken by Mr. Ramachandrier to the maintainability of the suit. His argument is that the trustees of the Jambukeswaraswami temple have no right to file a suit as the conditions under the deed of trust which entitle them to claim as trustees have not been fulfiled. His argument is that the trustees of the choultry are also trustees of the Jambukeswaram temple and that the latter should act with the former trustees and could not file a suit independently of the trustees of the choultry. There is no evidence that the trustees of the choultry took any part in the management of the trust. For the past 13 years we find nothing done by the trustees of the choultry and there is nothing to find that they accepted this trust and before we can hold that they have got any interest in the temple trust it should be proved that the trustees of the choultry accepted the temple trust. The mere statement in the trust deed, that the future trustees to come into existence should also have rights of management would not make them trustees. Further there is this difficulty. No such plea was raised and no issue was framed on that point and if such an issue was raised the trustees of the temple would have joined them as defendants in the case if they would not join as plaintiffs. We do not think that the objection raised at this late stage is valid. Moreover, the trustees of the Jambukeswaram temple are really interested in seeing that the trust properties are properly managed and the kattalai regularly performed and we do not see why they should not sue to recover trust properties as trustees of the Jambukeswaram temple which is the beneficiary.

Plaintiff 3 was brought on record on his application to cure any defect which may arise as regards non-joinder of parties should it be found that plaintiffs 1 and 2 are not legally entitled to maintain the suit. The trust not being hereditary, plaintiff 3 can come in only when there are no trustees to represent the trust. The finding of the Subordinate Judge is, and we agree with him that plaintiffs 1 and 2 are competent to file the suit and there is no reason why we should declare plaintiff 3 also a trustee and give him any relief in this suit. We say nothing in this suit as regards his right to be declared a trustee. All we say is that there is no reason to give him a joint decree with the plaintiffs. If he likes he can file a separate suit to have his rights as trustee established.

With reference to the memorandum of objections filed we think that plaintiffs 1 and 2 are entitled to mesne profits on the properties which are found to be in possession of defendant 1 till the date of possession and not merely till the date of the decree as ordered by the Subordinate Judge. As regards the rate we do not think there is any ground to increase the rate allowed by the Subordinate Judge. This disposes of all the points in the case.

We direct the principal Subordinate Judge of Trichinopoly to submit a finding as to the amount which defendant 1 paid towards the consideration for the sale deeds executed by the trustee Devaraya Pillai in his favour. The parties are at liberty to adduce further evidence. The finding will be submitted within one month from the reopening of the Trichinopoly Court. Time for objections seven days.

The memorandum of objections filed by plaintiff 3 is dismissed without costs.

No orders are necessary on the C. M. P. Nos. 3598 of 1923 and 3767 of 1924 and they are dismissed.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Subordinate Judge of Trichinopoly submitted the following :

Finding

Issue :—

"What is the amount which defendant 1 paid towards the consideration for the sale deeds executed by the trustee Devaraya Pillai in his favour ?"

* * * * * *

My finding on the issue is accordingly to the effect that the sales in question have consideration to the extent of Rs. 650 only.

This appeal and the memorandum of objections coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following judgment :

Kumaraswami Sastri, J. — We accept the finding of the Subordinate Judge and find that Rs. 650 was the consideration which was paid in respect of the sales in favour of defendant 1. Defendant 1 will be entitled to a decree for this amount against defendants 35 to 37 to the extent of the family properties in their possession and the assets of their father in their possession. In other respects we confirm the decision of the lower Court and the appellants will pay the costs of the plaintiffs-respondents 1 to 3 and each party will bear his own costs as regards the other reliefs sought.

Advocate General and Venkatasubbaiyah—for Petitioner.

Government Pleader — for the Crown.

Order of Reference to a Bench.

Walsh, J. — The plaintiff filed 118 suits against 118 sets of tenants for recovery of arrears of rent under S. 77, Estates Land Act. The suits were dismissed and he filed 118 appeals from these decrees. The appeals were also dismissed. He now seeks to prefer second appeals to the High Court from the decrees of the lower appellate Court and has put in this application under S. 151, Civil P. C., to consolidate them so that he may file,

(1) a single memorandum of appeal,

(2) a single vakalatnama, and

(3) only one court-fee on the aggregate value of the 118 second appeals.

The questions that arise are should he be allowed to consolidate the appeals and if so, how many memoranda of appeals, how many vakalatnamas and what sum as court-fees must he pay.

The power of consolidation is an inherent power of the Court and there is no special section or rule relating to it but it must, of course, be exercised in accordance with the provisions of law.

In the present case, the petitioner did not file any application in the Court of first instance or in the appellate to consolidate the suits or appeals. Obviously he could not do so in the trial Court. The defendants were all different and the causes of action entirely distinct. I may perhaps mention that in para. 2 of the lower appellate Court's judgment the word "consolidate" is clearly not used in the sense in which we are now considering it. It appears that the appellant himself raised as an objection before the lower appellate Court that he was prejudiced in the trial Court by the "consolidation" of the suits. What was clearly meant was 'the joint trial of the suits' which is a different thing. The suits obviously could not be and were not consolidated in the Court of first instance. Still it is to be noted that he made even their joint trial a grievance while he now asks to consolidate the second appeals.

I am unable to see how in a case like the present the appeals can be consolidated without offending against O. 1, R. 3, Civil P. C. The matter involves a considerable question of revenue but unfortunately as the learned Advocate General appears for the appellant he cannot be called to represent the Government. However, in several of the cases cited the objections raised by Government have been considered. They are materially the same in all the cases and as I do not think the petitioner has made out a case for consolidation of the appeals, I do not consider it necessary to call on some one other than the Advocate General to represent the Government. The petitioner quotes Kashi Prosad Singh v. Secy. of State (1) and Vengu Naiau v. Deputy Collector of Madura Division (2) but his chief reliance is on a recent case reported Perumal Nadar, In re (3) in which consolidation was allowed by Devadoss, J. The latter is the only case wich I think is really on all fours with the present. Kashi Prasad Singh v. Secy. of State (1), was concerned with a land acquisition and the parties were the same in all the cases. The plots of land were contiguous to each other. There were different tenants but they were not parties to the appeal. The appeals were allowed to be consolidated. Vengu Naidu v. Deputy Collector of Madura Division (2) was also a case of land acquisition. Though several plots of land were acquired from the appellants only one notice was served on them under S. 12 (2) and they made only one reference to the Collector to refer their objection to award. There was therefore, in the words of the learned Judge "only one award the correctness of which had to be determined by the District Court." Here there was clearly one cause of action between the same parties. That case bears no resemblance to the present.

Turning now to Perumal Nadar, In re (3), I have no doubt that it is on all fours with the present case ; for it was also a request to consolidate appeals arising out of rent suits against different tenants. The learned Judge quotes In the matter of the "Falls of Ettrick (4). This case was also referred to in Vengu Naidu v. The Deputy Collector of Madura Division (2). It was a case of one steamer being salvaged by two tugs but not simultaneously. Three separate salvage claims were brought. What was held there was that the claims should not be consolidated against the will of the promovents and they were in fact not consolidated. There is a note at the end of the case that the Court of admiralty has reverted to the old practice of allowing appeals to be consolidated when it may appear convenient to do so without regard to the consent of the parties.

This case has little bearing on the matter before me. The learned Judge then quotes Vengu Naidu v. Deputy Collector of Madura Division (2) in which as I have pointed out there was only one cause of action and the parties were the same. He devotes most of the judgment to discussing whether if consolidation is allowed one vakalatnama is sufficient but the only discussion that I can find as to the ground on which the consolidation is allowed is the following sentences.

"In these two batches the trials were only two and there were only two judgments. The appeals arise out of rent suits and the questions at issue are common to all the tenants. The landlord is only one person."

With due respect I find myself unable to agree with my learned brother that these facts enable the appeals to be consolidated. The causes of action and the parties are entirely different. If the appeals can be consolidated why could not the original suits have been ? Yet that would have clearly contravened O. 1, R. 3, Civil P. C.

I find that the same learned Judge Phillips, J., who allowed the consolidation in Vengu Naidu v. Deputy Collector of Madura Division (2), refused it in S. R. Nos. 24378, 24380 of 1927 and 828 of 1928. These were two partition suits and in my opinion much stronger cases for allowing consolidation than the present. Devadoss, J. quotes C. M. No. 1336 of 1925 in which Wallace, J., ordered consolidation of appeals. I have sent for that Civil Miscellaneous Petition. The appeals appear to have been concerned with the bringing of the holding of a number of ryots to sale and as far as I can gather the appeals were preferred by the tenants. They pleaded that the sums for w ich the sales were held were very small such as Rs. 1,1½ etc. and that separate second appeals would involve enormous expense. No notice was sent to the Government though the revenue involved was considerable and no reason for allowing consolidation is given in the order.

With great respect to my learned brother Wallace, J., if the considerations urged by the tenants are applicable to the consolidation of appeals I fail to see why they are not applicable to the consolidation of suits for petty sums of rent in the first instance.

It is quite clear to my mind that no Court could allow a landlord to bring a consolidated rent suit against a number of tenants holding separately merely because the rent demanded from each was small and because a common question was involved in all the suits, nor can I see how such tenants can bring a consolidated appeal if the suits go against them. After all they can always file a test appeal ; if it succeeds they will get their costs when they win the other appeals. I have only been able to find one other order of consolidation passed by Jackson, J., in C.M.P. 905 of 1929. This was a land acquisition case and so far as I can gather the parties were the same and the only question involved was the apportionment of the compensation awarded. It is probable that this case resembled one or other of the two other land acquisition cases referred to above. The order was passed without notice to Government and no reasons for it are assigned but prima facie it is not a parallel case to the present. I am much influenced by the fact that though the filing of large batches of suits against tenants and the disposal of them by a common judgment and by a common first and second appellate judgment are very common I have been able to find no case except Perumal Nadir, In re (3) where consolidation of appeals in such cases was allowed by the High Court.

C. M. P. 905 of 1925 referred to above may be a parallel instance but there consolidation was allowed without notice to the Government and no reasons for the order are given.

The following cases in other Courts where consolidation was allowed appear to me to bear out that the parties and causes of action must be the same if consolidation is to be allowed : Latchman Sahu v. Abdul Karim (5). A common declaration was asked in a single suit against a number of tenants. Even there it was held that a court-fee should have been paid in respect of each of the sets of tenants. Abdullah v. Badrulislam (6). This dealt with an appeal to the King in Council (O. 45). The parties were the same and the question at issue the same but there were two judgments. Held that though the valuation in one suit was below Rs. 1,000 the appeals might be consolidated under O. 45 (4) so as to get a judgment covering the decrees in both suits.

Moosa Soleman Salehji v. Secy. of State, A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 135. Held that where the matter for consideration was the same and the parties the same, the appeals might be consolidated but even the court-fees must be paid separately for each.

I am unable therefore, to accede to the request to consolidate the appeals and that being so the question of a single vakalatnama and a single court-fee on the aggregate value of all the suits does not arise, though on the latter point see Moosa Soleman Salehji v. Secy. of State, A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 135, just quoted. Having regard to the importance of this matter and that I differ from my learned brother Devadoss, J., I would refer the matter to a Bench of two Judges.

Order of Reference.

This petition raises the important question as to the consolidation of second appeals so as to enable one court-fee on the consolidated value being paid and also one vakalat being filed. The matter first came before one of us (Pakenham Walsh, J.) and his order referring the matter to a Bench refers to all the authorities on the subject and the difficulty which my learned brother finds in consolidation. We think the question is one of considerable importance and arises frequently and in view of the conflict of authority and the fact that it is necessary to have an authoritative decision of a Full Bench on the question, we refer the following question for decision.

"Whether the Court has inherent jurisdiction to consolidate appeals in cases disposed of by a single judgment of the lower Court so as to enable the appellant to pay court-fee on the value of the consalidated appeals and file only one vakalat."

Kumaraswami Sastri, J. — The Maharajah of Venkatagiri who is the petitioner filed separate suits against his tenants for rent on the ground that they raised a second crop. The tenants defended the suits on the ground that they did not raise a second crop and that the suit was barred by limitation. The suits were tried together and the wit nesses examined were treated as witnesses in all the suits. There was one judgment but separate decrees were passed. Separate appeals have been filed in the High Court. The present application is to consolidate the appeals so filed for the purpose of (1) treating the court-fee payble as the court-fee on the entire value of the suits and (2) filing only one vakalat in all the suits, and the question is whether such consolidation is permissible.

As to the inherent power of the Court to consolidate suits or appeals, there can be no question Vengu Naidu v. Deputy Collector of Madura Division (2), Narayan Vithal Samant v. Janki bai (7), Kalichand Dutt v. Manoda Bala Dass (8), Dharamdas v. Dharamdas (9) and Kashi Prosad Singh v. Secy. of State (1). But the point which we have to determine is whether a consolidation can be effected which will conflict with the specific provisions of the Court-fees Act, and the Civil Procedure Code as to the filing of appeals against the decrees of of the lower Courts.

Consolidation of suits or appeals may be for various purposes and the main object of a consolidation is to prevent unnecessary delay in the disposal of suits or appeals and also to prevent unnecessary costs being incurred Martin v. Martin & Co. (10) and The Creteforest (11). The costs saved are costs as between party and party and cannot mean stamp duty payable to the Crown under specific enactments.

Section 4, Court-fees Act enacts that no document of any kind specified in Sch. 1 or Sch. 2 to the Act as chargeable with fees shall be filed, exhibited or recorded in, or shall be received by, any of the High Courts in the exercise of its jurisdiction as regards appeals from the Courts subject to its superintendence or in the exercise of its jurisdiction as a Court of reference or revision, unless in respect of such document there be paid a fee of amount not less than that indicated by either of the above schedules as the proper fee for such document.

Section 6 contains a similar provision as regards court-fee payable in respect of suits or appeals in the Subordinate Courts.

Where therefore there is nothing either in the Code or in any other enactment to prevent this course from being adopted, Courts have power to consolidate but I do not think that such power can be extended in a manner to conflict with the provisions of any enactment like the Court-fees Act or the express provisions of the Civil Procedure Code as regards the filing of appeals.

It seems to me that consolidation can only be asked when there are suits or appeals properly instituted and on the file. Where the legislature lays down certain requirements necessary to be satisfied before it can be seized of the suit or appeal e. g., a plaint or memorandum of appeal on a proper stamp it is difficult to see how an order can be passed consolidating suits or appeals for the purpose of getting over the stamp duty payable.

There are two classes of case in which consolidation can be ordered. One relates to cases where although one suit could have been filed against several defendants in the lower Court, the party has not chosen to do so but has filed separate suits, and the other relates to cases where although one suit could not have been filed, the questions for determination are the same and it will save costs and expenses to consolidate the suits either in the lower Court or in appeal. In the former case the provisions of S. 17, Court-fees Act are imperative because in the case of a suit embracing two or more distinct subjects, the plaint or memorandum of appeal should be chargeable with the aggregate amount of the fees to which the plaints or memoranda of appeal in suits embracing each of such subjects would be liable under the Act, In cases where one suit could not have been filed, it is difficult to see how the aggregate value of the subject matter in all the suits can be treated as the amount on which court-fee has to be paid. In cases which do not fall under S. 17, there is no question of treating the aggregate value of the various suits or appeals as one for the purpose of court-fee, as the provisions of the Court-fees Act are specific and state that each of such suits should bear the court-fee prescribed by the schedules to the Act.

Reference has been made to Kashi Prosad Singh v. Secy. of State (1). It was a case under the Land Acquisition Act and it was held that as the parties were the same in all the cases and the plots of land were contiguous to one another and formed part of an estate, although in the occupation of different tenants who were not parties to the appeals, the appeals should be consolidated and the court-fee paid upon the value of the consolidated appeals under S. 17, Court-fees Act subject to the maximum of Rs. 3,000. The maximum of Rs. 3,000 has, however, now been omitted and court-fee has to be paid ad valorem without any maximum so that consolidation cannot in any view affect the court-fee.

In Vengu Naidu v. Deputy Collector of Madura Division (2) there was an application to consolidate several appeals filed from the awards passed by the District Judge of Madura on reference made to him by the Land Acquisition Officer. The District Judge treated all the references as 47 separate petitions and passed a separate award on each of them although they were all tried together and disposed of in one judgment. Phillips, J., held that the power of consolidation was inherent in the Court although no express power was conferred by the Code and followed Enayetoollah v. Radha Churn Roy (12), Kashi Prosad Singh v. Secy. of State (1), Fink v. Secy. of State for India (13), In re, Dorabji Cursetji Shroff (14) and In the matter of the Falls of Ettrick (4). The learned Judge considered the objection that consolidation would affect the revenue and says the fact that only one notice was sent under S. 12 and one objection filed under S. 18 prima facie indicated that there was only one award the correctness of which had to be determined by the District Court. He was of opinion that the fact that the award contained several items did not make any difference.

I do not think that Land Acquisition cases afford any safe guide as the considerations which exist in such cases and which the learned Judge points out are absent in ordinary suits and it is doubtful whether having regard to the amendment of the Land Acquisition Act in 1921 (S. 26, Cl. (2) of the Act), the same consideration can now exist.

I may also point out that the same learned Judge refused consolidation in S. R. No. 829 of 1928 (Civil Miscellaneous Petition). There were two suits filed for partition in the District Munsif's Court and second appeals were filed. An application was put in that the second appeals should be consolidated on the ground that the two suits must be deemed to be one suit and consolidated for purposes of appeal. The learned Judge refused consolidation on the ground that the suits did not relate to the same subject matter.

I now come to the question of consolidation for the purpose of filing one vakalat in all the appeals.

Order 41, R. 1, Civil P. C., provides that every appeal shall be preferred in the form of a memorandum signed by the appellant or his pleader.

Rule 3 provides that if the memorandum is not drawn up in the manner prescribed it may be rejected or be returned for the purpose of being amended.

So, before there could be a valid presentation of an appeal, the memorundum must be signed by the appellant or his pleader. If a pleader is employed, Act 10, Sch. 2, Court-fees. Act prescribes the fee to be paid on the vakalat.

Having regard to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and Court-fees Act, there can be little doubt that every appeal presented if not signed by the party should be signed by a pleader who has authority to act and such authority has to be stamped under the provisions of the Court-fees Act.

Rule 31, Appellate Side Rules also provides that where a person is a party to two or more connected suits he shall execute a separate vakalatnama in each notwithstanding he may retain the same pleader in all the suits.

In In re, Perumal Nadar (3), the question as to consolidation arose as regards vakalats. There were several second appeals filed. An application was made to consolidate 38 second appeals into one batch and 52 into another batch for the purpose of filing one vakalatnama in each of the batches. The Government pleader contended that separate vakalatnamas ought to be filed. Devadoss, J., held that one vakalatnama in each batch need be filed. The learned Judge was of opinion that the very object of consolidation is to save the party unnecessary expenses and the Court unnecessary trouble that where the Court allows consolidation it allows the parties to the appeals to treat the consolidated appeals as one and that Art. 10, Sch. 2, Court-fees Act does not stand in the way of consolidation.

Dealing with the argument based on O. 41, R. 1, which requires a separate memorandum of appeal, the learned Judge was of opinion that it does not follow that because a separate memorandum ought to be filed in each case the engagement of the pleader should be separate. He, however, held that the production of one vakalatnama in different cases does not at all obviate the necessity of producing the decree in each case though the Court may dispense with the production of copies of judgments in each case.

With all respect I am unable to agree with the conclusion. It is difficult to see how the requisites of the Civil Procedure Code and the Court-fees Act the compliance with which is a condition precedent to the Court being seised of the appeals can be got over by an order of consolidation. Again R. 31, Appellate Side Rules which are framed under statutory power expressly requires seperate vakalatnamas.

I would answer the reference in the negative.

Curgenven, J.—I agree.

Walsh, J.—This matter came in the first instance before me and in my referring order I considered the cases quoted in support of consolidation and specially the judgment of Devadoss, J., reported in In re, Perumal Nadar (3). It was because I doubted the correctness of that decision that I made the reference which has finally come before a Bench of three Judges. I have given in my order of reference my reasons for doubting that decision and for distinguishing it from the salvage case and the land acquisition cases quoted in support of it. I entirely agree with the reasons given by my learned brother Sir Kumaraswami Sastri, J., and have nothing to add.

Deficient court-fee should be paid in one month. Separate vakalat will be filed in one month.

Order of Reference

Kumaraswami Sastri and Walsh, JJ.—These petitions are for consolidating Civil Revision Petitions and the question here also is whether the Court has power to consolidate so as to entitle a party to file only one vakalat and pay only one process fee so far as the common respondents are concerned. For the reasons given in In re, Govinda Krishnayachandrulu (1), we refer this question also to a Full Bench as to whether the Court has inherent jurisdiction to consolidate Civil Revision Petitions in cases which have been disposed of by a single judgment of the lower Court so as to enable the party to file one vakalat in the petitions and pay one process fee for the common respondents.

Curgenven, J.—The question referred to us is whether the Court has inherent jurisdiction to consolidate Civil Revision Petitions in cases which have been disposed of by a single judgment of the lower Court so as to enable the party to file one vakalat in the petitions and to pay one process fee for the common respondents. In In re, Govinda Krishnayachandrulu (1), we have held generally that this Court has no power to consolidate appeals in such a manner as to conflict with the provisions of any statutory enactment, and specifically that it cannot so consolidate as to permit a single vakalat to be filed in a number of appeals or a single Court-fee calculated upon the aggregate value of the appeals, to be paid. This decision of course applies equally to the case of Civil Revision Petitions and it accordingly settles the question with regard to vakalats.

There remains the question of process fees, whether, when one person figures as respondent in a number of cases, a single process can be issued to him, to embrance all the cases, upon payment of a single fee. We have to see whether such a course would trangress any provision of law. Section 20, Court-fees Act empowers the High Court to make rules regulating the fees chargeable for serving and executing processes issued by it in its appellate jurisdiction which comprises also its revisional jurisdiction. R. 2 (1), O. 41-A provides that a memorandum of appeal shall be accompanied by the prescribed fees for the service of notice of appeal, and appellate side R. 41 makes a similar provision in the case of Civil Revision Petitions. The rules for the service of notices form the subject of Chap. 7 Appellate Side Rules R. 61, fixing the fees chargeable. The schedule to that rule prescribes a fee of Re. 1 for each summons or notice "to a single respondent or witness." This is a rule framed under S. 20, Court-fees Act and has the force of law. Unless therefore we can construe the words "single respondent" as embracing any one person, though he may be a respondent in a number of cases, permission to consolidate would involve permission to pay a single fee where the rule prescribes a separate fee in each case. We do not think that such a construction would be correct. The rule, in our view, makes no provision for the circumstance, accidental from the point of view of procedure, that the respondent in one case may be the same individual as the respondent in another, but requires that each respondent be treated independently of the other. Accordingly it would conflict with the rule to allow process to issue in two or more cases on payment of a single process fee and, as we have held in In re, Govinda Krishnayachandrulu (1), we have no power to relax the terms of an enactment or statutory rule for the purpose of consolidation. A similar application to consolidate was refused by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in In the matter of the Application of H. C. Studd (2), Rampini, J., basing his refusal upon the inability of the Court to relax a statutory rule.

We accordingly answer the question referred to us in the negative. We would add that there appears to be no objection to issue a single consolidated process with the several causes entered in it, provided that the amount of process fees for the issue of process in each case is paid. We give the petitioners one month from this date to file duly stamped vakalats and pay process fees.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—I agree.

Walsh, J.—I agree.

Opinion

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—The facts leading to this reference are these:

Defendant 1 executed a sale deed, dated 21st December 1922 in favour of defendant 3 for Rs. 3,500 and he directed the vendee to pay the plaintiff Rs. 1,200 which he defendant 1, owed the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued to recover the sum of Rs. 1,574-10-3 the balance which was due on a promissory note executed by defendant 1 and 2 dated 25th June 1921. He made defendant 3 a party on the ground that he was a vendee from defendant 1 under an obligation to pay the debt due by defendant 1 to the plaintiff.

The sale deed has been filed Ex. D in the case. It purports to be for Rs. 3,500. After reciting that the vendee had undertaken to pay Rs. 1,500 due to one Viswanatham Chetti and another sum of Rs. 500 due to the same creditor the material portion continues as follows :

" Whereas you have consented to pay on my behalf to P. L. M. Palaniappa Chettiar firm carrying on money lending business at Thenkarai, Periyakulam Town, the amount due by me to him and obtain a receipt, I am in receipt of Rs. 1,200. "

Then it proceeds to state the other creditors who were to be paid and the consideration is said to have been received in that manner.

Defendant 3 pleaded that there was no privity between him and the plaintiff and that there was no cause of action.

The District Munsiff dismissed the suit against defendant 3 and passed a decree against defendants 1 and 2.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed the judgment of the District Munsiff and remanded the case for trial.

On appeal against this order of remand the High Court set aside the order of remand and directed the Subordinate Judge to dispose of the case in the light of the observations made by the High Court. One of the questions which the High Court wanted the Sub-Judge to decide was whether defendant 3 undertook orally to pay the money to the plaintiff and pointed out that if the oral agreement was proved the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree against defendant 3 but if it was not proved then the question whether the principle in Tweddle v. Atkinson (1), would apply would have to be considered.

The Subordinate Judge found on the evidence that the oral agreement was not proved and the defendant 3 did not apart from the obligation under Ex. A orally agree to pay the sum to the plaintiff. He however held following the decisions in Itti Panku Menon v. Dharman Achan (2), Debnarain Dutt v. Ram Sadhan (3), and Singarayya v. Subbayya (4) that the principle in Tweddle v. Atkinson (1) did not apply and passed a decree against defendant 3 also.

Against that judgment this second appeal was filed which came on before Wallace and Sundaram Chetty, JJ. and they were of opinion that in view of the conflict of decisions on the point of law it was desirable to have the decision of a Full Bench on the question.

On the findings of facts of the Courts below the only question for decision is whether a contract between A and B to pay C who is creditor of A would without more entitle C to sue B. We have already set out the sale deed and we think that on the terms of the sale deed there is no trust express or implied created and that the sale deed merely constitutes the vendee the agent of the vendor to pay some of his creditors.

The law in England is that the mere payment of money by A to B with a direction to pay it to C in cases where B is not C's agent is revocable and confers no right of action. A distinction has been drawn between cases where the defendant has constituted himself the agent of plaintiff to pay him a particular sum of money received from a third person and cases where there is no such agency or trust express or implied.

A similar view has been taken in India in Raghunathachariar v. Shadagopachariar (5). There it was held that where A transferred his property to B in consideration of B agreeing to pay certain sums to third perrons, A was himself entitled to sue B for the recovery of those sums as if they were due to him in crse of B's failure to pay the creditors within a reasonable time. The learned Judges have referred to all the cases bearing on the point. We may also refer to Komu Kutt v. Kumara Menon (6).

The question has therefore to be decided on the footing that no trust has been created, that defendant 3 was not plaintiff's agent and that there was no novation or obligation undertaken by defendant 3 to the plaintiff.

The rule of Common Law laid down in Tweddle v. Atkinson (1) is that a stranger to the consideration cannot sustain an action on the promise made between two persons unless he has in some way intervened in the agreement.

As regards relief given by Courts of Equity, Gandy v. Gandy (7) gives a right of action to the third person only when the person with whom the contract is made is a trustee express or implied for the third person for whom the benefit is intended. The conditions necessary to be fulfilled before a person, not a party to a contract, can enforce any claim under it in a Court of Equity are laid down in Gandy v. Gandy (7), in In Re, Empress Engineering Co. (8), and in In Re, Rotherham Alum and Chemical Co. (9). The observations of Lord Hatherley in Touche v. Metropolitan Railway Warehousing Co. (10) have been dissented from as stating the rule too widely.

Section 23, Specific Relief Act deals with the persons for whom contracts may be specifically enforced and Cl. (c) of that section enacts that specific performance may be obtained where the contract is a settlement on marriage, or a compromise of doubtful rights between members of the same family by any person beneficially entitled there under.

There has been great divergence of opinion in Courts in India as to how far a stranger to a consideration can enforce the contract and how far the rule in Tweddle v. Atkinson (1), is applicable in India. There are decisions which decide that the rule of English Law as laid down in Tweddle v. Atkinson (1) and Gandy v. Gandy (7), will apply to cases in India. There are other decisions which are to the effect that the principle in Tweddle v. Atkinson (1) founded as it is on English Law on the form of action known as assumpsit is not applicable to contracts in India governed by the Contract Act where all the parties are before the Court and the Court can do complete justice between them. There are other decisions which take a middle course and decide that the rule in Tweddle v. Atkinson (1) is applicable subject to certain specified exceptions which we shall refer to later on.

It is difficult to reconcile the various views and we think the balance of authority is in favour of the view that a stranger to a contract cannot without more sue to enforce it.

In Jamnadas v. Ramautar Pande,(11), A mortgaged certain properties to B. He sold the property to C and left with him sufficient money out of the consideration to redeem B. B obtained a decree on his mortgage and as the sale proceeds were insufficient to meet his claim he applied for a personal decree against C on the ground that C was liable as he retained part of the consideration payable to A agreeing to pay it to B. It was held by Richards and Griffin, JJ., that C did not become liable to B. The learned Judges observed.

"It is contended that by retaining in his hands part of the purchase money and expressly or impliedly agreeing to pay the amount to Jamna Das, the respondent became personally liable. In our opinion this contention is not sound. Jamna Das was no party to the contract between Mt. Lakhpati Kuar and Pandit Ramautar Pande. No Indian or English case has been cited to us in which it has been ever held or suggested that the transferee of the equity of redemption in mortgaged property becomes personally liable to the mortgagee."

The case was carried in appeal to the Privy Council and the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council is reported in Jamna Das v. Ramautar Pande (12) and the decision of the Allahabad High Court was upheld. Lord Macnaghten observed

"This is a perfectly plain case. The action is brought by a mortgagee to enforce against a purchaser of the mortgaged property an undertaking that he entered into with his vendor. The mortgagee has no right to avail himself of that. He was no party to the sale. The purchaser entered into no contract with him, and the purchaser is not personally bound to pay this mortgage-debt."

In Itti Panku Menon v. Dharman Achan (2), the question arose as to a third party's right to sue on a contract. Sir John Wallis, C. J., and Bakewell, J., were of opinion that a jenmi was not entitled to sue on an assignment by a melkanomdar to a kanomdar whereby is between them the kanomdar agreed to pay the rent due by the melkanomdar to the jenmi. The case arose out of a difference of opinion between Abdur Rahim and Phillips, JJ. Phillips, J. held that the jenmi can sue whereas Abdur Rahim, J. differed. Wallis, C. J., observed:

"One of the questions argued before us was whether the plaintiff is entitled to sue on this contract made between defendant 1 and defendant 2. As regards this I agree with Abdur Rahim, J., that he cannot, and that the question is concluded by the recent decision of the Privy Council in Jamna Das v. Ramautar Pande (12) where Lord Macnaghten in delivering their Lordship's judgment held that a purchaser's contract with his vendor to pay off a mortgage on the property sold could not be enforced by the mortgagee."

Then the learned Chief Justice refers to Khwaja Muhammad Khan v. Husaini Begam (13) and distinguishes the case on the ground that it was a contract made by a guardian for the benefit of a minor in contemplation of her marriage.

The question has been elaborately considered by Ayling and Tyabji, JJ., in Iswaram Pillai v. S. V. Taragan (14). That was a case where A mortgaged his lands to B and part of the consideration was B's promise to discharge a debt of A to C. C sued B and it was held that C who was a stranger to the contract cannot sue B for the payment of his debt without joining A as a party. The learned Judges deal exhaustively with the cases and lay down the general rule of law to be that a party who is a stranger to a contract cannot sue on the contract. The exceptions which the learned Judges enunciate are (a) the creation of a trust in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the amount sued for; (b) the creation of a charge on immovable property by the promisor or allocation by the promisor of the specific money in suit in favour of the plaintiff; (c) the creation of a settlement on marriage in which the plaintiff may be beneficially entitled as provided by S. 23, Specific Relief Act and (d) estoppel as against the promiser owing to transactions between the plaintiff and the promisor.

This question again arose in C. S. No. 325 of 1926 on the original side of the High Court. Beasley, J., after an exhaustive review of the authorities came to the conclusion that a second mortgagee who retained in his hands sufficient portion of the consideration to discharge the first mortgage and who does not discharge the first mortgage cannot be sued by the first mortgagee on the covenant between the mortgagor and the second mortgagee. This case was carried in appeal (O. S. A. No. 95 of 1927) where Coutts Trotter, C. J. and Walsh, J., upheld the decision of Beasley, J. The learned Judges observed,

"The learned Judge held that as there was no privity between the plaintiff and defendant 3 with regard to the mortgage Ex. (1), the plaintiff could not claim any benefit under it. . . ."

The point of law has been fully discussed by the learned Judge and he has considered all the important authorities. It is not disputed as a general rule of law that only those who are parties to a contract can sue on it. The Privy Council decision in Jamna Das v. Ramautar Pande (12) and in Nanku Prasad Singh v. Kamta Prasad Singh (15) are conclusive that the reservation of part of the purchase money to pay a previous mortgagee does not of itself create a trust in favour of that previous mortgagee nor can the prior mortgage make the purchaser personally liable. The case of such a reservation in a mortgage is indistinguishable from its reservation in a sale deed. This decision was given on 1st May this year. In view of this decision of Beasley, J., which was confirmed in appeal we think we may take it as settled law in Madras that a stranger to a contract cannot without more sue to enforce it. It is unnecessary therefore to refer with detail to cases in Madras which took the opposite view. This view was based upon a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Khwaja Muhammad Khan v. Husaini Begam (13). In that case there was an arrangement made between the defendant and the father of the plaintiff who was then a minor on the occasion and in consideration of her marriage with the defendant's son who was also a minor that a certain sum should be paid to the plaintiff for her betel nut expenses, etc., from the date of the marriage. A suit was filed to recover the arrest of allowance and the contention was that the plaintiff being a stranger to the contract could not sue on it, and reliance was placed on Tweddle v. Atkinson (1). Their Lordships of the Privy Council distinguished the case and said that the rule in Tweddle v. Atkinson (1) had no application to the circumstances of the case which they were trying in which the agreement specifically charged immovable property for the payment of the allowance and the plaintiff was the only person beneficially entitled under it. Their Lordships pointed out that in India where marriages were arranged during minority and contracts for the benefits of the minors were entered into by parents and guardians, it would cause serious injustice if the strict rule of English law were applied. Their Lordships in dealing with the contention based on the rule laid down in Tweddle v. Atkinson (1), observed :
